The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida moves that the House adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DYER and Mr. McARTHUR asked for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 29.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking this vote on adjournment by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Fifteen Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the House stands adjourned until Friday at noon.

Thereupon (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, under the previous order, until Friday, September 21, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, September 20, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we would take no steps in our preparation for national defense and for the carrying out of our plans of government without Thy guidance and Thy blessing. We come before Thee this morning lifting up our hearts to Thee, praying Thee to look upon us with Thine infinite tenderness and love. Bless us in our divine enterprise. We are standing as a Nation with the ideals that are born in our hearts out of Thy Holy Word and we pray Thee to grant us the strength, the courage, the patience, the divine passion that will carry us forward speedily to a successful issue. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2830) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5901) to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war to extend additional credit to foreign Governments, and for other purposes; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate to the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HULL of Tennessee, Mr. GARNER, and Mr. GREEN of Iowa managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River with an amendment in which the House requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5949) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SENATOR GALLINGER'S COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair presents a communication from the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the communication, as follows:

CONCORD, N. H., September 20, 1917.

The VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.:

My attention having been called to the fact that my name, as well as that of many other public men, is being used in connection with a certain paper found in the possession of one Gaston Means I wish to say that if anyone thinks it of sufficient importance to have the matter investigated I trust that the Senate will take prompt action to look into it. I know nothing whatever that can possibly throw light on the subject, but nevertheless will court an investigation if one is thought necessary or desirable. Please have this read in open Senate.

J. H. GALLINGER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a telegram, which will be inserted in the RECORD.

The telegram is as follows:

KANSAS CITY, KANS., September 19, 1917.

HON. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Washington, D. C.:

Delegates from every State in the Union representing 50,000 boiler makers and iron-ship builders in convention assembled wish to protest against the proposed establishment of the zone system for second-class mail matter and the proposed increases in this class of mail and respectfully petition our Congressmen and Senators to defeat this measure.

J. A. FRANKLIN,
International President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication, which will be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The communication is as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, September 18, 1917.

To the VICE PRESIDENT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: At a meeting held at the First Swedish Baptist Church of Brooklyn on the 14th instant, called for the purpose of permitting

American citizens of Swedish birth and descent to voice their loyalty to the country of their adoption and attended by about 175 representatives of Swedish churches and societies with a membership of approximately 20,000 and by representative business and professional men, the enclosed address to the American people was unanimously adopted, and it was resolved that a copy of the same be sent to you as presiding officer of the United States Senate.

The meeting was held on very short notice, but notwithstanding this there were present representatives from the 65 societies and associations which compose the United Swedish Societies of Greater New York, and from the 35 Swedish churches of different denominations which exist in the same territory, as well as from many other associations and societies.

It was further determined to call a meeting to be held in the city of New York as soon as it can be arranged to enable the thousands of citizens of Swedish birth or descent to bear witness of the loyalty they feel toward the United States—a loyalty which never has been questioned.

The meeting was concluded with a prayer for the President and people of the United States and by the singing of "America."

Very respectfully,

AXEL JOSEPHSSON, Secretary.

ADDRESS TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE, ADOPTED AT A SPECIAL MEETING OF REPRESENTATIVES OF SWEDISH CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES AND BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL MEN HELD AT BROOKLYN, N. Y., ON THE 14TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER, 1917.

The authorized publication of certain messages from the German chargé d'affaires at Buenos Aires and letter from the German minister in Mexico, forwarded through the medium of Swedish legations, has caused a feeling of profound concern among us, who are citizens of the United States of Swedish birth or parentage, which feeling has become more pronounced as it has become apparent that the publication of such messages has directed unfavorable attention to us and has caused, in some quarters, feelings of distrust regarding our loyalty to this country.

The Swedes have always been liberty loving. They were American in spirit before they left Sweden and on their arrival here they became a part of the country with astonishing rapidity. Their history from the commencement of immigration indicates as great fidelity to their adopted country as is possessed by the native born. The roll of heroes of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War is punctuated with the names of thousands of Swedes, who willingly gave their lives and their services for liberty and for this country. In the making of its history, in the breaking of the wilderness from the Alleghenies to the Pacific coast, the Swedes have given themselves unsparingly, with no other thought than the upbuilding of this country, where freedom more fully conformed to their ideals than anywhere else and where opportunities for material, intellectual, and social advancement are constantly beckoning them on. Through industry and intelligently applied effort they have prospered and have become thoroughly amalgamated with the people of the United States and have become useful members of society. They have willingly performed the laborious work devolving upon them. They have entered the engineering and construction fields and have contributed largely toward the advancement of science. They have entered business and have built up magnificent commercial and manufacturing enterprises. They have cleared the forests and tilled the fields of our great West. They have brought with them the culture and the training of their schools and have contributed materially to the upbuilding of our great institutions of learning. They have taken part in the political life of our country and have filled with distinction offices of trust in the various States and in the Nation.

In the present world conflict they stand firmly on the side of the United States. They have given freely of their best manhood through voluntary enlistment in the recruiting of its armies for democracy and against autocracy. They have given freely of their treasure, as is indicated by the fact that one Swedish-American bank has purchased for itself and its customers, who are in the main of Swedish extraction, more than $2,000,000 of liberty-loan bonds. We refer proudly to all of the foregoing and urge the same as unassailable proof of our loyalty.

But as our loyalty may be questioned, an expression from us seems to be called for; and we, the pastors of the Swedish churches of Greater New York, representatives of the various Swedish societies and institutions of Greater New York, and business and professional men, representing in thought and feeling the thousands of our citizens, who were born in Sweden or who were born in the United States of Swedish parents, hereby affirm our unwavering and undivided loyalty to the United States. This is our country and we owe allegiance to none other. Our homes, our families, our hearts, and all our interests are here, and we stand ready to defend that which is ours, no matter what the cost. But more than that, we believe in the principles so eloquently enunciated by the President of the United States that "the world must be made safe for democracy." That principle is our confession of faith, and we will make any sacrifice, however great, that it may be achieved. To that end we have pledged our support to the President of the United States without limit or restriction and have given our fathers, our brothers, and our sons, who have gone across the Atlantic or have mobilized in the United States. They have offered their lives for the cause they have espoused and we will support them to the limit of our resources. In the belief that what we have done and are doing entitles us to the confidence of every true American, we renew our pledge of allegiance and affirm our loyalty to the United States.

CHARLES K. JOHANSEN, Chairman,
AXEL JOSEPHSSON, Secretary,
GUST HARALDSTADT, Assistant Secretary,
CHARLES A. OGBEN,
CHAS. RESALESTON,
Committee.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Santa Clara County Woman's Committee of State and National Defense, of San Jose, Cal., praying for the passage of the so-called soldiers' and sailors' insurance bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Occidental Lodge, No. 2484, Grand United Order of Odd Fellows, of Oakland, Cal., praying for a congressional investigation of the East St. Louis riot, which was ordered to lie on the table.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4897) to amend section 10 of the national-defense act, approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 131) thereon.

WACCAMAW RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 2878) granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Wacamaw River, and I submit a report (No. 132) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, in line 6, before the word "River," to strike out the name "Wacamaw" and insert "Waccamaw," and in line 10, before the word "construction," to insert "the," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Whiteville Lumber Co. and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Waccamaw River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Pireway Ferry, in the counties of Columbus and Brunswick, in the State of North Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River."

REPORTS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that I may be indulged for a few moments to present certain reports from the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be received.

A bill (S. 2899) granting an increase of pension to Charles Woodall; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 2900) granting a pension to Maurice T. Comstock (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN MILITARY-SERVICE ACT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD what is known as the Canadian military-service act of 1917, which was assented to August 29, 1917. It is the selective-draft act of Canada. I endeavored to get it some time ago, and only a day or two ago the law librarian, Mr. Thompson, of the legislative reference service of the Library of Congress, furnished me with a copy, taken from an authenticated copy of the law. It is a matter of such general importance that I thought it ought to be printed. It is largely, I think, taken from the selective-draft act in this country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think there will likely be quite a demand for copies of that act, and I should like to have it printed also as a public document. It will be in much more mailable shape. I know the view of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] as to printing matter both in the RECORD and as a public document, but this is such an important matter concerning the war that I think it ought to be printed as a public document.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should be very glad to have that done, Mr. President. I think, however, if the Senator will wait a few days, I shall be able to have printed in parallel columns the selective-draft act of this country and that of Canada as well.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That would be more useful, and I withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If I do not obtain that matter, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I shall be glad to see his request complied with.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CANADA—MILITARY SERVICE ACT, 1917.

An act respecting military service.

Whereas by section 10 of the militia act, chapter 41 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, it is enacted as follows:

"All the male inhabitants of Canada, of the age of 18 years and upwards, and under 60, not exempt or disqualified by law, and being British subjects, shall be liable to service in the militia: Provided, That the Governor General may require all the male inhabitants of Canada capable of bearing arms to serve in the case of a levée en masse."

And whereas by section 69, of the said act, it is further enacted as follows:

"The governor in council may place the militia, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada, and also beyond Canada, for the defense thereof at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency."

And whereas by the said act it is further enacted that if at any time enough men do not volunteer to complete the quota required the men so liable to serve shall be drafted by ballot; and

Whereas to maintain and support the Canadian expeditionary force now engaged in active service overseas for the defense and security of Canada, the preservation of the Empire and of human liberty, it is necessary to provide reinforcements for such expeditionary force; and Whereas enough men do not volunteer to provide such reinforcements; and

Whereas, by reason of the large number of men who have already left agricultural and industrial pursuits in Canada to join such expeditionary force as volunteers, and of the necessity of sustaining under such conditions the productivity of the Dominion, it is expedient to secure the men still required, not by ballot as provided in the militia act, but by selective draft; therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. (1) This act may be cited as the military-service act, 1917.

(2) In this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

"Certificate" means a certificate of exemption from military service under this act.

"The militia act" means the militia act and all regulations and orders made under the authority thereof.

"The army act" means the army act for the time being in force in the United Kingdom and all regulations and orders made under the authority thereof.

"Regulations" means regulations made by the governor in council under the authority of this act and directions made under such regulations.

"Minister" means the minister of justice.

"Tribunal" means a tribunal constituted under this act.

2. (1) Every male British subject who comes within one of the classes described in section 3 of this act, and who, (a) is ordinarily resident in Canada; or (b) has been at any time since the 4th day of August, 1914, resident in Canada, shall be liable to be called out as hereinafter provided on active service in the Canadian expeditionary force for the defense of Canada, either in or beyond Canada, unless he (a) comes within the exceptions set out in the schedule; or (b) reaches the age of 45 before the class or subclass to which he belongs, as described in section 3 is called out.

Such service shall be for the duration of the present war and of demobilization after the conclusion of the war.

(2) Nothing in this act shall prevent any man from voluntarily enlisting in the Canadian expeditionary force, so long as voluntary enlistments in such force is authorized.

3. (1) The men who are liable to be called out shall consist of six classes, described as follows:

Class 1. Those who have attained the age of 20 years and were born not earlier than the year 1883, and are unmarried or are widowers but have no child.

Class 2. Those who have attained the age of 20 years and were born not earlier than the year 1883, and are married or are widowers who have a child or children.

Class 3. Those who were born in the years 1876 to 1882, both inclusive, and are unmarried or are widowers who have no child.

Class 4. Those who were born in the years 1876 to 1882, both inclusive, and are married or are widowers who have a child or children.

Class 5. Those who were born in the years 1872 to 1875, both inclusive, and are unmarried or are widowers who have no child.

Class 6. Those who were born in the years 1872 to 1875, both inclusive, and are married or are widowers who have a child or children.

(2) For the purposes of this section any man married after the 6th day of July, 1917, shall be deemed to be unmarried.

(3) Any class except class 1 shall include men who are transferred thereto from another class as hereinafter provided, and men who have come within class 1 since the previous class was called out.

4. (1) The governor in council may from time to time by proclamation call out on active service as aforesaid for the defense of Canada, either in Canada or beyond Canada, any class or subclass of men described in section 3, and all men within the class or subclass so called out shall from the date of such proclamation be deemed to be soldiers enlisted in the military forces of Canada and subject to military law for the duration of the present war and of demobilization thereafter, save as hereinafter provided.

(2) Men so called out shall report and shall be placed on active service in the Canadian expeditionary force as may be set out in such proclamation or in regulations but until so placed on active service shall be deemed to be on leave of absence without pay.

(3) Any man by or in respect of whom an application for exemption is made as hereinafter provided shall, so long as such application or any appeal in connection therewith is pending and during the currency of any exemption granted him, be deemed to be on leave of absence without pay.

(4) Any man who is called out and who, without reasonable excuse, fails to report as aforesaid, shall be guilty of an offense and shall be liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for any term not exceeding five years with hard labor.

5. (1) There shall be established in the manner hereinafter set out the following tribunals:

(a) Local tribunals.

(b) Appeal tribunals.

(c) A central appeal judge.

(2) Any tribunal may hear evidence on oath or otherwise, as it may deem expedient, and for the performance of its duties shall have all the powers vested in a commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries act.

(3) The governor in council may, upon the recommendation of the central appeal judge, make regulations with respect to the establishment, constitution, functions, and procedure of the said tribunals and such regulations may contain provisions for securing uniformity in the application of this act.

(4) In so far as provision is not otherwise made, the procedure of the tribunal shall be such as is determined by the tribunal.

(5) No member of any tribunal shall be responsible at law for anything done by him in good faith in the performance of his duties under this act, and no action shall be taken against any member of a local tribunal or an appeal tribunal in respect of the performance or non-performance of his duties under this act, except with the written consent of the central appeal judge.

(6) No proceeding authorized or pending before any tribunal, and no decision of any tribunal, shall by means of an injunction, prohibition, mandamus, certiorari, habeas corpus, or other process, whether of the like kind or otherwise, issuing out of any court, be enjoined, restrained, stayed, removed, or subjected to review or consideration, upon any ground whether arising out of alleged absence of jurisdiction in the tribunal, nullity, defect, or irregularity of the proceedings or any other cause whatsoever nor shall any such proceeding or decision be questioned, reviewed, or considered collaterally in any action or proceeding, civil or criminal.

LOCAL TRIBUNALS.

6. (1) The minister may from time to time, by proclamation or otherwise, establish local tribunals at such places as he deems necessary, and give each an appropriate designation.

(2) The minister may, after a local tribunal is established, order, by proclamation or otherwise, the removal of such local tribunal from place to place within the same province.

(3) Each local tribunal shall consist of two members. One member shall be appointed by a board of selection to be established by joint resolution of the senate and house of commons; the other member shall be appointed by the following authority:

1. In those provinces in which there are county courts or district courts the county court judge or district court judge, or, if more than one, the senior judge for the county or district in which the local tribunal is established, or when the place at which a local tribunal is to be established is not within the territorial limits of any county court or district court, then by such judge as may be determined by the minister.

The judge making the appointment may appoint himself or any other judge having jurisdiction in the county or district.

For the purposes of this section "county court judge" or "district court judge" includes any deputy judge authorized by law to act for the time being for any such judge, and also includes any acting judge so authorized.

II. In the Province of Quebec:

(a) In the judicial districts of Montreal and Quebec any judge of the superior court of the Province of Quebec who is authorized by the chief justice of the said court or authorized by the judge appointed to perform the duties of chief justice in the judicial district.

(b) In the other judicial districts the judge of the superior court of the Province of Quebec assigned to the judicial district within which the local tribunal is established.

III. In the Yukon Territory:

The judge of the territorial court or the person appointed under the provisions of the Yukon act to act in place of such judge; and

IV. In the northwest territories:

The commissioner of the royal northwest mounted police—

(4) (a) The names and addresses of all persons appointed on a local tribunal shall, as may be provided by regulations, be communicated to the minister.

(b) The minister may by telegraph or otherwise appoint one or both members, as the case may be, of any local tribunal if he has not received, within such period before the tribunal is to sit as may be fixed by regulation, the names and addresses of members duly appointed.

(c) Any vacancy occurring shall be filled by the authority who appointed the member vacating, and if not so filled or if communication of same as aforesaid has not been received by the minister within such period as may be fixed by regulation, the minister may fill such vacancy.

(5) Each member of a local tribunal shall, unless he be a judge, make oath or affirmation that he will faithfully and impartially perform his duties as such member. Such oath or affirmation may be made before a judge, a justice of the peace, a commissioner for taking affidavits, or before such other person as in any special case the minister may direct.

(6) Any person duly appointed a member of a local tribunal shall, unless relieved in writing by the authority appointing him, perform his duties as such member, and any person who, without reasonable excuse, fails so to do shall be guilty of an offense and liable to summary conviction to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years and not less than three months.

(7) Each local tribunal shall hear and decide applications for certificates of exemption made to such tribunal as provided in section 11.

APPEAL TRIBUNALS.

7. (1) The chief justice of the court of last resort in each Province, or in case of his absence or failure to act, then a judge of that court designated by the minister, shall establish for such Province a sufficient number of appeal tribunals, and shall assign to each such tribunal in the Province of Quebec one judge of the court of king's bench or superior court of said Province, and in the other Provinces one judge of any court of such Province, and shall distribute among such tribunals all appeals from and cases stated under subsection 2 of section 10 by local tribunals of which the registrar has notice, and such appeal tribunals shall severally hear and decide the same: Provided, That appeals from a local tribunal on which sits one or more judges shall be heard and decided by an appeal tribunal constituted of a judge of a higher court.

(2) The judge of the territorial court or the person appointed in the place of the said judge, under the provisions of the Yukon act, shall constitute the appeal tribunal for the Yukon territory.

FINAL TRIBUNAL.

8. The governor in council may appoint one of the judges of the supreme court of Canada to be the central appeal judge.

REGISTRARS.

9. A registrar for each Province may be appointed by the governor in council.

APPEALS.

10. (1) Any person aggrieved by the decision of a local tribunal and any person authorized by the minister of militia and defense may appeal against any such decision.

(2) If the two members of a local tribunal can not agree as to any decision to be made by them, they shall forthwith state in writing the case to be decided and cause the statement to be sent to the registrar for the Province in which the tribunal is established.

(3) (a) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (b) of this subsection, there shall be an appeal from any appeal tribunal to the central appeal judge.

(b) The governor in council, on the recommendation of the central appeal judge, may make regulations governing the right to and fixing the conditions of appeal from an appeal tribunal to the central appeal judge.

(4) The central appeal judge shall be the tribunal of last resort, and the governor in council may, on his recommendation, appoint one or more other judges of any superior court to assist the said central appeal judge in the discharge of his duties and define their powers.

EXEMPTIONS.

11. (1) At any time before a date to be fixed in the proclamation mentioned in section 4, an application may be made, by or in respect of any man in the class or subclass called out by such proclamation, to a local tribunal established in the Province in which such man ordinarily resides, for a certificate of exemption on any of the following grounds:

(a) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in military service, be engaged in other work in which he is habitually engaged;

(b) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in military service, be engaged in other work in which he wishes to be engaged and for which he has special qualifications;

(c) That it is expedient in the national interest that, instead of being employed in military service, he should continue to be educated or trained for any work for which he is then being educated or trained;

(d) That serious hardship would ensue if the man were placed on active service owing to his exceptional financial or business obligations or domestic position;

(e) Ill health or infirmity;

(f) That he conscientiously objects to the undertaking of combatant service and is prohibited from so doing by the tenets and articles of faith in effect on the 6th day of July, 1917, of any organized religious denomination existing and well recognized in Canada at such date and to which he in good faith belongs;

And if any of the grounds of such application be established, a certificate of exemption shall be granted to such man.

(2) (a) A certificate may be conditional as to time or otherwise, and if granted solely on conscientious grounds shall state that such exemption is from combatant service only.

(b) A certificate granted on the ground of the continuance of education or training, or on the ground of exceptional financial or business obligations or domestic position, shall be a conditional certificate only.

(c) No certificate shall be conditional upon a person to whom it is granted continuing in or entering into employment under any specified employer or in any specified place or establishment.

(d) A certificate may transfer a man to the class next in numerical order.

(e) When a conditional certificate is granted the conditions shall be stated on the certificate.

(f) It shall be the duty of any man holding a conditional certificate within three days after the conditions stated therein cease to exist, or after his exemption terminates, to give notice in writing of such fact to the registrar of the Province in which he ordinarily resides, and if he fails without reasonable excuse to do so, he shall be guilty of an offense and liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding $250.

(3) (a) Subject to such conditions as to application and notice as may be provided by regulations and subject also to paragraph (b) of this subsection, a certificate may, during the currency thereof, be renewed, varied, or withdrawn at any time by the local tribunal issuing the same.

(5) (a) Any man who, having applied to any local tribunal for the issue to him of a certificate, applies without the leave of the minister to any other local tribunal for a certificate, and any person who, knowing or having reason to believe that an application for a certificate has been made or is being made by or in respect of a man to a local tribunal, makes or aids or abets in the making or establishing of an application without such leave by or in respect of such man to another local tribunal, shall be guilty of an offense and shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty of not less than $100 and not more than $1,000.

(b) All applications and all proceedings taken on applications for certificates, made without the leave of the minister, by or in respect of a man before a local tribunal other than the local tribunal before which the first application by or in respect of such man was made, shall be null and void.

(c) Notwithstanding anything in this section contained, the governor in council may by regulations abolish any local tribunal and transfer its duties and powers to any other local tribunal.

(6) Any person who alters or tampers with a certificate or, for the purpose of evading this act, falsely represents himself to be a person to whom a certificate has been granted, or, if granted a certificate, allows, for like purpose, any other person to have possession thereof, shall be guilty of an offense and liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months.

(7) When a certificate is lost, destroyed, or defaced, the tribunal by whom it was granted shall, upon the application of the man to whom it was granted, and upon payment of a fee of 50 cents, issue to him a duplicate of such certificate.

REGULATIONS.

12. (1) The governor in council may make regulations to secure the full, effective, and expeditious operation and enforcement of this act, and in particular, but not to limit the generality of the foregoing, may—

(a) Define the duties of registrars and fix their remuneration;

(b) Authorize officers and tribunals to give directions not inconsistent with this act;

(c) On the recommendation of the central appeal judge prescribe the conditions as to time or otherwise under which applications for certificates may be made, deferred applications received, appeals entered and heard and rehearings had, and prescribe forms;

(d) Prescribe for the keeping and transmission of records;

(e) Appoint such peace officers or other officers and give them such powers and impose on them such duties as may be deemed necessary;

(f) Make provision for expenses and the remuneration of officers;

(g) Prescribe penalties for peace officers or other officers appointed under the authority of this act, who are convicted of neglect or refusal to perform duty without reasonable excuse.

(2) All proclamations and regulations shall be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette and in such other manner, if any, as the governor in council may think necessary to insure knowledge thereof by all persons concerned, and shall forthwith be laid before Parliament if then in session, and if not in session within 10 days after the next meeting thereof.

(3) All regulations shall have the same force and effect as if they formed part of this act.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

13. (1) The militia act, the army act, and the King's regulations and orders for the army shall, so far as not inconsistent therewith, apply to and form part of this act.

(2) Section 12 and subsection 2 of section 40 and the proviso to section 45 of the militia act shall not apply to men liable to be called out under this act.

(3) The minister of militia and defense may transfer to the naval service any man who has reported for duty under the provisions of this act.

(4) Unless further authorized by Parliament the reinforcements provided under this act shall not exceed 100,000 men.

(5) Nothing in this act contained shall be held to limit or affect the punishment provided by any other act or law for the offense of assisting the enemy nor the powers of the governor in council under the war-measures act, 1914.

14. If in any prosecution under this act any question shall arise in respect of the matters hereinafter mentioned, the burden of proof shall be upon the person charged to establish by satisfactory evidence—

(a) That he does not come within any specified class called out.

(b) That he has duly reported in accordance with section 4.

(c) That he comes within any of the exceptions set out in the schedule hereto.

(d) That he has been duly exempted under section 11.

And in the absence of such evidence the contrary shall be conclusively presumed.

15. (1) Every man within the classes described in section 3 shall, after his class or subclass is required to report, as provided in section 4, whenever required by a peace officer or by any person who has authority for the purpose, produce his certificate, if he has one, and shall answer truthfully all inquiries bearing on the question of his compliance or noncompliance with any provision of this act.

(2) Any such man who fails to comply with this section shall, in respect of each failure, be guilty of an offense, and liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding $100 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year.

16. (1) Any person who comes within any of the classes set out in section 3, and who contravenes any of the provisions of this act or of regulations for which contravention no other penalty is herein provided, shall be guilty of an offense, and shall be liable upon summary conviction to a penalty of not less than $10 nor more than $500 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

(2) Any person who by means of any written or printed communication, publication, or article, or by any oral communication or by any public speech or utterance

(a) Advises or urges that men described in section 3 shall contravene this act or regulations; or

(3) Any newspaper, book, periodical, pamphlet, or printed publication containing matter prohibited by subsection 2 of this section may, whether the printer or publisher thereof be previously convicted or not, be summarily suppressed and further printing or publication thereof and of any future issue of a newspaper or periodical which has contained such matter may be prohibited for any term not exceeding the duration of the present war: Provided, No action shall be taken under this subsection or under subsection 2 of this section without the approval of the central appeal judge.

(4) No conviction in a court of criminal jurisdiction for an offense against this act or the regulations made thereunder shall be had unless the prosecution has been consented to or approved by the attorney general of Canada.

17. All expenditure under or for the purposes of this act shall be paid out of such moneys as Parliament may appropriate for the purpose.

SCHEDULE—EXCEPTIONS.

1. Men who hold a certificate granted under this act and in force other than a certificate of exemption from combatant service only.

2. Members of His Majesty's regular, or reserve, or auxiliary forces, as defined by the army act.

3. Members of the military forces raised by the governments of any of His Majesty's other dominions or by the Government of India.

4. Men serving in the royal navy or in the royal marines, or in the naval service of Canada, and members of the Canadian expeditionary force.

5. Men who have since August 4, 1914, served in the military or naval forces of Great Britain or her allies in any theater of actual war and have been honorably discharged therefrom.

6. Clergy, including members of any recognized order of an exclusively religious character, and ministers of all religious denominations existing in Canada at the date of the passing of this act.

7. Those persons exempted from military service by order in council of August 13, 1873, and by order in council of December 6, 1898.

RELIEF FROM ASSESSMENT WORK.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to invite the attention of the Senate, and particularly of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to a telegram which I have just received from Hon. Perley L. Williams, chairman of the district military board of the State of Utah. I ask that the telegram be read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the telegram.

The Secretary read as follows:

SALT LAKE, UTAH, September 19, 1917.

Senator WM. H. KING,
Washington, D. C.:

In a large number of cases of men held to service by this district board there has been revealed a condition of indebtedness of a serious nature to the individual suddenly taken from his business. A large number of men who were squatters upon public land are affected; a large number of men developing mining claims are affected, because no provision has been made by the Government to protect their interest. These men entered the service unduly worried and can not respond as they should. This board feels keenly this situation and regrets that in the exercise of its duty no consideration could be given such conditions, and now most respectfully and emphatically urges that Congress enact protective legislation covering such cases of men ordered to service, and asks your best efforts to bring about such legislation before adjournment. Because of its close knowledge of these facts this board feels such legislation is vital to the proper morale of the new Army.

DISTRICT BOARD OF THE STATE OF UTAH,
By P. L. WILLIAMS, Chairman,
LAFAYETTE HANCHETT, Secretary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word in connection with the telegram to which attention has been invited. The Senators from the West appreciate the very great importance of the questions referred to in the telegram just read. There are thousands of men in the West who have entered the Army or the Navy since the war began who have entered, under the homestead and other laws of the United States, tracts of land. There are also thousands who are locators upon the mineral lands of the United States. The mineral as well as the general land laws require that certain steps shall be taken in order to perfect title and in order to preserve legal possession of the property. As stated by Mr. Williams, who is a man of integrity and of great ability, and who has a thorough knowledge of the situation in the West, some additional legislation is required to fully protect the valiant men who have offered themselves in defense of our country and its institutions. By the 1st day of January the assessment work will have to be done upon all unpatented mining claims. However, I think the rights of those engaged in the military or naval service of the United States have been protected by a recent resolution passed by Congress.

Mr. SHAFROTH rose.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from Utah that we have passed a law which exempts from assessment work all those who have enlisted in the Army, and we have also passed a law providing that service in the Army shall constitute the equivalent of residence upon a homestead. So far as those two points are concerned their rights are protected, but it may be that there are some other rights that ought also to be protected. A bill has just passed the Senate and is pending in the House of Representatives, and they are endeavoring to pass it there, by which assessment work shall be waived as to all persons who will do other productive work, so as to keep the miners in the mines who are producing ore instead of having them do dead work, as it is called, in the way of assessment work upon new mining claims.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator from Colorado give any assurance that the bill which has passed the Senate will be passed by the other House?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that I have seen the leader, Mr. KITCHIN, who says he will authorize the chairman of the committee to call it up. I have seen the chairman of the committee and he said he would call it up. The Interior Department is thoroughly in sympathy with the matter. There are some amendments, though, that have changed it a little, but something in the nature of relief will be given.

Mr. KING. The cases that I have instanced are not the only ones that ought to be protected by appropriate legislation. The act with reference to homesteads, referred to by the Senator, is not broad enough, I fear, to fully protect our soldiers and sailors who have rights inchoate and titles incomplete to parcels of the public domain.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. KING. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will state to the Senator that I introduced in the Senate a few days ago a bill for the protection of civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments who are engaged in the present war. It is in the nature of a general stay bill enlarging the previous laws which have been enacted in some of the States but more general in its terms. I think, taken in connection with the measure to which the Senator from Colorado refers, it covers everything.

Mr. KING. I hope that some comprehensive measure will be reported that will afford the fullest protection to those who are called upon to make such great sacrifices for the Nation. It was for the purpose of challenging attention to the general question of legislation of this character that I had the telegram read. I talked with officials of the War Department this morning, and they expressed great interest in respect to the bill to which the Senator from Oregon has just referred. I sincerely hope that the committee of which he is chairman, if the bill is before that committee, will report it at the earliest possible moment. I do not mean to say in advance that I shall support the bill referred to in all of its details. Not knowing the terms and provisions of the bill, except as just stated by the Senator from Oregon, I am unable to determine whether it is sufficient to meet all conditions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Utah. The bill the Senator speaks of is before the Judiciary Committee and has been referred to a subcommittee, of which I have the honor to be one. I have no doubt the members of the subcommittee will be glad to have the assistance of Senators like the Senator from Utah, who is a very able lawyer, in considering the questions that are raised by that bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that as chairman of the subcommittee a meeting has been called for Saturday morning, and some able lawyers will appear before the subcommittee on that occasion to argue the constitutionality of such a bill and other matters pertaining to it. It was in response to that request that I called a meeting for Saturday morning at half past 10, and we will then give the lawyers a hearing.

Mr. REED. The lawyers are all on one side?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think they are all on one side, in support of legislation on the subject.

Mr. KING. Are they for or against the bill, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. OVERMAN. The lawyers who will appear before the subcommittee favor the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. That is all right. But the other side should be presented.

Mr. REED. The question I wanted to raise is this: I wish to say in the first place that I am in most hearty sympathy with all efforts that can be properly made to relieve the men who are being sent to the front. The bill is characterized by an earnest effort in that direction. There are certain things that, of course, the Government can do. It is undoubted that the Government can give relief in the character of cases that have just been referred to, because men entering on the Government land find their rights are prescribed by Federal statutes, and we can change those statutes at will.

There is no question either in my mind that within reasonable bounds and limits as long as we do not impair the obligations of contracts and when we apply ourselves merely to the legal remedy we can in the Federal courts regulate the proceedings there. But there is in the bill a proposal to send to jail any officer of a State court, which would of course include the judges of a State court, who shall render a judgment against a soldier or sailor.

I repeat, I desire to go just as far as we can go in justice to relieve these men. I also want to emphasize the fact that if we go to a point where in seeking to relieve them we violate the fundamental law of the land we will do injury instead of good.

I am suggesting this point to the Senator from Utah, and I am suggesting it to all other Senators, and particularly to those who have had extensive experience in the law. I hope Senators may give the bill their consideration now, without waiting for a report of the committee, and that any Senator who has any suggestions along the legal phases involved will make them so that the subcommittee may have the benefit. I trust the chairman of the subcommittee will not think I am trenching upon his prerogatives in making the suggestion.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no; I am very glad to have the Senator do it. I realize that it is one of the most important bills before Congress.

Mr. REED. I confess myself to be seriously troubled over these problems, and I think they demand the best thought of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in reading the telegram carefully I notice that it refers to two classes of citizens who may be affected by being drafted into the Army. First, it says, "a large number of men who were squatters upon the public land are affected." I will say that on July 28, 1917, an act was approved for the relief of homestead entrymen or settlers who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war; also on August 7, 1917, an act for the protection of desert-land entrymen who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war. The second statement is that "a large number of men developing mining claims are affected, because no provision has been made by the Government to protect their interest." The joint resolution approved July 17, 1917, relieves the owners of mining claims who have been mustered into the military or naval service from performing assessment work during the term of such service. The Senate has also passed a bill exempting locators of mining claims from assessment work on certain conditions, even if not called into the Army.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that it extends further than that. Every man who has enlisted or who is called into the service does not have to pay a particle of attention to his assessment work, but simply has to file a statement of his claim under the laws for the preservation of his rights.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Colorado has just stated what I was going to state, and I shall therefore not repeat it. I have taken the question up with the members of the Public Lands Committee of the House, asking them to see that the bill passes this session of Congress. There has been a question as to whether the bill the Senate passed providing for the exemption of work upon mining claims would be passed in the House at this session. A week ago I was assured that every effort would be made to pass it before the present session of Congress comes to a close.

I suppose I have answered a thousand or more letters and telegrams upon this subject, which have come to me from all parts of the country. This matter is vital to locators of mining claims and the country generally, and legislation certainly should pass, and I believe it will pass before the close of this session.

Mr. President, if there was anything more the Senate could do to relieve the situation I am quite sure that the Public Lands Committee of the Senate would attend to it promptly. I know also that the Public Lands Committee of the other House entertain the same view. Therefore I feel quite sure and still hope that such legislation will be enacted.

Mr. KING. Apropos of the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], I desire to call his attention and the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the case of Stewart v. Kahn (11 Wall., 493), which discusses legislation that was passed during the period of the Civil War. This case was referred to by the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] in the address delivered by him recently before the Bar Association of the State of North Carolina. He uses this language:

Not only the rights of individuals but the rights of the States may be restricted in the exercise of the war power by Congress.

The right of a State to make laws regulating the procedure in its courts, and particularly to enact statutes of limitation, is recognized as fundamental in our system. Equally indisputable is the proposition that in normal times the Federal Government has no right to prescribe rules for the conduct of business in State courts, to enact statutes of limitation to be observed by them, or laws that operate to toll those the State commands its courts to observe. Yet the Supreme Court, in the case referred to, in an opinion assented to by all the judges, sanctioned an act of Congress passed in 1864, which provided that any statute of a State resisting the Federal authority by force of arms, to the contrary notwithstanding, no suit should be denied a recovery in its courts because of delay in bringing his action occasioned by conditions growing out of the state of war.

That there should be legislation in the nature of a general moratorium, for the protection of those who have been called into the military and naval service, seems clear to me. What power Congress has in the premises, and I am now speaking more particularly as to contractual obligations, is not beyond cavil. The decision just referred to goes much beyond the views of many as to the authority of the Federal Government to deal with these and cognate questions. It is not agreed by all lawyers that Congress may go into the States and repeal the statutes of limitation and modify or impair the obligations of private contracts even under its war powers.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to state that I am somewhat familiar with that case. The brief before us set forth that no legislation had been passed during the Civil War on either side interfering with the rights of the States in regard to civil process; but the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], by his diligence, found this case, and in a speech he made before the Bar Association at Asheville, N. C., he cited it. However, I think, Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will investigate the matter he will find a subsequent decision in which the Supreme Court of the United States rather expresses a doubt of the correctness of that decision. That decision was based upon a certain state of facts. In regard to matters concerning public lands, of course we have the power to act; but the question that I think should be considered is as to whether we can take charge of the courts of a State. I do not, however, believe there is a court in the United States—there was not one during the Civil War on either side—but that would protect the boys at the front without any legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram presented by the Senator from Utah will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WAR CREDITS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to report an agreement in conference between the conferees on the part of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 5901) to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the conference report? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5901) to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 18 and 21.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "one-fourth" inserted by said amendment insert "one-fifth"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That section 2 of an act of Congress approved February 4, 1910, entitled 'An act prescribing certain provisions and conditions under which bonds and certificates of indebtedness of the United States may be issued, and for other purposes,' is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any certificates of indebtedness hereafter issued shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States (but, in the case of certificates issued after September 1, 1917, only if and to the extent provided in connection with the issue thereof), as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority; and that a sum not exceeding one-tenth of 1 per cent of the amount of any certificates of indebtedness issued is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM J. STONE,
HOKE SMITH,
REED SMOOT,

CORDELL HULL,
JOHN N. GARNER,
WILLIAM R. GREEN,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, before acting upon the motion of the Senator from Missouri I should like to ask a question or two in reference to the conference report.

Mr. STONE. Very well.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I regret that public business required my absence from the Senate while this bill was under consideration last week. Had I been able to have been here I should have made some comments on the bill and should have asked that suggestions which I had in mind be considered. Of course I recognize that it is too late now for suggestions or recommendations to have any effect or receive consideration, but I do want to ask the chairman of the committee one or two questions relative to the appropriations carried in this bill.

There is a provision in the bill for the issuing of $4,000,000,000 of bonds, which money is to be loaned to foreign countries. I am disturbed, as I assume every other thinking man is, about the amounts of money we are appropriating for all kinds of purposes. Every messenger in Washington apparently is on his way to the Capitol with a message asking for additional money. What I am concerned about is what is to be done with this money. Is it to be expended wisely, and is there a concerted plan governing these expenditures, military and otherwise?

Take the item of $4,000,000,000, provided for in this bill to be loaned to foreign countries. What I want to ask the chairman of the committee is—and I do not expect him to make public the details of any particular plan—is he satisfied, from the testimony that was submitted to the Finance Committee, that there is a definite plan for the distribution of this money, and that that plan is to be followed? Furthermore, is he satisfied that this plan is for the best interests not only of this country but of the countries with which we are allied?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the policy that we have entered upon in Congress has been to extend loans to the entente allied nations. The Senator knows that several billion dollars of such loans have been already authorized by the act of April 24, 1917, and that $2,000,000,000 of that much larger authorization have already been offered for sale as "liberty bonds" to the people of this country, and that they have been disposed of.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, can the Senator from Missouri tell the Senate, without violating any secrecy which should be maintained, what has been the policy in the distribution of this money? Has it been done because somebody asked for it, or has there been a well worked out plan about what we should do in connection with the entente allies?

Mr. STONE. The only plan worked out, so far as I know, is that it has been deemed necessary by this Government—that is, by the President and the Congress—to extend loans to the entente allied Governments—that is, the Governments with whom we are associated in the conduct of the war. The Senator knows how these loans have been extended and how authorized. Does he desire me to go into that?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know how they are extended. I know that from time to time loans have been made by the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not expect the Senator to stand in his place on the floor and explain the details of any plan; but what I want to know is, is there a plan and is there a reason for every one of these advances which is made to a foreign country—a substantial reason, I will put it in that way.

Mr. STONE. Representatives of the various allied or entente Governments have been here in Washington in conference with the executive branch of the Government—that is, with the President and his immediate advisers—as to loans. We have authorized these executive agencies to make these loans—

Mr. WEEKS. And we have done so without any information—

Mr. STONE. To make loans, to establish credits here in America for these foreign Governments out of the proceeds of the sale of our bonds. That has been done. Somebody must do the work, as the Congress sanctioned the loans, with the approval, I assume, of the Senator—I am not saying that definitely as to the Senator—but certainly with a practically unanimous vote of both Houses; and therefore the Congress agreed to this form of doing this great business. We have authorized the President to make these loans, and we have not, as the Senator knows as well as I know, told him just how or to whom or in what amounts he should make the loans. That was left to him. He has loaned a certain amount to Great Britain, so much to France, so much to Italy, and so on. The Congress has had nothing to do with that. We told the President to attend to this. It has been the exercise of an executive function. Now, we propose here again to authorize an additional $4,000,000,000 by this bill, which, added to the undisposed of part of that authorized by the act of April 24 last, aggregates $7,000,000,000 to be loaned to the allies. How loaned? The President of the United States, acting in the first instance through the Secretary of the Treasury—but whatever is done is done by the order of the President—can make loans and establish credits with these various Governments out of these vast appropriations. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not expect the Senator to divulge any committee matter which should not be made public on the floor of the Senate; but what I ask him is, is he satisfied that there is a definite understanding and reason for every one of these loans made to foreign countries?

Mr. STONE. Why put it up to me as a personal matter? Mr. President, if the Senate committee and the House committee had not been satisfied, it must be assumed that these committees would not have favorably reported the bill; and it is further to be assumed that the House would not, in the first instance, or the Senate, in the second instance, have passed the bill. It is too late, Mr. President, to now bring up the policy of these loans. The Congress has determined upon the policy of making them; we have already authorized them to a very great extent by the act of April 24 last, and we are extending these authorizations by this bill. If the Senator is opposed to this policy, which I assume he is not; but if he is, it is too late now to raise the question unless he purposes to seek to reject the conference report and thus open the whole question again.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I have explained to the Senator why I am making this inquiry at this time. I am not opposed to anything that will promote the vigorous prosecution of this war, but I have some curiosity to know what is being done with the $21,000,000,000 which Congress is in one way or another appropriating for its prosecution. I am willing to stand on the judgment of the Senator from Missouri, and if he is satisfied that the method which is being followed in the loaning of this money is for the best interests of the prosecution of the war, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. STONE. I suggest that the Senator consult the President and the Secretary of the Treasury as to the manner in which this fund is being administered, without subjecting me to a cross-questioning.

Mr. WEEKS. May I ask the Senator one more question?

Mr. STONE. The policy being pursued has been agreed to by the Congress, and the Senator has participated in the legislation authorizing it.

Mr. WEEKS. That is true. Now, was there any testimony submitted to the committee relative to a plan of any kind in regard to the amount of money which should be loaned to any one country or to any several countries? In other words, what should be our terminal?

Mr. STONE. I think I may answer the question by saying that no defined plan was laid before the Finance Committee by any executive official of the Government appearing before the committee; and there were several such officials, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General being the two highest among them. No specific and definite plan was laid before the committee as to the amount of these authorizations which would be or should be appropriated as loans to one or another of these foreign Governments. There was no such plan presented.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the Senator think there is such a plan or such an agreement?

Mr. STONE. Let the Senator go to the executive department and find out. I can not answer him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

STOCK-GRAZING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration Senate bill 2776, Order of Business 117.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I do not care to object. The majority leader, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], has asked me to make a motion to adjourn when the morning business was concluded; but personally I have no objection to the bill referred to by the Senator from New Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is not closed yet.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I had an understanding with the majority leader on the day of our last adjournment that on to-day this measure might be taken up. I do not think it will require any extended discussion. It seems to me it might be passed in an hour or two, in any event, and I ask unanimous consent that we may take it up for consideration.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the title of the bill. I ask to have the title read.

Mr. HUSTING. I will state that I am going to object.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then I move to take up the bill for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is out of order at this time. The morning business is not concluded.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well.

THE MOBILIZING OF AMERICA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present a request by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing, with a view to having the matter printed as a public document, if the committee think it advisable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADDRESS BY HON. ELIHU ROOT.

MR. JAMES. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a speech by Hon. Elihu Root before the American Bar Association, in session at Saratoga this month, on "Russia and our part in the war."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times.]

ROOT TALKS OF RUSSIA AND OF OUR PART IN WAR—THIS COUNTRY HAS TAKEN SIDES AGAINST "CONTEMPT FOR MORALS AND COLD-BLOODED DISREGARD OF HUMANITY," HE DECLARES.

The American Bar Association, in session at Saratoga this month, heard Elihu Root deliver an address which was among the most effective of his many masterly public utterances. But the hour was so late at night that only a few paragraphs found their way into print. The convention's stenographer did not even make a copy of it until a few days ago. The major part of the address, dealing with Russian conditions as Mr. Root saw them when he headed the American mission and ending with an eloquent analysis of this country's attitude in helping to win the world war against Prussianism, is presented here:

"Who can think of his own personality amid the tremendous issues that confront us and the terrible responsibility that rests upon us? Men are nothing. From out of the dead level of ordinary humdrum life, from ease and comfort, the struggle for place and fortune, the common things of every day, the rising feelings of duties and passions and ideals and devotion sink all the past and all the personality.

"There are no persons now; there is only a country. There are no countries now; there is only a world in which the great conflict has come between right and wrong, between the angels of light and the angels of darkness, and we are, each one of us, but an indistinguishable particle of the great conflict that is to determine the future of mankind. * * *

"Let me say something about Russia, poor, haggard, bleeding, agonizing Russia. In March last the Government of the Czar had brought Russia to the verge of bankruptcy. The Czar was dethroned, not merely because he was an autocrat—that would have waited until the war was over—but because his government was incompetent and dishonest; because the men who were controlling in that government were bought with German money and were traitors to their country, to the great cause in which Russia had enlisted.

"The Duma was in session; and wise and able men in that body, perceiving that the bureaucratic government was making its arrangements for a separate peace, in violation of the pledged faith of Russia—a peace which would have inflicted intolerable shame upon their country through desertion of those other people who had come to the aid of Russia in her struggle—wise and able men threw off that government and charged the government with the purpose to make a separate peace. The Czar issued an order that the Duma dissolve, and the Duma refused to dissolve, and that precipitated the revolution.

"Upon that the great body of socialists in Petrograd who had been attacking the government, had been forming their plans ultimately to overthrow the government, arose, took to the street, called upon the Petrograd garrison whom they had won over to their views, and had them in secret opposition to the government, and they drove out the police of the bureaucracy. The agents of the new government, Milukoff and the others, called upon the Czar for his abdication and he abdicated. The Duma immediately appointed new heads of all the departments, who took possession of the machinery of government.

"The socialists formed themselves into a body which was known as the council of workingmen's and soldiers' delegates, some 2,500 in number, and they had adhering to them the Petrograd garrison. And then, with the Czar's government disposed of, in a night disappearing, as it deserved to disappear, there were left in Russia the heads of these two departments, the heads of the executive committee who controlled the machinery of administration, and the council of workingmen's and soldiers' delegates, who had the control and leadership of the Petrograd garrison—that is to say, the physical force in their control. The provisional council of ministers reported by the Duma had the machinery of government, but they had no power to execute their decrees. The council of workingmen's and soldiers' delegates, a purely voluntary body, had the physical power, as they had the garrison with them, but they had no competence for government, and they did not undertake to carry on government; and so the country stood with no effective government, a government with moral suasion alone, and that vast people of 180,000,000, covering one-sixth of the habitable globe, looked about in bewilderment and confusion, and began to discuss their rights, their powers, and duties; began to rejoice in the new freedom from oppression.

"Four months ago, when the special commission landed at Vladivostok there were thousands of committees which had been formed in every town and in every city and almost every village, in every garrison and camp and division and regiment of the great Russian Army. These thousands of committees undertook to regulate their local affairs. They had no relation to each other, and they had no subordination to any general government. Seventy-five per cent of the people could not read and write. With a very few exceptions they had no knowledge and no experience in self-government. They had no institutions through which to govern, and we all know there can be no self-government except through institutions of government. Yet in that extraordinary condition there was as perfect order in Russia as existed in the United States.

"In Petrograd not a policeman was to be found, the old police of the bureaucracy of the country had been chased away, gone into hiding or into the council, and no police had taken their place. But there was no time during that period when a young woman could not have walked from one end of Petrograd to the other, at any hour of the day or night, in perfect safety.

"Then they proposed—they addressed themselves to the novel subject of forming a government to take the place of the old autocracy. There were two elements—the Socialists, who, of course, desire a government of socialism, with the great body of the Russian people, most of them landowning peasants, with a small proportion of business men and a small proportion of large landowners—and these two elements stood and looked at each other in doubt as to what they should do, wholly inexperienced, and they began to take the first steps toward the creation of government.

"The Socialists had two wings—the moderate and reasonable Socialists of the American type, the same kind who run a candidate for President every four years now with cheerful hope, and the extreme Socialists of the German type, those who determine immediate or full application of the theory of socialism.

"They proposed that there should be an immediate destruction of all capital. They proposed to destroy the industrial organization of Russia, and they proposed to destroy the nationalism of Russia in the expectation of substituting for nationalism throughout the world the universal brotherhood of the proletariat, which should immediately usher in the millennium. Their idea was they would have no national Government in Russia, and they would immediately destroy the National Governments of the United States, England, France, Italy, and finally Germany. Between these two there was an irreconcilable conflict. The key of all that went on in Russia through months was the desire to separate the modern and reasonable Socialists, who sought to obtain the fruition of their theories through building up national democracies, and the extreme German type of Socialists, who sought immediately to apply their wild and vague theory.

"Then there came a tremendous German propaganda. Thousands of German agents came across the border at the revolution, and they spent money like water—no one can tell how much they spent for stirring up all the German sympathizers in Russia. They purchased newspapers, established these newspapers, and printed the newspapers and printed other literature; they went up and down the front, talking to the soldiers in the trenches and in the reserve camps. They said to the Russian soldier:

"'Why do you fight? This was the Czar's war. The Czar is gone now. Why do you keep on fighting?' They said also to them, 'Why do you kill us? We are your friends. Why do you kill? It is very unpleasant. You had better go home and take part in the division of the land, and all the land in Russia is to be divided, and if you do not hurry home you will be left.'

"And those of the millions of men who did not read were talked to in this way, and when it was said this was not their war they were compelled to realize that it was not. Nobody had told them what the war was to be; they had never been instructed about it; they had no knowledge of the great issues involved, and accordingly, by the millions, the Russians left the trenches and the camps and wandered all over the country, finding their way back to their homes, and all through the Russian Army the idea ran that peace had come and that there was no further occasion for war. And so that Government stood without any power in the Government to enforce a decree, with an army wearied of war, as all Europe is wearied of war to-day; tired of sacrifice and suffering, glad to have the killing and maiming put to an end, glad that no more lives were to be added to the millions who had been lost in Russia, and peace and order were to reign.

"There they were, with Germany at the gates. Discipline in the army, of course, then disappeared. The officers who had been severe in their treatment of the soldiers were dismissed and sent away, the soldiers' committee took charge, and the condition existed in which the successful prosecution of war was impossible, and there was no government which had the power to enforce law. Indeed, the law had lost its sanction as law, it had died with the Czar. It was not like our laws, which were made by the people; those were made by the Czar, and the Czar had gone, and men had no further authority. There was no law, no power, and there was no money, and the great body of the people, with little or no understanding of the great questions confronting them, delighted in the sense of freedom, but with all they respected each other's rights, and they maintained order.

"The German agents made good cause with the extreme and unreasonable Socialists, and to them were added those secret agents of the bureaucratic Government, unknown—the personnel of that secret police was unknown—and the extreme wing of violent destructive socialism, which corresponds to the I. W. W. in our own country. And the agents of the old secret police and the agents of Germany made common cause in attempting to destroy all industry, all property, all capital, and all effectiveness of government in Russia.

"Now, in that condition a few men—very few at first—stood up and spurned the offer of a separate peace from Germany. They said, 'We will not stain our country by this disgraceful conduct. We will maintain the war; we will fight for the liberty which we have newly won; we will begin the career of a new democracy of Russia with faith and honor. We will save the people of Russia from the disgrace which these men seek to put upon it.'

"They were the provisional government of Russia. Patiently, wisely, they separated the reasonable Socialist from the extremist. They finally won them over, and when they had won them over they had won the Petrograd garrison also. And when they had won the Petrograd garrison, with the moderate Socialists, they were ready to govern * * *"

At this point Mr. Root talked about Kerensky and the apparent restoration of discipline in the army at the time when the United States mission left Russia.

"The newspapers are filled with accounts of disputes, of political conflict, but how is it possible for a nation which began its beginning with no government at all, with no institutions, with no habits of thought or action adapted to the exercise of the powers of government, how is it possible for them to avoid disputes and controversies? When you read the newspapers about what happens in Russia, I beg you to remember how the people of Europe looked upon the Army of America for many a long year after peace that ended the American Revolution. How certain they were that the new experiment in democracy was a failure. How they sneered and laughed at the presumptuous farmers who sought to govern themselves.

"I beg you to remember what Europe thought of the condition in America in those long dark years of civil war, when it was believed that the American experiment had failed at last. I beg you to consider, if a true statement were made and communicated by cable to Russia, of all that has been happening in these United States during the last four months, of the riots, of the pacifists' meetings, of the seditious press, of the unblushing effrontery of treason throughout this land, consider what effect that would have upon Russia.

"I beg you to consider whether it would not seem, if that were sent over to Russia, whether it would not seem worse to the Russians than the story which comes to us from Russia.

"A terrible task they have undertaken. Often their hearts must faint; often it must seem as if they were fighting to accomplish the impossible; but they have one thing upon which they can rely, that is the character of the people of Russia. Why was it that when no police and no government was there, order was maintained in Russia? It was because the Russian people have in the highest degree all the qualities that are necessary to successful self-government.

"They have self-control. They are naturally law-abiding. They have natural consideration for the feelings and the interests of others. They have a natural sense of justice. They would not willingly do injustice to any one in the world; and their justice is enlarged and ennobled by beautiful charity. They are the kindest people toward the unfortunate and the erring that I know of on earth. With all that, they have persistence and rugged continuance of purpose, and they have an extraordinary capacity for concerted action, which has been shown in their local self-government. In their village communities they long have managed their own affairs in their little town meetings with the mayor presiding, and they would discuss and take the will of the majority, and everybody agreed to it. They have done the same in their zemstvos, * * *

"I am glad to have gone to Russia because it has put into my heart a sympathy for those struggling people which makes me a better man. This war has done many things already. I know that it has dissolved for one battered old campaigner, who has been through the rude buffets of life for one-half a century, it has dissolved that hardness of the heart which brings indifference to the dreams of youth. It has brought sympathy, ennobling sympathy, to us all—sympathy for poor, struggling, pleading Russia; sympathy for little Belgium, like a ravished child trodden down by brutal and bestial force; sympathy for the noble patriotism and lofty character of beautiful France; sympathy for the patriotism that leads the Italians to the mountain summits for the recovery of Italia Irredenta. In place of the mild and complacent surface kindness which we once professed for all the world, there has come a deep and real sympathy of the heart with all these nations that have become our allies.

"We are growing real instead of superficial. We are substituting reality for pretense. But there is something more than mere sympathy that this war has already done. We have been talking in this country of free lives and liberty and justice, of freedom and opportunity, of American institutions, of the mission of democracy, about the ideals of our fathers, and we have been talking from the teeth outward. We have not felt it. I won't say we were dead in trespasses or sins; but we were dead or sleeping in wealth and ease and comfort.

"The brutal power of Germany, which has repudiated everything that civilization has accomplished for the century past, which has repudiated the law of morals and declared the German State to be superior to all morality, which has repudiated the law of humanity, and has without quivering committed the most dreadful outrages in order that she might have the benefit of inspiring terror in the world—the brutal power of Germany has revealed at last to our comfort-loving people the unreality of our lives, and has shown, bare and naked, the dreadful, horrid truth of human nature unrelieved by morals or religion or humanity. It has shown to us as we never realized before what liberty and justice, what humanity and compassion, what morality and right really are.

"We need not talk about the whys and wherefores of the war. It is here, and the issue is drawn so clearly that a child could see. It is for the American people to determine whether they have the manhood to maintain the liberty that their fathers gained for them through sacrifice, the manhood to maintain the justice upon which we have prided ourselves, the manhood to defend those institutions of liberty and justice which we would hand down to our children, or whether we shall submit and abandon them all.

"The issue is clear and distinct between the maintenance of the American Republic, free and independent, American justice to the rich and poor alike, American opportunity for the boy and the girl—whether we are so craven that we will leave our children to be subjected to the power of evil that ravished Belgium and Serbia; whether falsehood and faithlessness and cynical contempt for morals, and cold-blooded disregard of humanity, and utter absence of mercy and compassion, and denial of human right shall be the portion of our children, or whether the liberty which our fathers won shall be handed down to them by the manhood of our fathers' sons and the love of our children's fathers.

"Ah! It has come not too soon. It was at the eleventh hour that we came into the vineyard. The great opportunity of the American people was slipping away before they could grasp the opportunity to make themselves into the image of our fathers and of our Maker; the opportunity to die, if need be, and to give our dearest ones to death that our country may live; that its liberty may live; that its justice may endure; that its opportunity for those who toil and endure may continue. We have grasped the opportunity for that sacrifice and suffering through which we shall find our souls again.

"I thought, as I listened to-day to that sad story of Edith Cavell, that it could not be that an infinite God would permit such a dreadful injustice to overcome the world. I did not know. We can not measure the providence of God; but I have faith in the power of God's people, and God's people are the democracies of the earth. They are not the czars or the kaisers or the emperors or the autocrats or the aristocracies of the earth; they are the democracies of the earth. And I have faith in the power of democracy triumphant.

"I believe that struggling Russia and downtrodden Belgium and awakened England, and enduring France, and aspiring Italy, and renewed America, fighting in God's name for the principles of His religion; for that compassion; that moral; that justice which Christ preached upon earth, will overcome the forces of a dark and wicked past and bring the world into a new day of brighter light and happier life. And in that faith I live—with all the sorrows, the disappointments, and the loss—I live a brighter and prouder American than I have ever been before."

ADDRESS BY HON. WILLIAM J. BRYAN.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I have a copy of a speech of William Jennings Bryan delivered at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., August 3, 1917, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH OF WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

[Delivered at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., Aug. 3, 1917.]

If chance could fashion but a little flower,
And furnish it with perfume for each tiny leaf,
And furnish it with sunshine and with shower,
Then chance would be creator with the power
To build a world for unbelief.

—Fred Emerson Brooks (in the Grave Digger).

"Gen. Glenn, gentlemen, this is, in some respects, the most remarkable audience that it has ever been my pleasure to address in the course of a life 37 years of which have been largely devoted to public speaking.

"In the first place, this assemblage carries me back 19 years, to the time when I was for a little while a soldier. I do not mention my service to make a comparison between that war and this. We had few called to the colors compared with the number that have already been summoned for service in this war. We entered the war against Spain in order that a little republic on a little island might be made secure. You entered this larger war that democracy may be made safe on this big, round world of ours. Your work, therefore, is a very different and a much larger work.

"My experience in the Army covered about five months. My offer of service was sent on the day war was declared; my resignation as colonel was accepted the day the treaty was signed; so that my constructive service covered the entire period of the war. I was in the Army long enough to learn more about men than I had ever learned before. I became better acquainted with men in the Army than I had outside, and I reached the conclusion that Army life brings out the best and the worst in man. I have cherished among the inner circle of my friends some men whom I learned to know in the Army.

"This audience differs from any other audience I have ever addressed in several respects. A few years ago I had an occasion to deliver an address when it was not proper for me to make a political speech.

"In looking for a subject I happened to run upon the word 'civilization.' I thought that might be a subject upon which to make a speech general enough not to be regarded as political. So I began to look up the word to see what had been said on the subject; if you have never made the investigation, you will be surprised to find how little can be found that has been said on this subject. What surprised me more was that I could find no definition that seemed to be adequate. I found several things spoken of as entering into civilization, but a definition, in order to be a real definition, should include every essential element of the thing defined and exclude everything else. Finding no such definition, I ventured to make one. I am not sure it is a perfect one. If you think it is not, make a better one and see how difficult the subject is to handle.

"This is my definition of civilization: Civilization is the harmonious development of the human race, physically, mentally, and morally. I would count that civilization the highest in which there was among the people the highest development of the threefold man. Now, if that is a fair definition of civilization, then every citizen has his part in establishing the standard of his nation's civilization; for just in proportion as the citizen can present as his contribution the highest development of body, of mind, and of heart, he makes the largest possible contribution to the civilization of his nation and his age.

"If that is correct, then, I ask you where, among all the audiences that I have addressed, have I stood face to face with an equal number of men who represent a higher average development than the men whom I have the honor to address to-night?

"Now, let me lay before you the facts upon which I make the statement. You have passed a physical examination. I know of nowhere else in this country, or, for that matter, in the world, where I could find higher perfection of physical development than I find in this select audience to-night. So the first part of your contribution to civilization is a large and sufficient part, for were you not examples of health and types of physical development you would not be among the chosen few who are assembled here.

"What about your mental development? They tell me that 85 per cent of you are college men. Do you know what that means? Have you ever examined the statistics of this country?

We claim—and I think we are entitled to the claim—that we have in this country the highest standard of education—the highest average education to be found in all the world. But in spite of all we do to educate our people, do you know how many take advantage of our colleges? Less than 2 per cent of the boys and girls who enter the graded schools ever enter a college or university—less than 1 in 50.

"Now, when you know that 85 per cent of your membership are men who have been in college, you can see that you represent a very small percentage of the Nation. You represent the less than 2 per cent who carry education as far as the university or college. Where, then, could I find in this country or in the world a higher average measured by intellectual standards? Where could I find so many men who have contributed so largely to the lifting of the level of our Nation's intelligence, and thus contributed to the standard of civilization?

"But that is not the thing that interests me most. I find another thing that is even more gratifying, namely, that about 85 per cent of the men who are registered here give their connection with some church organization. Now, I believe that of the three the heart is the most important. The head is more important than the body, and the heart is more important than the head. If man is developed in body only, he may be a perfect brute and nothing more. If a man is developed only physically and mentally, he may be simply an influential scoundrel. If I had to choose between development of the head and development of the heart, I would much prefer the development of the heart. A good heart can take a dull brain and make it useful for society, but a bad heart can not make a good use of any brain, no matter how trained or brilliant.

"Young men, I speak for your fathers and your mothers (and I can speak as a parent, for I have passed through the child-raising period and have reached the age when a parent becomes a grandparent, and thus interested in two generations). I can speak as parent and grandparent, and for your parents, and tell you that the burden of your mother's prayer and of your father's wish is that you shall be good rather than that you shall be smart.

"Out of the heart are the issues of life.' 'As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he.' I am more gratified to find that you measure high by religious standards than I am gratified by your intellectual measurement. You never know what a man is until you measure him in units of spiritual power. Measure him in units of horsepower and he is not as strong as some beasts. Measure him in units of intellectual power and you soon reach his limitations, but measure him in units of spiritual power and there is no ratio that can describe the difference between man at his best and man at his worst.

"Men, I do not flatter you, therefore, when I tell you that in the last four decades I do not know when I have stood in the presence of so many men who average so high in their contribution to what I describe as civilization. I appreciate the privilege. I thank your commanding officer for the honor extended me in inviting me here. I am glad to use the time given me to say—

"I shall not exhort you to be brave—it is not necessary. In all this audience there is not a man who will ever turn his back to the foe, not one who will fail to measure up to the requirements of a soldier or lack of courage in time of danger. Nor will I spend any time encouraging you to believe that your country will stand behind you. It would be a reflection on the country to occupy one minute of your time in assuring you that you will not be deserted by the American people. We live in the best country on earth, under the best form of government that man's mind ever conceived—a government which rests upon great fundamental principles, principles which are essential to a government like ours. One of these principles is freedom of speech; but every man should know that discussion ends when the country renders its decision and the people announce their will. 'Acquiescence in the will of the people,' as Jefferson declared, 'is the vital principle of a republic, from which there is no appeal except to force.'

"So, to-day, our Nation is one. If there is a discordant voice in this Nation to-day it must come from one who either does not understand the genius of our institutions or whose heart is not with his country. I think I know the American people; I believe I am as well acquainted with them as any other citizen; I have been among them now for a generation, and I know that the American people will stand back of the President and Congress and furnish the Government whatever it needs in men and money to win this war.

"People ask me every day how long this war will last. My answer is that I do not know; and I do not know anybody who does know. When anybody tells me he thinks he knows I lose confidence in his judgment. I know of nothing upon which any human being is able to predicate a guess that is of any value as to the length of this war. But I can state a fact that is worth more than any guess, prediction, or prophecy, and that is that no matter whether the war be long or short, the shortest road to peace is the road straight ahead, with no division among our people. We can not afford to allow anybody in this world to think for one minute that there is any division among the American people when once our Nation has decided to enter a war. The more earnestly one desires peace, the more loyally he should support the Government as the only way to hasten peace.

"But, my friends, I think I can render you a better service than to spend some time giving you assurance that the Nation appreciates the sacrifice that you are ready to make. About a month ago I heard one of the greatest sermons to which it has been my privilege to listen. It was by accident that I heard it—that is, I happened to be in Georgetown, Ky., on Sunday, and heard Dr. Truitt, of Dallas, Tex. The text was one I had never heard used. In fact, familiar as I am with the Bible, it was one that had never attracted special attention. I hope that when you get to your tents, or at least on Sunday, if not before, you will turn to the eighth chapter of Second Corinthians and read the first few verses. You will find a tribute paid by the greatest of the apostles to the Macedonian churches. It is one of the most eloquent tributes ever uttered by any man. I do not know where there is elsewhere such a wealth of praise condensed into so few words. Paul tells those churches that they had given money beyond their power to give, that they had given of their own accord, and that 'they first gave their own selves.'

"What better text could I take for to-night than this? 'They first gave themselves.' Young men, you are giving yourselves to your country, and it is the highest proof you can give of your love for your Nation, for your Government, and for its principles. 'Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend.' When a body of men, reaching the highest development in body, mind, and heart, step forward and as one man says, 'Here am I, send me,' you have given evidence of your love and loyalty. It is sacrifice that measures love. We show our love by what we are willing to give, not by what we are willing to receive. It is easy enough to find men who are willing to receive, but not easy to find those who give and who give themselves.

"The part of the ordinary citizen seems hard when he is asked to pay high taxes. At Washington they are having difficulty in deciding just how high they should put the rate on incomes, and we hear many protests. Some think it is unjust for the Government to take one-third or one-half of the income, but when taxes are collected on incomes the owner keeps the property on which the tax is levied, only a part of the income is surrendered.

"But you, my friends, when you give, give yourselves. You give your all; what would not a man give in exchange for his life? High taxes may take all the income of a property, but taxes can not take as much as the Government takes from the man who gives his life.

"You give yourselves; but men I can not stop here. I am not satisfied to tell you that you are giving yourselves as evidence of your patriotism. You have to give something more than your life; before you have a chance to die you have a work to do. You are the men picked by the Government to lead the others. The duty of a leader is not merely to tell his men what to do. The leader's duty is to show them what to do.

"A former governor of Illinois, Gov. Oglesby, a man of great native wisdom, who described a leader, said, 'A leader is a man who is going in the same direction as the people and a little bit ahead.' You can not lead unless you are going in the same direction, and you can not lead unless you are a little bit ahead. You are selected as leaders to go in front of your men, to show your men how to fight. But that is not all. According to the reports from France only one soldier in fourteen has had to give up his life.

"You are not only to die for your country, if necessary, but you are to live for your country. You are not only to lead men in battle, but you are to give while you live an example that will be worth following. The Bible tells us that good is to be propagated by example. Our Master Himself enjoins us to so live that others, seeing our good works, may be constrained to glorify the Father.

"Officers to be, I would not be doing my duty to my country if I did not enjoin upon you the performance of a very solemn duty. You are to be given charge of men who are gathered from among your countrymen. No boy will go back home just as he was when he came into the Army. Its members can not stand still. Every human being is moving every day and every hour up toward the highest plane to which man can attain or down toward the lowest level to which a man can fall.

"You are going to have much to say and much to do with the futures of these men intrusted to your care. When the Government turns over to you a certain number of muskets it requires that you keep account of them. When it turns these men over to you it has a right to demand an account of every soul that has been put into your keeping. What are you going to do for these men who come from the homes that make ours the greatest Nation in the world? Back home are women who are proud of their sons because they have answered to their country's call, but their hearts are sore; every waking hour these mothers will be thinking of their boys.

"When they go back home, if they have lost a limb, or an arm; if they go back shattered in health or feeble in body, the loved ones at home will nurse them back to strength. They will love them back to life; and they will not complain. But if they have yielded to temptation, if their spiritual life is dead, if they go back with lower ideals, the mother's heart will be broken. And, officers, it rests largely with you to say whether these boys go back stronger or weaker.

"This is not the end of the world; this is not the end of your work. Lincoln, in that wonderful oration at Gettysburg, appealed to those present to consecrate themselves to an 'unfinished work.' Every generation finds work unfinished when it comes upon the stage and leaves work unfinished when it departs. No matter how much you accomplish in this war, great problems will press for solution when you return. This Nation is putting into your hands the priceless citizenship of the land and, if God spares the lives of these men and permits them to return, your country will demand of you that these men shall come back better and not worse for their association with you.

"Our schools will have failed in their work for you, 85 per cent of whom are college men, if your influence upon the enlisted men is not a blessing and a benediction. Our churches will be disgraced if you, 85 per cent of whom are connected with religious organizations, do not return the men under you improved by the association with you.

"I have talked to you a long while, my friends, but my heart is in what I say to you. I owe a great deal to this country. More than any other man. Other men may have received more, but they have been more deserving. If I can measure what has been done for me, I know of no man in history who has as much reason to be grateful.

"How can I repay my country? I can, I think, pay one installment by helping my country through you. I love this country. God has made us 'heir of the ages.' We are 'a city set upon a hill,' we can not hide our light. You are going to carry our names and reputations into the lands into which you may be sent. I am not afraid that you will fail to measure up to expectations. We shall not hear of any immoralities practiced by your men in foreign lands, or of brutality toward those who are helpless. I am confident that you will do nothing that will bring criticism upon our Nation's name.

"But, how are you going to deal with these boys? Are you going to love them and care for them and bring them back to mothers and country stronger for the work that lies before them? I expect to visit other camps. On the day that our Nation declared a state of war to exist I notified the President that my services were at his disposal, and there is no position too lowly if I can help my country.

"I do not know that a man 57 years can be of much service walking or even riding, but until they need me, until they call me to the colors, I may be able to talk to the soldiers; if any word of mine can strengthen these officers to set an example to their men so that when they go back home they will make their families happier, I shall feel that I am serving my country.

"Men, there is only one thing to build upon. Let no one tell you that you can build a moral code upon a materialistic foundation. It is not true; there never was one and there can not be one. There is only one basis upon which to build a moral code, and that is that back of all and above all and beyond all is God. This world was made according to a plan, and every human life is a part of God's plan. If one believes that, then he recognizes that the highest duty, as it ought to be the greatest pleasure, of every human being is to try to learn the will of God concerning himself, and to do it. If every officer will every day attempt to measure up to the responsibilities of a man who believes that God will hold him responsible for every thought, word, and deed, that man can not fail to be a blessing to those about him.

"This is the message that I bring to you. I am not a preacher; I am a man of the world, and have spent most of my life in the rough and tumble of politics, but I know men. I have seen many start with bright prospects and fall, and I have yet to know a real failure in life that was not traceable to a breakdown in the moral conceptions of the man. Therefore I improve this, my first and only opportunity to speak to you, to remind you of the moral responsibility that rests upon you, intrusted as you will be with the bodies, minds, and souls of men.

"Men, I am cheered by your presence; I am encouraged by the attention you have given me, and I thank those who have made it possible for me to add this experience to my life. I know that if death comes to you, you will die as brave soldiers; but I shall join your loved ones in the prayer that your country may, instead of requiring your death, have use for your lives when this war is over and the end has been accomplished—when, as I trust it may be, arbitrary power shall have vanished from the earth and democracy be known around the world.

"When you come back I hope to be among those who will greet you and thank you for what you have done, and my joy will be full if I can meet you with the assurance that each officer can turn the men under him back to the country and say truly, 'Here are the soldiers you intrusted in my keeping. Every soul is whiter and every man is stronger for the work that is yet to be done.'"

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, on the 1st of August I submitted a motion for the discharge of the Committee on Woman Suffrage from the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 2. The joint resolution has now been reported and is on the calendar, and the purpose of the motion which I made has been accomplished. I therefore move that Senate resolution 109, Order of Business No. 101, be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be postponed indefinitely.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President, on September 19, 1917, had approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

S. 2785. An act to authorize and empower the Southwest Louisiana Waterways Association, of the State of Louisiana, to construct a lock and dam in Mermentau River, in the State of Louisiana; and

S. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution for improving Willapa Harbor and River, Wash.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 5949. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

STOCK-GRAZING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2776, Order of Business 117.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator will not insist on that motion, because there is a general understanding that all such matters are to go over for the present.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the title of the bill be read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we will have to obtain a quorum. Senators who are interested in this bill are probably in attendance on various committees, and it would be necessary to have a quorum to take up the bill for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This question is not debatable.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask that the title of the bill be stated. I want to know what I am to vote upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from New Mexico moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2776) providing for the classification of lands under the stock-grazing homestead act in certain States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	Martin	Sheppard
Beckham	Hale	Myers	Shields
Brady	Husting	New	Simmons
Brandegee	James	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Stone
Cummins	Kendrick	Phelan	Swanson
Curtis	Kenyon	Polindexter	Trammell
Dillingham	Kirby	Pomerene	Underwood
Fall	Lewis	Ransdell	Vardaman
Fletcher	Lodge	Reed	Warren
France	McKellar	Robinson	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Shafroth

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS]. He is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] on account of illness and that he is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GORF]. This announcement may remain for the day.

Mr. STONE. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] on account of serious illness in his family.

Mr. HUSTING. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2776.

Mr. JAMES. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until Saturday next at 12 o'clock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That motion is not in order at the present time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not while there is a pending question.

Mr. JAMES. We have a quorum present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but there is a pending question. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2776) providing for the classification of lands under the stock-grazing homestead act in certain States, and for other purposes.

Mr. JAMES. I understood that the Senator from New Mexico had withdrawn his motion.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I understand that committees are very anxious to keep up their work to-day, and it is the desire of those in charge of the principal measures before the Senate that there shall be no business transacted to-day. I therefore withdraw my motion.

TUG RIVER BRIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across the Tug River.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. SHIELDS, and Mr. CALDER conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL SATURDAY.

Mr. JAMES. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock meridian on Saturday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Saturday, September 22, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, September 21, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we lift up our hearts to Thee in fervent prayer for all the Members of this legislative body, that Thy blessing may be upon them; especially for those who are sick and afflicted, that Thy healing hand may touch them and restore them to health and strength, that they may be able to take up their duties in the needed work which waits upon them; and for the members of their several families who are afflicted, that they may be restored to health, and relieve the anxiety which must necessarily attend them, that their minds may be free to meet the tasks which loom before them; and Thine be the praise, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, September 18, 1917, was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at noon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REQUESTS TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the war situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the war situation. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on H. R. 5556, a bill which I introduced in the House on July 30 last, providing for the free use of the mail to soldiers, sailors, and marines in the service of the United States during the existence of the present war, the substance of which has been incorporated in section 1000 of the pending revenue bill, now in conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DONATION OF PILOTS' SERVICES TO THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes, to make a statement in which I think all the Members will be interested.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks to address the House not exceeding two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. HICKS. On the subject of men who are contributing to the Government their services as pilots.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, when the history of this great war is written in the perspective which shall come in the years that are to follow, the historian of the time, in addition to relating the movements of armies and of ships, and the victories on the sea and on the land, will record also the splendid heroism, devotion, and self-sacrifice of the Nation itself. [Applause.]

Time does not permit to record all the acts of devotion and all the sacrifices and all the contributions which our citizens are making in the cause of liberty. One incident I desire to mention. In the recent trip of the Naval Committee it came to my attention that the pilots on the lower Mississippi were donating their services to the Government of the United States, and this morning I desire to bring to the attention of the House the splendid contributions which those men, earning at best a precarious livelihood, are offering to their Government. The Bureau of Navigation has kindly furnished me with a list giving the names of the different pilotage associations in this country who are to-day giving their services to the Nation in piloting the naval ships of the United States Government. [Applause.] They are the Brunswick Journal Bar Pilots' Association, of Brunswick, Ga.; the Pilot Association, of New Orleans; the Cape Fear Pilots' Association, of North Carolina; the Neptune Association, of New York City; the Mercantile Marine Association, of Liverpool, England; the Boston Pilots' Association, of Boston, Mass. [Applause.]

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, there is another matter I desire to speak of in my two minutes' time which I think worthy of the highest commendation. When the Cuban Government declared war upon the German Government they found within their harbors five German ships, which they seized. One of those ships they took for their own use, and the other four vessels, aggregating 20,000 tons, they turned over as a gift to the Government of the United States [applause], with the understanding that our Government assume all responsibility for them, both during the war and after the war. [Applause.] While this action may be considered a transfer of use rather than an absolute gift, yet the friendly feeling which prompted it deserves our praise and our thanks. It is an additional bond of sympathy between two sister Republics. [Applause.]

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, the conferees on House bill 4960, to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes, have agreed; but there is some work to be done in connection with writing out the report and the statement of the House conferees, and I ask unanimous consent that the conferees may be permitted to file the report and statement, to appear in the RECORD of to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks leave to file the report and statement on House bill 4960 at any time to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. Reserving the right to object, I want to propound this parliamentary inquiry: Does that mean that it can be taken up to-day?

The SPEAKER. No; it means that they may file it out of time to-day. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE]?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across the river, had insisted upon its disagreement to amendment of the House, had requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. SHIELDS, and Mr. CALDER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5901) to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2878. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Waccamaw River.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2830. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2705. An act to create the aircraft board and provide for its maintenance; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DRAFTING OF CERTAIN ALIENS.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing Senate joint resolution 84, to draft certain aliens into the military service of the United States, and for other purposes, with certain amendments which I have proposed to that resolution in order to perfect it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the document to which he refers. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I could not understand the gentleman's statement as to what resolution he refers to. Is it one which has passed the Senate?

Mr. ROGERS. It is the Chamberlain resolution, which passed the Senate, with certain proposed amendments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that. There are several other bills that have been passed which are in a like situation.

Mr. ROGERS. I will say to the gentleman that there has been considerable interest expressed in having available for ready examination the text of the Chamberlain resolution, with certain proposed amendments.

I thought it would be of interest to the membership of the House if that were done, and I can see no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman ask to print it as a document or print it in the RECORD?

Mr. ROGERS. Printed in the RECORD, where it will be more convenient for all the Members. The bill is not long, as the gentleman knows.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold that request until the next meeting of the House?

Mr. ROGERS. Of course.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed two resolutions, one relating to the raising of live stock and the other relating to the naval stores in the State of Florida and the South.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing the two resolutions referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman intend to read the resolutions in the five minutes?

Mr. SEARS. Frankly, I will say to the gentleman, that I intend to call the attention of the House to one resolution and read it.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House briefly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, it was a novel sight, one long to be remembered by the citizens of Washington, when Mr. Wilson, the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army, came marching down Pennsylvania Avenue followed by the Members of the United States Senate, the House of Representatives, 10,000 soldiers, and those who had been selected from the District of Columbia to perform military service.

Thousands of people lined the streets, they were there to bid Godspeed to a husband, a brother, a sweetheart, or a friend, and when they saw the great leader of this Nation marching on foot ahead of this great parade it caused an inspiration to spread over the thousands as they realized that your President and my President had patriotically performed his duty, and a cheer went up all along the line as they wished him Godspeed in his efforts for humanity.

The people of the country are with the President, the Members of the United States Congress are standing behind him, and when I marched on this day behind my leader and read the inscriptions on the banners waved from the crowds, telling the soldiers "Good-by and God bless you," it caused me to realize as never before the patriotism and loyalty of our people for the Stars and Stripes that wave over the land of the free and the home of the brave.

The example set by our President on this occasion by marching in honor of every mother's son who is to perform service in the new army, is one long to be remembered by the American people. I know that his heart is heavy because of the struggle that is to be made in the interest of humanity, yet when I recite the atrocities committed by the military powers of Germany, who is it can say that any other step could be taken without destroying the freedom and liberty of our people? [Applause.]

THE GERMAN ARMY AND HER WARS.

At the beginning of this war it is estimated that Germany had 12,000,000 trained soldiers. It is now estimated that one and a half million have been killed, one-half million disabled, and one-half million taken as prisoners. According to this statement there still remains some 9,000,000 trained fighting men. When we realize that the central powers are still occupying captured territory, and that the combined armies of the allies have not been able to reoccupy but little of the lost ground, it can be readily seen that the conquest ahead of us may run for many months yet to come. The morale of the German people has not been impaired to any great extent and they are sacrificing their lives in the belief that the military authorities are fighting a defensive war. The common people of this nation are not to blame, for their training is such that they know no better than to listen and to believe the propaganda issued under the direction and supervision of the military dictators of their country.

Germany has always been a fighting nation. Her past history is filled with bloodshed, death, and desolation. Her leaders have ruled with an iron hand and the grim reaper Death has mowed down millions of fighting men on the bleak, barren plains of that country. In 1648, after what was known as the Thirty Years' War, her population had decreased from 20,000,000 to 4,000,000. Something had to be done to repopulate the country and for this reason polygamy was recognized and legalized.

During the war of Frederick the Great one-tenth of the population was killed. Conditions became so bad and the people became so tired of war that many of them moved to isolated sections of the country in order that they might live in peace and happiness. An incident is told where a peasant moved out to what was practically a desert island. When asked why he did not return to the interior where he could have better land and more privileges, he replied that he preferred to live where there was no fighting, no murdering, and where he would not be called to participate in another war. The rulers of Germany, because of their successes in the past, were intoxicated with the belief that the armies of all other countries would crumble when attacked by their splendid military fighting forces. It was believed that when this war was declared that it would be of short duration and end in such a way as to allow the central powers to reach out and annex a great deal of additional territory and at the same time collect huge sums of money as indemnities. Germany fought three wars in the nineteenth century, all of which were of short duration. In 1864 war was declared on Denmark, and after two days' fighting this country sued for peace. The war of 1866, with Austria, only lasted two weeks. The war with France, in 1870, was concluded after two months' fighting, France losing Alsace-Lorraine, and having to pay a huge war indemnity. A rather amusing incident is told of Col. Roosevelt's last visit with the Kaiser. After reviewing the military units of the German Army Roosevelt, in American style, slapped the Kaiser on the shoulder and said, "Bill, you can lick the world," and the Kaiser took him at his word. But there's a different story yet to be told, for this war has involved four-fifths of the entire world, and the gods will decree that the rights of humanity must be protected and upheld.

ORIGIN OF THE WAR.

June 28, 1914, will go down in history as one of the dark, eventful days of this period, for it was on this date that a Serbian by the name of Gavrilo Princep assassinated Archduke Francis Ferdinand, the Crown Prince of Austria. He was tried and finally sentenced to 20 years of imprisonment. Prior to the declaration of war Austria made 10 separate demands on Serbia, all of which were agreed to, with one exception, and an offer was made to allow this one demand to be decided by The Hague. It will be of interest to know that Austria demanded that Serbia allow Austrian judges to preside over the courts that were to decide the fate of Ferdinand's assassin and any person who might be implicated with him. This would have established an unheard-of precedent, and of course no nation with any dignity or respect for its citizens would agree to such a proposition.

The die had already been cast, for a secret meeting had been held at Potsdam on the 5th of July, at which the representatives of Austria and Germany were present, and it was here that Germany had promised to assist her ally in the event war was commenced. At a later date, according to a report recently published, Von Jagow, the foreign minister of Germany, corroborated this fact. One of the most interesting statements that has ever been given the American people is the Kaiser's letter to President Wilson, under date of August 10, 1914, which shows that Germany had a full knowledge of all of the incidents leading to this war, and that the Kaiser labored under the impression that this could be brought about without causing England to participate in the same.

KAISER'S MESSAGE TO PRESIDENT WILSON, AUGUST 10, 1914.

H. R. H. Prince Henry was received by His Majesty King George V in London, who empowered him to transmit to me verbally that England would remain neutral if war broke out on the Continent involving Germany and France, Austria and Russia. This message was telegraphed to me by my brother from London after his conversation with His Majesty the King, and repeated verbally on the 29th of July.

My ambassador in London transmitted a message from Sir E. Grey to Berlin, saying that only in case France was likely to be crushed England would interfere.

On the 30th my ambassador in London reported that Sir Edward Grey, in course of a "private" conversation, told him that if the conflict remained localized between Russia—not Serbia—and Austria England would not move, but if we "mixed" in the fray she would take quick decision and grave measures; i. e., if I left my ally Austria in the lurch to fight alone England would not touch me.

This communication being directly counter to the King's message to me, I telegraphed to His Majesty on the 29th or 30th thanking him for kind messages through my brother and begging him to use all his power to keep France and Russia—his allies—from making any warlike preparations calculated to disturb my work of mediation, stating that I was in constant communication with His Majesty the Czar. In the evening the King kindly answered that he had ordered his Government to use every possible influence with his allies to refrain from taking any provocative military measures. At the same time His Majesty asked me if I would transmit to Vienna the British proposal that Austria was to take Belgrade and a few other Serbian towns and a strip of country as a "main-mise" to make sure that the Serbian promises on paper should be fulfilled in reality. This proposal was in the same moment telegraphed to His Majesty the Czar the same as an idea of mine before I received the two communications from Vienna and London, as both were of the same opinion.

I immediately transmitted the telegrams vice versa to Vienna and London. I felt that I was able to tide the question over and was happy at the peaceful outlook.

While I was preparing a note to His Majesty the Czar the next morning to inform him that Vienna, London, and Berlin were agreed about the treatment of affairs, I received the telephones from his excellency the chancellor that in the night before the Czar had given the order to mobilize the whole of the Russian Army, which was, of course, also meant against Germany, whereas up till then the southern armies had been mobilized against Austria.

In a telegram from London my ambassador informed me he understood the British Government would guarantee neutrality of France and wished to know whether Germany would refrain from attack. I telegraphed to His Majesty the King personally that mobilization being already carried out could not be stopped, but if His Majesty could guarantee with his armed forces the neutrality of France I would refrain from attacking her, leave her alone, and employ my troops elsewhere. His Majesty answered that he thought my offer was based on a misunderstanding, and as far as I can make out Sir E. Grey never took my offer into serious consideration. He never answered it. Instead he declared England had to defend Belgium's neutrality, which had to be violated by Germany on strategical grounds, news having been received that France was already preparing to enter Belgium, and the King of the Belgians having refused my petition for a free passage under guarantee of his country's freedom. I am most grateful for the President's message.

WILLIAM, I. R.

GERMAN HATRED.

A rather amusing incident was recently told by the United States ambassador, in which he said that on one occasion, in a conversation with Von Jagow, he apparently lost his head and stated that Germany had 500,000 reserves in the United States. The ambassador replied that in this country we had 501,000 lamp-posts, and it would be a very easy matter to bring them into use at the proper time. Prior to the severing of diplomatic relations President Wilson asked Col. E. M. House to visit the different European countries, in order that a personal report might be received as to actual conditions. In June, 1916, Col. House was told by Zimmermann, chancellor of Germany, that his country was ready to go to war with the United States, and, according to recent developments, it is shown that military preparations were made with the view of engaging this country at any time. A rather remarkable statement, showing the enmity and hate of the people of Germany for the United States, was published in the Frankfurter-Zeitung, which is as follows:

After England and the other countries have been conquered their navies will be taken over, and then we will sail on to America, overpower that country, and collect sufficient indemnities from their people to pay the entire cost of the war.

Similar statements were made by the Kaiser and other officials of the Government, all of which go to show that those in control of the affairs of Germany had full confidence in their ability to spread their military oligarchy over the entire world. For a long time there were two separate factions in Germany; the one headed by the chancellor tried in every way possible to avoid a break with the United States. On the other hand, the military authorities, who were in league with the conservatives, did everything in their power to bring about a ruthless submarine campaign. Conditions grew from bad to worse, until finally the fatal note was sent to this country, which stated that on March 1 a submarine warfare would be made against every ship entering a certain zone, 1,000 miles wide and 1,200 miles long, on the west coast of England and the Mediterranean Sea. It was then that the death knell of the friendship between our country and this nation was sounded, and our ambassador was instructed to call for his passports. Before these were issued to him he was confronted with a rather peculiar incident. He was asked to sign a treaty which was to the effect that certain rules and regulations, different from those prescribed in international law, would govern the relationship existing between the United States and Germany in the event of hostilities. This affront by the military authorities of Germany irritated him very much, and he made the following reply: "Even if I had authority to sign it, I would stay here until hell froze over before I would put my name to such a paper." This firm stand taken by him was so shocking to the officer in charge that in leaving he forgot to take the proposed treaty, and this is now an interesting document in the Department of State.

Those in charge of the affairs of Germany and Austria have poisoned the minds of their people against the United States by charging that we, as a Nation, were furnishing the allies munitions of war, which were being used to destroy their people. It is true that the United States did furnish not only the allies but any country that desired to purchase munitions of war as long as they were able to pay for the same. The representative of this Government when confronted with this statement and asked for an explanation, replied that it had always been the policy of practically every neutral nation to furnish any country engaged in war such supplies as they cared to purchase. It was shown that during the Boer War Germany not only supplied the Boers but at one time sold England 100 cannons. It was also shown during the Mexican trouble, when it looked as though the United States would have to deal with Huerta, that his army received supplies from Germany. I am sure that those posted on international law realized that the United States had remained neutral, yet it was necessary to have some good reason to incite the people's hatred against this country, and this method was very forcibly used. At the beginning of hostilities the United States, following the usual custom, asked to have the privilege of having military attachés accompany the German Army, in order that the modern methods used in warfare might be studied. We were finally allowed to have six officers attached to the German Army, but the treatment accorded them was so severe and insulting that it was only a little while until they were withdrawn. Every act of the military authorities proves their confidence in their ability to conquer the world, and it is very apparent that no efforts were made to keep peace with the United States.

DESTRUCTION OF COMMERCE.

On the 7th of May, 1915, the world was startled with the report that the gigantic passenger ship Lusitania had been torpedoed and sunk without warning by a German submarine, resulting in the death of more than 100 American citizens. This act was in direct contravention of the solemn warning previously given by our Government, and it shows that the military authorities of Germany had no respect for our treaties or international law. It was as cruel and shameless an act of murder as was ever perpetrated, and it proved to the world that Germany had already decided to put into effect a ruthless submarine campaign.

The records of our Government show that 19 American ships had been destroyed up to April 1, 1917, and that more than 225 American citizens had lost their lives. It shows that 425 neutral ships had been sunk and that thousands of lives of citizens of other countries had gone to a watery grave because of this death-dealing invention. Who is it will say that our country should submit to these atrocities? Did you know that we have some six and a half million farmers who depend on their labor and the products of the farm for a livelihood; that two-thirds of the exported wheat, five-sixths of pork, three-fourths of beef, and five-sixths of our cotton passes through the zone which Germany has said she would sink every ship entering same? If a condition of this kind is allowed to prevail and that time comes when we can not export the products of the American farmer, we have only to refer back to the beginning of this war to know the prices that were paid when shipowners refused to accept cargoes because of the submarine peril. Cotton sold in 1914 as low as 5 cents, broom corn as low as $30 per ton, and wheat as low as 70 cents per bushel. Ports of entry were congested with freight, railroads were blocked with traffic, and this condition was not cured until the United States Congress passed remedial legislation. The seas must be kept open, proper protection must be given the industries of this country. Ships must be built faster than they are being destroyed, and who is it can say that Germany has a right to destroy our commerce and at the same time bring about desolation and ruin to every producer in our country?

GERMAN ATROCITIES.

Germany, and her spies have done everything in their power to spread strife, discontent, and dissatisfaction among our people. Millions have been spent in the United States in an effort to educate our people to revolt against the Government. Bombs have been exploded in our Capitol. Officers of interned ships have violated their word of honor and escaped. German officials duly accredited to the United States have been detected in using fraudulent passports, to enable spies to enter and operate in foreign countries at peace with us. Counterfeit passports have been found on German agents. German officials have assisted in organizing forces to wreck bridges and destroy important industries. German officials have sought to control employment in the munition industries, thus crippling or destroying them wherever possible.

One of the greatest insults to the citizens of this country was the attempt to form an alliance with Japan and Mexico in order that the United States could be attacked on the south. Fortunately this note, under date of June 17, 1917, addressed to the officials of Mexico, was intercepted before it reached that country, and the contents of same show that Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico were offered on the altar as a prize if this coalition had been agreed to. The following is a copy of the communication:

ZIMMERMANN PLOT—SEEKING TO DISMEMBER REPUBLIC—GERMAN INTRIGUES TO INVOLVE THE UNITED STATES IN WAR WITH MEXICO AND JAPAN.

The Government of the United States is in possession of instructions addressed by the German minister for foreign affairs to the German minister to Mexico concerning a proposed alliance of Germany, Japan, and Mexico to make war on the United States. The text of this document is as follows:

BERLIN, January 19, 1917.

On the 1st of February we intend to begin submarine warfare unrestricted. In spite of this it is our intention to endeavor to keep neutral the United States of America.

If this attempt is not successful, we propose an alliance on the following basis with Mexico: That we shall make war together and together make peace. We shall give general financial support, and it is understood that Mexico is to reconquer the lost territory in New Mexico, Texas, and Arizona. The details are left to you for settlement.

You are instructed to inform the President of Mexico of the above in the greatest confidence as soon as it is certain there will be an outbreak of war with the United States, and suggest that the President of Mexico on his own initiative should communicate with Japan suggesting adherence at once to this plan; at the same time offer to mediate between Germany and Japan.

Please call to the attention of the President of Mexico that the employment of ruthless submarine warfare now promises to compel England to make peace in a few months.

(Signed) ZIMMERMANN.

In addition to the long list of atrocities on file in the Department of Justice, I want to call your attention to the conduct of the military authorities while occupying captured territory in Belgium. Everyone knows that a respectful civilized nation, even in time of war, pays some attention to the rules of international law. However, the reports that have come to my ears relative to the treatment of innocent women and children in captured territory under the German military authorities is so terrible that one could hardly believe that humanity could stoop so low. I have been told by persons who have seen service in the trenches that more than 25,000 infants have been taken away from Belgian mothers when 3 days old and sent back into Germany. It is only natural to ask why. But when you remember the statement published in this country, giving an account of a French mother killing her child because it had an unwelcome German father, you can understand that in order to replenish the population of Germany every precaution is taken to rear every child born.

In addition to the inhumane treatment given the defenseless citizens of Belgium, many were deported into the interior and there made to perform a class of labor that was intolerable. A very interesting collection of the proclamations issued by the German military authorities is now in the possession of Hodder & Stoughton, New York, N. Y., and the reading of these bear out the statements made as to the conditions existing in that country.

SEVERING OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS.

After the historical note was received which gave to the world the information that Germany, without regard to treaties or international law, would destroy every ship entering a certain zone, it was then forcibly brought home to the American people that the time had come to take such steps as would be necessary to protect the rights of our people. A few days ago, when the Japanese delegation was given a reception in the United States Senate, I heard Count Ishii make the statement that his country considered a treaty something more than a mere scrap of paper. This remark was cheered by the Senate and the gallery, as those present on that occasion realized that there was no other course to pursue, and the severing of diplomatic relations with Germany caused us to become an ally of those who were fighting for a principle.

Those in charge of the affairs of this country have never expressed a desire to increase our territory by the use of the sword. The United States has always been a haven of refuge for those who have been oppressed and persecuted in foreign countries. Our citizens have the right of free speech. They can worship God in any manner they choose. The right of a trial by a jury is accorded every man, and the principles of our Government have caused this country, in a few years, to rise from infancy to a position second to none in the estimation of the entire world.

Our past wars have been fought in the interest of humanity, and it is rather remarkable that April has been a momentous month in the history of our country. In April, 1775, the sturdy farmers of Lexington and Concord struck the first blow for liberty. In April, 1812, the Congress of the United States protested to England against the invasion of our rights on the sea. In April, 1898, we signed the decree declaring that Cuba should be free. In April, 1916, our great President made the first declaration to Germany, which, in my opinion, will result in the death knell to Prussianism.

During the discussion of the joint resolution which called for the severing of diplomatic relations with Germany, Chairman FITZGERALD, on the floor of the United States Congress, arose and pledged the resources of this Nation to the cause of the war in the following language:

I regret that we are to have war; but if we are to maintain our self-respect, if we are to encourage the cultivation and development of those virile and patriotic virtues among our citizens, without which our Government can not and should not survive, if we are not to become the laughing stock of mankind, mocked at and reviled by every other nation of the world, if we are not to be derided and sneered at as a Nation of degenerates, of money changers, and of cowards, is anything left to do consistent with a decent self-respect than to acknowledge the unquestioned fact that the German Government has waged war against us, to accept the challenge that has been so recklessly repeated in continued acts of war and aggression against us, and to meet it like and in the only manner befitting a great and a patriotic and a manly Nation?

I shall vote for the pending resolution. But more will be necessary. I am ready to pledge to the administration, in the words of the resolution, all of the resources of the country in order to bring this conflict to a successful termination.

OTHER PATRIOTIC STATEMENTS.

In the discussion of the joint resolution declaring this country in a state of war with Germany Congressman VARE, of Pennsylvania, made a very patriotic statement, in which he called attention to the fact that he represented a Republican district, which had given to Hon. C. E. Hughes some 40,000 majority at the last election, and that a few days ago 5,000 men marched behind the picture of Woodrow Wilson, testifying their loyalty to the President in this crisis. I think he and his people are to be commended for their loyalty and the eliminating of party lines when the interest of the entire country is at stake.

I represent in this House the most stalwart Republican district in this whole country, a district in what is known as the southern part of Philadelphia, which gave Charles E. Hughes nearly 40,000 Republican majority as candidate for President of the United States. Last Saturday a Republican club, of which I have the honor to be a member, paraded upon our streets, and 5,000 men marched behind a picture of Woodrow Wilson, testifying their loyalty to the President in this crisis. We have heard much about peace. We are all for peace. God grant it might be possible to secure it, but we are beyond that stage. Our country is in a state of war now, and we will be officially in a state of war to-morrow.

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same.

Whereas the Imperial German Government has committed repeated acts of war against the Government and the people of the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government which has thus been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial German Government; and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all of the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States.

Congressman LUNN, formerly elected as the Socialist mayor of the city of Schenectady, N. Y., now a Democrat, standing up as a patriot, urging and fighting as never a man fought before for the adoption of this resolution, used the following language in the support of same:

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, after eight years in which I have gone up and down this country talking against war, being opposed to war under any form or for any reason when after that position a man can come to the place where he is willing to admit that there are occasions when war is the only arbitrament and makes that decision, it takes as great or greater courage than it would take at this time to vote against this resolution. I say that it would be easier for me a thousand times to vote "no" than to vote "aye."

But, Mr. Chairman, we are facing the greatest national crisis in our history, and we have only two ways open to us. One is to accept a war thrust upon us by the repeated aggressions of a power which recognizes no law but its own imperial will. The other is to defeat the resolution and adopt the policy of absolute submission.

The latter course to my mind is unthinkable. We simply can not and must not submit. Let anyone on the other side persuade me that we can preserve our principles, that we can stand by the ideals of our fathers and not forfeit anything in the way of national honor or sacrifice the principles of democracy in government, and I will vote "no," because I do not want to vote "yes."

Over in the Senate we have other stalwart, strong Republicans who realized this was not a matter of politics, but the time when every patriotic citizen should do his duty toward the country, and probably one of the strongest statements ever made in the United States Congress was that by Senator SMITH of Michigan, in which he used the following language:

If any Senator had told me a year ago that our country would to-day be involved in the European war I would have thought him a madman. At no period in this discussion have I, by word or act, encouraged the present deplorable situation. I have been the critic of the President many times. I have disagreed with him in almost everything he has done since he became the official head of our Government. Perhaps I have been wrong and the President has been right; but, Mr. President, from this moment I bow in loyalty to the President of the United States, and never again, while this burden rests upon him, will I lay even a feather's weight upon his shoulders. He is carrying our burden for us and I pray God to give him strength to bear it; he has responsibilities enough; and he understands the delicacy and the importance of our country's position better than we do. The fathers of the Republic specially enjoined upon him the conduct of our foreign affairs. Henceforth with me politics and factionalism, discord and sectionalism, will be strangers to my public code, while my heart shall beat responsive to his every need.

When President Wilson came before the United States Congress it was known that one of the greatest moments in the history of the entire Nation was at hand. He had struggled patiently for over two years trying to avoid difficulties with those countries across the sea. He knew the time had arrived when the rights of the American people had to be protected, and he advised Congress to—declare the recent course of the Imperial German Government to be in fact nothing less than war against the Government and people of the United States.

Not only was this recommendation made, but the President began his message with the following sentence:

I have called the Congress into extraordinary session because there are serious, very serious, choices of policy to be made, and made immediately, which it was neither right nor constitutionally permissible that I should assume the responsibility of making.

In giving an account of the grievances against Germany, the President used the following words in declaring the position of the United States:

There is one choice we can not make—we are incapable of making—we will not choose the path of submission and suffer the most sacred rights of our Nation and our people to be ignored or violated.

The feasibility of passing this resolution was discussed from every angle. Every event that had transpired for the past two years was carefully reviewed, and when it was found that there was no other step to take and the roll was called there were 373 yeas and 50 nays in the House and 86 yeas and 6 nays in the Senate. I do not see how any man who will take the time to ascertain all of the facts on both sides of the question can successfully defend the attitude of Germany in her violation of treaties and international law. I do not see how any person can point out any other course that this Nation could have taken under the circumstances. I know that every person who is posted on this question will realize that our President has done that which he thought best for the people of this country, and inasmuch as he is our leader—the Commander in Chief of the Army—I have felt it was my duty to stand with him and support such legislation as he has asked for in behalf of the American people.

OUR ALLIES.

Soon after diplomatic relations were severed with Germany our allies sent to the United States commissions in order that the representatives of our Government might know the actual conditions that existed with relation to the war. When it was learned that the submarine warfare had wrought terrific havoc in shipping circles and that the food supply was not sufficient to maintain the army for a much longer period, the positive statement can be made that, unless some country had stepped in and brought assistance, it would have been possible for Germany to have won the war. I remember I happened to be present at the Union Station when the Hon. Arthur Balfour, heading the British delegation, arrived in the city of Washington. Hundreds of people were lined up to see the representative of our mother country.

It was not a gala event, for they came as a representative of a people bent with care and sorrow. Then the French delegation came to this country, headed by Gen. Joffre, the grand old patriot of France, the hero of the battle of the Marne, and the man who stopped the onward rush of the Germans and saved the city of Paris. He told our President a wonderful story of the sacrifices made by his people. We remembered our struggle for existence and knew that had it not been for France the Stars and Stripes would not have been waving over this country to-day. We could not see the Germans win this war, so it was decided to loan the allies a sufficient amount of money to be expended in this country for supplies so that they could carry on the struggle until we could prepare an army to assist them across the sea.

More than 20 nations are to-day banded together to destroy Prussianism so that peace can reign forever in the world. One billion people are on the side of the allies; 140,000,000 million are with Germany and the central powers. There can be but one solution to the problem, and that will be the destruction of the Hohenzollerns and the Hapsburgs, the reigning dominant factions responsible for this terrible conflagration.

SELECTIVE DRAFT.

The foreign representatives of the various governments visiting this country convinced the United States that men must be had to win the war. For a period of over a year the enlistment stations throughout the country had sought to secure volunteers for the Army. The President had made it known to the 100,000,000 people living in this country that a certain number of men were desired for this purpose. Response was slow. Something had to be done, as, according to the way men were being obtained, it would have taken more than three years to collect an army of a million men. The Committee on Military Affairs found that we had less than 200,000 trained fighting men at the beginning of the war. It was absolutely necessary that some more effective plan be worked out so as to enable this country to be in a position to protect itself. Finally a bill was reported to the United States Congress which would require every person of a certain age to be subject to military duty. When this legislation was first presented I was of the opinion that the volunteer plan would produce the proper results, but when I examined into the facts I found that a sufficient emergency existed that something must be done to provide an army at once. I do not believe that any question ever confronted any legislative body in the history of the world which has caused as much discussion and as much anxiety in the hearts of the Members of Congress as this one particular subject. I find, upon making investigation, that certain authorities are bold in making the statement that the progress of this country had been seriously retarded because of the methods used in training our armies in the past. In support of this statement I wish to read a few facts which show that if the United States had had a compulsory military system in the War of 1812 that Canada to-day might have been a part of the United States:

In October, 1812, a body of troops, less than 1,000 in number, crossed the St. Lawrence River to attack a British force. An engagement took place, which would have resulted in a victory for the Americans had the militia on the New York side of the river crossed to their aid. What was the result? Let McMaster, the historian, tell the story:

"No sooner did the militia behold a real battle, no sooner did they see the dead brought back in the boats and hear the groans of the wounded, than fear overcame them and they refused to cross. Soldiers who the day before were clamorous to be brought face to face with what they called the British hirelings now stood on their constitutional rights and refused to help their countrymen. They were, they said, militia, and the only services for which the militia could be called out were to uphold the laws, to put down insurrection, to repel invasion. The Constitution did not give the President power to send them out of the United States, and they would not go.

"Holding such views, they stood quietly on the American side, saw the British gather in force and march up the hill, saw their countrymen, overwhelmed by numbers, driven back foot by foot to the edge of the cliff and down the side of the river bank, where, as no one would row a boat across, the little band of 600 threw down their arms and surrendered. With them were captured some 300 skulkers and cowards, who had been crouching at the river edge all day."

I also desire to call your attention to the fact that if compulsory military training and equal liability for service had been in effect when Gen. Scott made his expedition into Mexico it would not have been necessary for him to wait for volunteers, and it is the opinion of the best authorities that Mexico would to-day be a part of the United States.

Concerning the War with Mexico, let us quote from a modern writer, who, after commenting upon some early successes of our arms, says:

"About one month later at Pueblo, his [Gen. Scott's] progress came to a sudden halt because the terms of enlistment of 7 out of his 11 best regiments were on the eve of expiring, and Scott discovered that most of the men intended to exercise the alternative offered to them upon enlistment, and to terminate their services at the end of 12 months. In the midst of a hostile country and only three days' march from the capital, with virtually no enemy to oppose him, Scott was unable to budge for more than three months until he had been joined by reinforcements—all of them raw by comparison with the troops which had left him. For three months his situation was very precarious, and it was only good luck that averted a calamity. When he did fight his way into Mexico, in August, 1847, it was at a loss for which there was no justification."

We have another interesting account of the inefficiency of a volunteer army when those charged with the responsibility of defending the Capital in 1812 shamefully fled at the approach of the British and allowed our Capitol to be destroyed by fire.

Concerning the lamentable happenings in and about Washington in 1813 we need say little. It is a black page in American history. The Volunteer Army defending the city was routed with a loss of only 8 killed and 11 wounded. The Capitol was destroyed and the White House was sacked. The invading forces, it is said, comprised only 1,500 British troops.

So much for the "efficiency" of the volunteer system in the War of 1812!

WASHINGTON, JEFFERSON, AND OTHERS ON THE DRAFT.

Washington, Jefferson, Lee, Davis, Lincoln, and practically all of those who have played an important part in the making of history in this country have been in favor of every person being subject to perform equal military service. Ex-President Roosevelt, ex-President Taft, Gen. Wood, the Secretary of War, the present administration, and the governors of practically every State in the Union favor the selective-draft plan for raising an army. All of our adjutant generals and all of those posted on military affairs come forward with the statement that to have an efficient fighting army they must be properly trained, and to bring this about a sufficient number of men must be made available at the earliest moment possible. Under the old volunteer system the best citizens of the nations always went forward when the country was in need. The loafer, the transient, and the slacker always remained behind. The rich in the past have been able to secure substitutes, but the new law is so worded as to cause every person, regardless of his position in life, to perform when selected equal service for the Nation, conditioned that those who are needed to keep up certain industries and who have dependents may be exempted. After taking into consideration the unprepared condition of the United States and the emergency that was confronting our citizens, I felt that it was my duty to follow Woodrow Wilson and vote for a law that would put our boys on the same plane with the sons of the millionaire.

On October 22, 1780, Washington made the following statement relative to the military condition in the United States:

If we mean to continue our struggle, we must do it upon an entirely new plan. We must have a permanent force, not a force that is constantly fluctuating and sliding from under us, as a pedestal of ice would do from a statue on a summer's day, involving us in expense that baffles calculation—an expense which no funds are equal to. It is idle to suppose that raw and undisciplined men are fit to oppose regular troops.

In March, 1781, Thomas Jefferson indorsed compulsory military service. In a letter written by him in 1813 he made the following statement on this subject:

I think the truth must be obvious that our people are too happy at home to enter into a regular military service, and that we can not be defended but by making every citizen a soldier, as the Greeks and Romans, who had no standing army; that do do this all must be marshaled, classed by their ages, and every service ascribed to its competent class.

Jefferson Davis, President of the Southern Confederacy, was in favor of the compulsory military service, and during the war with the States the entire army was converted into the service by one legislative act. The southern soldiers enlisted for a period of one year. It was thought that this would be a sufficient time to defeat the Northern States, and had it not been that they were selected to perform military service by a legislative act their terms of enlistment would have expired and the war would have ended. The brave southern soldiers who fought under that great general, the gallant Lee, were those who were drafted into service. The following statement describes the conditions at that time:

A month more, or two months at the furthest, and the gigantic Rebellion, organized to establish the sovereignty and independence of the States, would be a thing of the past, its leaders fleeing from the wrath of a loyal and outraged people. The situation was desperate; the crisis had arrived: the triumph of the Union was at hand.

At this juncture it was reserved for a Confederate Congress to explain for all time the meaning and extent of the power to raise and support armies. Appalled, but not unmanned, it rose to the occasion and setting an example that was followed a year later by the National Congress, resolved to meet the emergency by declaring every man between the ages of 18 and 35 a soldier. Had it been the object of the law to force reluctant citizens into the ranks, the experiment might not have seemed hazardous, but going far beyond, to conscript armies numbering more than 100,000 soldiers who had faithfully fulfilled their engagements and were already turning their affections homeward, the temerity of this legislation finds no parallel in the history of the world. But the end justified the means; the reorganization which was languishing was immediately completed; the ranks were filled up and given the strength of increasing numbers; the Confederate armies again took the field to baffle and resist the onset of the Union hosts until, dwindling to the former shadows of themselves, they were finally compelled to lay down their arms at Appomattox Court House.

Within a year after the Confederacy had declared every man of a certain age liable for military duty the Federal Government was likewise forced to resort to this method, and Abraham Lincoln made the following statement in this connection:

The republican institutions and territorial integrity of our country can not be maintained without the further raising and supporting of armies. There can be no army without men. Men can be had only voluntarily or involuntarily. We have ceased to obtain them voluntarily, and to obtain them involuntarily is to draft—the conscription. If you dispute this fact and declare that men can still be had voluntarily in sufficient numbers, prove the assertion by yourselves volunteering in such numbers, and I shall gladly give up the draft. Or if not a sufficient number but any one of you will volunteer, he for his single self will escape all the horrors of the draft and will thereby do only what each one of at least a million of his manly brethren have already done. Their toil and blood have been given as much for you as for themselves. Shall it all be lost rather than that you, too, will bear your part?

REFERENDUM.

Since I have been in Washington several communications have been received by me in favor of allowing the people of this country to vote as to whether or not we should engage in the present war. I am of the opinion that a propaganda of this kind must have been started by individuals who were not posted as to the international situation, or those who would prefer some other government to take over the reins of this country. Prior to voting on this legislation I endeavored to find out the true conditions that existed in my congressional district, as I wanted the people to be informed as to the provisions of this bill. I am pleased to say that out of more than 100 telegrams received, all of them, with the exception of 5, strongly urged that I stand with the President by voting for such legislation as would cause the rich as well as the poor to do their part in protecting our country. There are those who always seek to delay every good movement. There are those who feel that we can defeat any country on earth without making any preparation. We have in Washington a War College, which seeks to obtain and furnish information as to the relative strength of the various countries.

According to a recent report made by this institution, it is said that England and Japan could land in the United States 2,750,000 men in 45 days. When it is taken into consideration that prior to the beginning of this war we had less than 200,000 trained soldiers, it can be readily seen that it was up to this country to make such preparation as was necessary to give to the American people the proper protection. Everyone knows that a short time ago a German submarine entered the port of Baltimore; later another entered the port of New York, and in coming out sunk six or seven ships of the allies, turned its nose down into the sea, and was heard of no more. I merely call your attention to this to show you that if it was possible for a German submarine to cross the sea in time of peace that it would be possible for the same thing to happen in time of war. If the United States did not make special preparation, then it would be possible for the enemy by concerted action to capture or destroy practically all of the seaports of this country, and an army could be landed before it would be possible to send out literature and put into operation such machinery as would be necessary to conduct a referendum for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the people as to whether or not we should enter this war. I want to call your attention to a condition that existed in 1863, when the governor of New Jersey asked President Lincoln to postpone the draft; also a letter of Gov. Seymour's, asking that it be postponed until the constitutionality of the law could be decided. In other words, they wanted to bring forward a subterfuge, something to delay, just as a referendum would do at this time. But President Lincoln, that great statesman and patriot, replied in the following language:

I do not object to abide a decision of the United States Supreme Court, or of the judges thereof, on the constitutionality of the draft law. In fact, I should be willing to facilitate the obtaining of it, but I can not consent to lose the time while it is being obtained. We are contending with an enemy, who, as I understand, drives every able-bodied man he can reach into his ranks, very much as a butcher drives bullocks into a slaughter pen. No time is wasted, no argument is used. This produces an army which will soon turn upon our now victorious soldiers, already in the field, if they shall not be sustained by recruits as they should be. It produces an army with a rapidity not to be matched on our side, if we first waste time to reexperiment with the volunteer system already deemed by Congress, and palpably, in fact, so far exhausted as to be inadequate, and then more time to obtain a court decision as to whether a law is constitutional which requires a part of those not now in the service to go to the aid of those who are already in it, and still more time to determine with absolute certainty that we get those who are to go in the precisely legal proportion to those who are not to go. My purpose is to be in my action just and constitutional, and yet practical, in performing the important duty with which I am charged, of maintaining the unity and the free principles of our common country.

Your obedient servant,

A. LINCOLN.

It is true that many will now be called on to make sacrifices, but the history of our country shows some wonderful examples of patriotism, none of which, in my opinion, shows any more loyalty than the mother who gave five sons to the Union. Lincoln, the great martyred President, wrote her as follows. It is dated Executive Mansion, Washington, November 21, 1864, and is written to Mrs. Bixby, Boston, Mass.

DEAR MADAM: I have been shown in the files of the War Department a statement of the adjutant general of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who have died gloriously on the field of battle. I feel how weak and fruitless must be any word of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming. But I can not refrain from tendering you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save. I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom.

Yours, very sincerely and respectfully,

A. LINCOLN.

Why should that mother in New England have been permitted to make such a sacrifice to the Republic while somebody living near her probably made no sacrifice at all? Under the selective-draft system advocated by the administration that would not be possible; and it ought not to be possible in these days. [Applause.] Why should these five men have been allowed to do the fighting for shirkers and cowards who refused to volunteer? [Applause.]

ENEMIES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

The history of this country shows that in every struggle in the interest of humanity there have been those who sought to give aid to the enemy. There are those who do everything in their power to spread discontent and strife. There are those who quietly spread seditious statements, and I find we have at this time an element of people who are enemies of our Government and who prefer to censure and criticize those who are doing that which they think best for all of the people. Instigators of riots and disturbances throughout the country always give comfort to the enemy, and one of the truest statements ever made in this connection is as follows:

Tell the traitors all around you that their cruel words, we know, In every battle kill our soldiers, by the aid they give the foe.

In my State a movement was launched to oppose the Federal authorities by resisting the selective-draft plan for raising an army. It was found that those at the head of this movement did not represent the representative citizens of the community in which they resided, but on the other hand they were those who were affiliated with certain organizations which opposed the Government and all of its functions. I am very happy that the Federal authorities have acted promptly and that those who came into Oklahoma for the purpose of starting a movement of this kind have been apprehended and no doubt will receive their just reward. It is impossible for a person to carry water on both shoulders. He must either stand loyally behind our President, the Commander in Chief of the Army, or he will oppose the administration in its present program. The person who is guilty of spreading seditious criticisms in time of war is a more dangerous citizen than the rankest anarchist. The man who quietly spreads dissatisfaction and discord is more dangerous than the deserter who leaves the Army in the midst of the night. The man who prefers that some other flag wave over this land has no right to the privileges of this Government and should be ostracized to some foreign land. During the Civil War our great martyred President Lincoln made a wonderful statement in this connection, in which he compared a soldier boy who had deserted with the public agitator, who was trying to work up sentiment against the administration, in the following language:

Must I shoot a simple-minded soldier boy who deserts, while I must not touch a hair of a wily agitator who induces him to desert? This is none the less injurious when effected by getting a father or brother or friend into a public meeting and there working upon his feelings till he is persuaded to write the soldier boy that he is fighting in a bad cause for a wicked administration of a contemptible Government, too weak to arrest and punish him if he shall desert. I think that in such a case to silence the agitator and save the boy is not only constitutional but withal a great mercy.

THE FOOD BILL.

When Herbert C. Hoover, director of the food supply of this country, was in charge of the American commission for relief in Belgium he gave out an interview which was published in the New York Tribune, under date of April 22, 1917, in which he stated that "the food situation is one of the utmost gravity, which unless solved may cause us to loose the war; that if America continued its present rate of consumption the total stock of food in the allied world is not sufficient to last until September; that the allies will need a minimum of 90,000,000 bushels of wheat from North America, more than twice the apparent surplus on a normal export basis." This statement to the American people was made at a very opportune time for it caused the people to realize that certain sacrifices must be made if the United States was to do its part in the war. A very unfortunate condition was brought about by the hoarding and the forming of combinations by food speculators, who, realizing that the opportunity to make enormous profits was at hand, brought about a condition in this country which made this legislation absolutely necessary. The food bill in substance contains the following:

Gives the President control over the foods, feeds, fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas, fertilizer ingredients, farm machinery and tools.

Allows the President to license business and plants and to revoke these licenses, farmers and stock raisers being exempt from this section.

Authorizes and empowers the President through the Federal Trade Commission to control, take over, and operate coal and coke mines, and to fix the price.

Directs the President, when an emergency exists, to fix a minimum price of wheat, making the minimum $2 for No. 1 northern for the 1918 crop, and allows him to enhance the duty on foreign wheat to bring it to the American price.

Prevents the use of foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the manufacture of distilled spirits and allows the President to limit the alcoholic contents of malt or vinous liquors.

Authorizes and directs the President to commandeer distilled spirits as far as necessary for war use, the courts to determine the price.

Directs the President to spend $10,000,000 for nitrates and sell them to farmers at cost.

Prevents members of the advisory committee on the Council of National Defense from participating in Government contracts.

Punishes hoarding and destruction of foodstuffs and speculation.

Allows the President to close grain exchanges, boards of trade, etc., in order to prevent speculation.

Authorizes the President to requisition supplies for the Army and the Navy.

Authorizes him to buy, store, and sell wheat, flour, meat, beans, and potatoes.

Allows him to take over factories, packing houses, pipe lines, mines, or other plants and operate them.

The sum of $2,500,000 is provided for running expenses and $150,000,000 to carry out the work of the whole food administration. The food control ceases at the expiration of the war.

WHEAT AND FLOUR.

The people of the United States consume about 600,000,000 bushels of wheat, in addition to the amount of rye which is used in making bread. The allies expect to import 600,000,000 bushels for their use during the present year. The crop reports show that the condition of the wheat crops is such that the yield for the present year will be lower than the average. This being the case, conservation in the use of flour has become necessary, and the food dictator has already performed great service in bringing this to the minds of the American people. In the food bill a price of $2 per bushel for wheat was set for the crop of 1918. A committee composed of those representing the various occupations was appointed for the purpose of fixing the price for this year's crop, and after carefully considering every phase of the situation it was agreed that $2.20 would be just to the producer and the consumer. It is absolutely impossible to adjudicate any proposition so as to meet the approbation of all of those interested; however, when you take into consideration that there are some six and one-half million farmers in this country, all of whom do not raise wheat, and some 20,000,000 laborers, all of whom use wheat, then it can be readily seen that inasmuch as the average price of wheat for the past 20 years has been less than 90 cents per bushel, those charged with this responsibility took into consideration the demands made on them by the consumers as well as the producers. I am, indeed, pleased that the farmers of our country are given this protection, as if the 20,000,000 laborers could have had their way we would only be receiving to-day a price of $1.86, as this is the approximate figure agreed on by those representing the labor interests. It is Mr. Hoover's desire to bring the price of flour down so that the people can have a 5-cent loaf of bread, and while this may not be possible, yet the adjudication of the price of wheat will, in the opinion of those who are posted on economic conditions, bring great relief to the majority of the people.

GRAIN FOR LIQUORS.

A great deal of discussion has been made as to whether or not it would be wise to prohibit the use of grain in the manufacture of liquors. I have studied this proposition and I find that more than 110,000,000 bushels of grain, 450,000,000 pounds of grapes, and 152,000,000 pounds of molasses are used each year in the production of alcoholic beverages. This makes a total of 7,500,000,000 pounds of food used in this manner, and it is estimated that this amount is sufficient to supply a 1-pound loaf of bread every day to an army of 11,000,000 men. I do not see how any man can successfully argue that we should in time of peril allow this amount of food to be diverted into channels which do not produce any real good. I believe that every person who desires the opportunity of taking a drink will be willing to make a patriotic sacrifice in order that food may be supplied to the needy, and I am very glad that the United States Congress has delegated a sufficient amount of authority to the Commander in Chief of the Army to regulate the use of grain in the manufacture of light beverages; also has prohibited the use of grains in the manufacture of whisky after the 8th of September, this year.

SPECULATION IN FOODSTUFFS.

One of the greatest evils allowed to remain in this free country is the privilege to speculate and gamble in the different commodities of life. I can not see why there is not a sufficient amount of public opinion in this country to bring about legislation that will absolutely prohibit this kind of speculation. On May 16, 1917, I introduced a bill to prohibit gambling in grain and food products, which was brought to the attention of those in charge of the food legislation, and I am constrained to believe that they saw the necessity for this kind of regulation, for included in this new law is a section which gives authority to the President to regulate conditions of this kind. It will probably be interesting to you to know that Mr. Leiter, who became famous because of the corner he was successful in obtaining on wheat some years ago, has made a statement which was published in the Washington Times, May 12, 1917, which reads as follows:

"I can not imagine a more treasonable, unprincipled thing than for an American citizen to speculate in any grains or foodstuffs at this time," said Mr. Leiter. "The action of the Chicago Board of Trade in stopping all trading in wheat futures should have been taken months ago."

"Similar action should be voluntarily applied by every exchange in the country on which there is any kind or form of speculation in foodstuffs."

"As for myself, I haven't turned a speculative penny in the grain market—one way or the other—in 17 years. I did my last operations of that nature in 1900."

"There ought to be a law providing for hanging high any man who speculates in food products of any kind at this precarious time."

I am sure there is not a single person in the hearing of my voice but will say that his statements are correct, and that my action in introducing a bill along this line was proper, and that the authority for regulation in the food bill will produce good results.

SAVING OF FOODSTUFFS.

The saving of 1 pound of bread per week for each person, according to Mr. Hoover, will increase the export supply of wheat 100,000,000 bushels per year, and that 100,000,000 bushels of wheat may win the war. The problem of properly feeding our allies in order to keep their armies going and to assure satisfaction back of the lines is stupendous. The population of England is 45,000,000; of France, 40,000,000; Italy, 35,000,000; and Belgium, 10,000,000; a total of 130,000,000 men, women, and children who are practically dependent on the United States for certain necessities of life. The bulk of the foodstuffs for this tremendous population, aside from the local productions, in the past came from Argentina, Australia, India, Russia, Roumania, and Bulgaria. All of these resources of supply are practically cut off because of crop failures and embargoes of the various countries involved in the present war. The price of practically everything that is used in the production of food has likewise increased. Wire shows an increase of 100 per cent; binder twine, 100 per cent; cultivators, 100 per cent; iron and help, 68 per cent; steel, sold before the war at $30 per ton, now sells for $130. In addition to this the prices of various foodstuffs have increased from 10 per cent to 300 per cent. Because of war conditions certain manufacturers and corporations in this country, who have no regard for anything or anybody, have formed unholy alliances and raised the prices of the necessities of life to a figure that is unreasonable and incomparable.

I am so pleased that Mr. Hoover has collected around him good, strong, patriotic men who are willing to give their time without pay for the purpose of performing this kind of service, and already steps have been taken to destroy certain of those monopolies. As an illustration of what has transpired in the past, a few days ago the Federal authorities in Boston indicted and fined 80 corporations and individuals on the charge that they had conspired to monopolize the price of onions. Evidence showed that the annual crop is 200,000,000 pounds, and that the defense had gobbled up 75 per cent of this crop. They held the supply, raised the prices, and then, in order to eliminate opposition so they could better rob the people, divided the profits. The mere finding of these tyrants, in my opinion, is too light. I think they should be placed behind the walls of the Federal prison for a sufficient length of time as to put the fear of God in the hearts of those who are acting in a like capacity.

FINANCES.

At the beginning of the extraordinary session, when the United States severed diplomatic relations with Germany, it was found absolutely necessary that this country loan to the allies money in order that they might purchase such supplies as were necessary to successfully carry on the war. We all know that our country is the richest on the globe. Our bank deposits are more than the combined deposits of England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Italy, and several other small European countries. The comparison of the actual condition of our allies and our country show that they had competent, efficient, trained armies, while with us we had an abundance of wealth but few fighting men. This being the case it was thought far better to furnish the allies the kind of aid we were in a position to give, and at the beginning of this session we authorized our Government to issue $7,000,000,000 of bonds. This is the largest authorization that was ever made by any Government. However, there was such an emergency existing that there was not a single vote against this legislation, either in the House or the Senate. Apparently this legislation received the approval of the entire American people, for when the news was sent out that a $2,000,000,000 issue would be offered for sale on a certain day the people rose up and with outstretched arms embraced the opportunity of rendering loyal and patriotic aid to the Government in the time of need. I have not the exact figures as to the amount this issue was oversubscribed, but it is generally known that the response made to this call by the Government was the greatest demonstration of patriotism ever made from a financial standpoint. Later on as the war progressed it was found that the expenditures made by this country would call for a great deal more money, and a new authorization was made, which provides that a bond issue of $11,000,000,000 may be issued and sold for the purpose of furnishing funds to carry on the war. Inasmuch as this legislation repeals the authority for the issuing of $5,000,000,000 authorized at the beginning of this session in reality this authorization is only for $6,000,000,000. Occasionally I receive communications from some well-meaning citizens asking why it is necessary for our country to spend so much money. This can be very easily understood when it is known that the allies, prior to the time the United States entered the war, were practically down on their knees and defeated. The submarine warfare conducted by Germany had reached enormous proportions. Ships were sunk faster than they could be constructed, insurance rates had increased in leaps and bounds, until many countries considered commerce on the sea practically prohibited.

CONSCRIPTION OF WEALTH.

Those publications which seek to poison the minds of the American people, those who take pleasure in issuing seditious statements, have said that this was a rich man's war and a poor man's fight. A greater untruth was never heralded to the public, for in this struggle we are fighting for the interest of humanity. We are fighting because we wish to give protection to our posterity; we are fighting because we do not wish to see a military oligarchy control the world; we are fighting to protect the Monroe doctrine and international law. We are not fighting for indemnities; we are not fighting for additional territory, and when this fight is over and peace has been restored a sufficient object lesson will be taught to civilization so that, in my opinion, the people never again will be called on to participate in a world's war. This great struggle will cost enormous sums of money. I have figured that the more fortunate in life should be called on to pay the greatest amount toward maintaining our Government during this struggle. Before any legislation was adopted along this line I addressed a communication to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in which I made certain statements relative to this matter. This was given wide publicity and the following statement was carried in the daily Oklahoman, which expressed my view on this subject:

I feel that the tax on excess profits should be very much increased; that the tax on incomes should be raised on a graduated scale so as to make this item take care of the major portion of the expenditures necessary to successfully carry on the war. A proper tax should be levied on the luxuries of life, and the inheritance tax can be increased without working a hardship on any person.

Legislation has been passed providing for the conscription of men in order to preserve this Nation. If a sufficient emergency exists to make it right to conscript humanity, who is it can say it is wrong under the same conditions to conscript wealth? I hope your committee will propose such legislation as will result in properly equalizing conditions in this country so that in the event of a long-drawn-out war, we can emerge from same with the realization that the wealth of this country has gone hand in hand with the rank and file in doing its part.

Enormous profits are being made by large corporations; they should be sufficiently patriotic to be willing to do their part. Examine this list of names and note the profits made in 1916. Who is it can say that it is wrong to shoulder the greater part of the cost on their shoulders?

SOLDIERS' INSURANCE.

Some time ago my attention was called to an article published in one of the local papers, which gave an account of the wearing apparel and the many conveniences furnished the soldiers of the new Army. The statement was made that some of them were given much more than they were used to at their homes and that it would take them some time to get accustomed to the luxurious change. The United States Government never does anything by halves. It is the intention of those in charge of our affairs to give every protection possible, not only to the soldier, but to those who are dependent on him for a livelihood, and during this war new legislation providing for soldiers' insurance has been passed, thus enabling every soldier and sailor to take out a Government insurance policy at a cost less than one-half that charged by the old-time insurance companies. It will furnish protection to his dependents in case he is injured or killed. This legislation is said to be more equitable than the old system of pensions. It is arranged so that a graduate scale of pay comes to the dependent person, child or parents, each month, and a sufficient amount is allowed so as to keep the wolf away from the door. I think this is one of the most important bills ever passed by any Congress. To a certain extent it will do away with the old system of pensions and at the same time it will give every soldier an opportunity to make provision for those who depend on him for a livelihood in after years. The following statement covers the general provisions of the law as it passed the House of Representatives:

Financial help is given the Nation's defenders under three headings: First. Direct payments to dependents up to $50 a month while the breadwinner is at the front.

Second. A lifelong pension to every man injured or diseased in service, or to the dependents of a man killed.

Third. A life insurance policy, far below cost, to every man.

FAMILY AID PLAN.

Under family aid, the following payments are to be made by the Government:

To a wife, $15 a month; with one child, $25; with two children, $32.50; each additional child, $5.

To a motherless child, $5 a month; two children, $12.50; three, $20; four, $30; each additional child, $5.

One parent, $10; two, $20; for each dependent brother, sister, or grandchild, $5.

To insure this Government aid to his family the soldier must pay $15 a month to their support himself. A divorced wife will not be paid to exceed her alimony.

For the soldier who is killed, or incapacitated for work by injury or disease, these payments are guaranteed for life:

DEATH ALLOWANCES.

In case of death: To widow, $30 a month; with one child, $40; with two children, $50, and $5 for each additional child. To motherless child, $15; two children, $25; three, $35, and $10 for each additional child until they are 18. To widowed mother, $25.

Total disability: To single man, $40 a month; with wife, $55; wife and one child, $65; with two or more children, $75; with one motherless child, $50; for each additional child, $10. If there is also a widowed mother, $20 a month goes to her; if a nurse or attendant is required, $30 a month additional.

Partial disability: Amounts proportionate to those given for total disability, according to the seriousness of the injury.

PROVISION FOR TRADE ACQUIRING.

Men in this class may go to a school, on their regular soldier's salary, and learn trades at which they can work.

If they die from the injury after leaving the Army, funeral expenses of $100 will be paid.

The insurance section of the bill entitles a man to take out life insurance up to $10,000 a year, at $8 a year. This may be paid by the man or his named beneficiaries.

CROSSING THE SEA.

The President of the United States has said to the Navy Department that every protection possible must be taken in carrying our soldiers across the sea. He is determined that the German submarines shall not cause a single life to be lost, and to be successful in this every available ship is being used to convoy our vessels. During the first voyage five submarines attempted to destroy and sink the ships carrying the soldiers. But thanks to his wisdom in causing certain preparations to be made, it was not possible for this to be done, and it is believed by those in charge of this squadron that three of these submarines were sent to a watery grave. In a conversation I had a few days ago with a well-posted Member of Congress the statement was made that it was absolutely impossible for German submarines ever to reach the ships carrying our soldiers, and when it is understood that we have a small mosquito fleet, armed with fast machine guns, practically surrounding the ships carrying our soldiers, and between this mosquito fleet and the ships we have torpedo destroyers, it makes it practically impossible for a submarine to approach close enough to fire a torpedo with any degree of accuracy. I am very happy that every precaution possible is being taken to bring about this kind of a result, and I am hoping that, if it becomes necessary to send our boys who live here in our midst across the sea, they can be landed on the shores of our allies without the loss of a single life.

AEROPLANES.

It has been my privilege to know and converse with that noted Frenchman who was given the name of the "Blue Devil of France" because he had been the victor of more than a score of duels fought thousands of feet in the air. When it is taken into consideration that trench warfare has superseded practically all other methods it can be easily understood why the necessity of having a well-equipped aeroplane squadron. The battle lines between the central powers and the allies have not changed to any marked degree. Some new method or contrivance of war must be used before the present struggle can be brought to an end. It is believed by the highest authorities that the solution of the present world's war will be given to that nation who is able to furnish a superior aero squadron in sufficient numbers to destroy the opposing forces. We have appropriated a sufficient amount of money to build 10,000 flying fighting machines. We have established training camps at different places in the United States, and every ounce of energy possible is being put forth to train our aviators. When the supreme test comes we hope to be ready with this branch of the service, in order that peace may be soon restored to the world.

WAR MUST BE WON.

If Germany and the central powers could win this war; then take Canada, on our north; then go down and take Mexico, which is torn asunder with international strife; then, with her submarines on the Atlantic coast and her armies on the north and south of us, we would be brought face to face with a trench warfare and a marine warfare that would call practically every man of fighting age into service. If that condition should be brought about, then it will not be those between the ages of 21 and 31 that would be called on to fight our battles, but it might be necessary to call every boy and man between the ages of 17 and 50 to shoulder a gun in defense of this Nation, and we would fight a war such as has never been fought before.

I am proud to stand under the banner with Woodrow Wilson. He has been criticized because he did not declare war on Mexico. But who now can say he was wrong? He has been criticized because the United States did not rush into the present war more than one year ago, but his far-seeing eye, his cool, deliberate judgment has caused him to weigh all things well before taking action, and every student of the present time now heralds him as one of the greatest defenders of the rights of the people. He is as kind as the kindest, as loyal as the most loyal, as strong as the strongest, and as brave as the bravest. No more conscientious person ever administered the affairs of any Government. His eloquent messages to the people, his words of wisdom to the enemy, and his utterances to the American Congress will go down in history as the greatest appeals ever made in the interest of humanity. [Applause.]

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of John P. Kinman (H. R. 7022, 64th Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HULBERT, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely.

REQUEST TO ADDRESS HOUSE.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Florida state upon what topic he wishes to speak?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman will know that when I speak.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

WAR CREDITS—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 156).

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the conference report on the bill H. R. 5901, the bond bill, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee presents the conference report on the bill H. R. 5901, and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, which I shall not do, in view of the fact that the conference report has not been printed, and in view of the further fact that none of the Members have copies, I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he give the House briefly a statement as to the effect of the conference report and what are the changes made in the bill as it passed the House. I think we ought to have a brief statement of that kind for the RECORD, in view of the fact that there is no printed report in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming object?

Mr. MONDELL. No, Mr. Speaker; I simply reserved the objection to make the statement I have made.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report. The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5901) to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 18 and 21.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "one-fourth" inserted by said amendment insert "one-fifth"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That section 2 of an act of Congress approved February 4, 1910, entitled 'An act prescribing certain provisions and conditions under which bonds and certificates of indebtedness of the United States may be issued, and for other purposes,' is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That any certificates of indebtedness hereafter issued shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States (but, in the case of certificates issued after September 1, 1917, only if and to the extent provided in connection with the issue thereof), as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority; and that a sum not exceeding one-tenth of 1 per cent of the amount of any certificates of indebtedness issued is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same."

And the Senate agree to the same.

CORDELL HULL,
JOHN N. GARNER,
WILLIAM R. GREEN,

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is true that the statement has not been printed in the Record, but the report of the conferees was printed in the Record of this morning, having been adopted yesterday by the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate, while numbering something like 30, are virtually all either of a clerical nature or of a minor character, inserted in the interest of what was termed clarity. There are two or three amendments of some little importance, and they were specially considered and dealt with by the conferees.

The first amendment, on page 2, is one intended to make more clear the provisions of the House bill on that subject.

The sixth amendment, which is the next one, apart from some purely clerical amendments, provides that when the Secretary comes to make allotment among subscribers for bonds, if he should increase or reject the allotments in any given cases, his action shall apply uniformly to the particular class affected by such ruling. There was no objection, of course, to that provision.

Amendment No. 7, on page 4, simply made section 2 of the bill applicable to the $2,000,000,000 of bonds issued under the act of April 24 as well as to the bonds authorized under the pending bill. There was no objection to that. On pages 8 and 9 certain provisions of the House bill were stricken out, and a substitute provision was inserted. The bond act of April vested in the Secretary of the Treasury the authority to prescribe terms of maturity, redemption, and so forth. The Secretary in exercising that authority issued his prospectus or circular, which contained the supplemental provisions or terms under which bonds would be sold to the public. It therefore required the combined prospectus and the law itself to ascertain the full terms offered to the purchaser. By this amendment, No. 17, it is merely proposed to insert in the law what has heretofore been contained in the prospectus of the Secretary of the Treasury rather than to require him to continue to insert it in his circular or prospectus issued to the public. This is manifestly to the advantage of the Government and the public, because it would require any purchaser of bonds with one conversion privilege to exercise that privilege in connection with the next flotation of bonds with the higher rate of interest rather than to postpone his conversion rights until some future prospective issue should be made bearing a still higher rate of interest. That, in a few words, is the purpose of that amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That last provision which the gentleman mentioned limiting the conversion to the next issue is new?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes; that is a new provision.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The remainder of the provision is really simply a rewording in different form?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. The bill as it passed the House exempted $5,000 in bonds in the hands of any one person from any sort of taxation. Is that preserved in the bill?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I understand so. There was no amendment made upon that subject. Amendment No. 18, about which there was some difference of opinion, prescribed a limitation of 4 per cent interest upon war-saving certificates. The House conferees were of the opinion that that restriction would in all probability be too severe, and would result in a handicap to the Government in its efforts to float this class of new Government paper. Upon that representation it was agreed that that limitation should go out and that the House provision should stand as it originally left this body.

The next amendment of any consequence related to the allowance of expenditures to the Secretary of the Treasury which he might incur in the flotation of these bonds and certificates. The House limitation on expenses for selling the bonds was one-seventh of 1 per cent. The Senate substituted a provision increasing it to one-fourth of 1 per cent. The conferees agreed upon one-fifth of 1 per cent. This resulted in a reduction of $3,769,473.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What amount would be in fact raised by this one-fifth of 1 per cent?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. One-fifth of 1 per cent on the sale of the bonds would be $15,077,890.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Was the gentleman and his colleagues satisfied that that increase was justified under the circumstances?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The House conferees took pains to read the Senate hearings upon this subject, and the entire showing made there by way of supplement to the showing made in the hearings of the Treasury officials before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, and took into consideration the facts offered during the consideration of the bill in the House, and they felt constrained to agree to that adjustment of the matter in the light of all the facts as they were made to appear to them.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. What was the expense for printing and selling the first issue of bonds?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Those figures were brought out during the discussion here and brought out during the discussion in the Senate. I have them, but I have not them immediately before me. I think they were about $2,000,000, or near one-tenth of 1 per cent.

Mr. EMERSON. Would it be as much as one-fifth of 1 per cent?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. They did not amount to that much, I will say to the gentleman, for this, among other reasons: The bankers, newspapers, and business people generally donated their services and the services of their entire business forces to this work of exploiting and propagating the late bond proposal, so that really no fair comparison can be made in view of representations that have come up from these same people with respect to the undue burdens which they voluntarily assumed in that connection, and which they represent they do not feel justified in assuming to such full extent in connection with successive bond flotations in the future.

Mr. EMERSON. Is it intended to pay these publications for this publicity?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The matter of formulating the business methods of publicity has been left to the Treasury Department. I only know what I see in the press in that connection. The press reports that the Secretary has been disinclined thus far to accept a proposal for universal publicity among the newspapers and other periodicals of the country. I assume that in line with his past methods he will work out, after full conference with the best expert advisers that are available, the most desirable and economical and effective methods of conducting this campaign, and will adopt them.

The Senate receded from its amendment which reduced the House rate for the selling of certificates of indebtedness from one-tenth to one-twentieth of 1 per cent. That was the original House view of the matter, and it was the request of the Treasury Department all the time. That made a change in the way of $2,000,000 with respect to the expenses of issuing the certificates. Deducting that from the $3,769,000 reduction on the bond phase of the expenditures leaves a net reduction from the Senate allowances under the agreement of the conferees of $1,769,473. Now, these, Mr. Speaker, constitute the changes which I consider of any real importance, and unless some gentleman desires some time, I shall ask for a vote.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the allowance to the Secretary of the Treasury for promotion and advertising of certificates of indebtedness in the amendment, in addition to the one-fifth of 1 per cent and the one-twentieth allowed in the preceding paragraph of the bill?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Each rate relates to a separate subject matter. The one-fifth relates to the proposed expenses of selling the bonds and war-savings certificates.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is that the amount the House provided for in the bill—one-fifth?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The House bill was one-seventh for bonds and war-saving certificates—

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the Senate raised that to one-fourth?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. To one-fourth.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the conferees took it back to one-fifth, which is the amount the Secretary originally asked for?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. It is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So, then, the House gained one point over the Senate and comes back to the Secretary's original proposition?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now that is clear. But the one-tenth of 1 per cent for promoting the issue of certificates of indebtedness as proposed in the amendment?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The one-tenth was the original House provision, and that was agreed to in conference.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The conferees' report of the amendment in the Record, on page 7271, says that not exceeding one-tenth of 1 per cent shall be allowed for advertising, promotion, and so forth, of certificates of indebtedness. I want to know if that one-tenth is in addition to the other one-tenth?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. There is only one rate of allowance of one-tenth which relates to the certificate of indebtedness. The one-fifth embraces only bonds and the war-saving certificates.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman made an estimate of the total amount that will be allowed to the Secretary for advertising and promotion?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I have the figures, which I shall be glad to insert in the Record.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it $17,500,000 or $23,000,000?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The amount authorized for the sale of bonds, one-fifth per cent, is $15,075,000. One-fifth per cent for the sale of war-saving certificates is $4,000,000, and one-tenth per cent for the sale of certificates of indebtedness is $4,000,000. In the aggregate that would be $23,075,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that brings it back exactly to where the Secretary wanted it in the first instance?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. It does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the reduction made by the House is wiped out and we come back to the Secretary's original proposition and allow him the amount for which he asked to promote and advertise these bonds and certificates of indebtedness? That is correct?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will permit, it does not mean advertising in the sense of paid advertising.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I was not undertaking to give the House any information on that point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The inference through the questions just asked would be carried, as it has been in the past—

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. We leave that to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington (continuing). That the percentage agreed on is for promoting and advertising, thereby leading those who have space to sell to think that this means paid advertising. If the gentleman will permit a short statement, which I think will be of interest, I have ascertained that one reason that many newspaper owners, and particularly owners of the smaller papers, expect to be paid for some part of the publicity which they will give to the Government's efforts to sell these bonds is because they were absolutely promised that advertising would be paid for in this bond sale at the time they were giving free space to the last one; but the gentleman, a very clever and well-meaning man, who had the publicity part of that bond issue in hand, and who made that promise, has now resigned and is not now in the position, and there is no one to carry out that promise. In the meantime the Treasury Department is now asking all the publicity associations, billboard concerns, sign writers, poster men, daily and weekly newspaper men, to give their space free. And on top of that the Food Administration Bureau is asking for a big free-advertising campaign—billboards, posters, newspaper space, and all—to carry its message to the people. As I said before, there is danger of riding the gift horse to death.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, the bill leaves that matter to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Advertising is still an open question, and it is up to the Secretary; and this amendment which I have just quoted provides for one-tenth of 1 per cent of the amount of any certificates of indebtedness issued, or appropriates it out of any money not otherwise appropriated, for "preparing, advertising, and issuing the same." So the Secretary of the Treasury is given the discretion which the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] seems to want him to have.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? I just wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to the fact that the statement he read from is not a part of the law but a mere outline on the part of the clerk that prepared the conference report. All the method of selling these bonds, the question of advertising, is left entirely to the Secretary of the Treasury. He can spend it for whatever purpose he sees proper in the selling of these bonds.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What I read is the part of the amendment that goes into this bill.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will take up the bill itself he will not find anything in it about advertising other than discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Secretary clearly has the discretion to advertise if he sees fit.

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And he left that question open in all the hearings with which I am familiar. He indicated that that is an unsettled question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. All the House did the other day was to defeat an amendment compelling the Secretary to spend a certain amount of money.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Exactly. He can advertise if he wants to.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. FESS. The bonds under the liberty issue have not yet been delivered, have they?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I understand not.

Mr. FESS. I am sure they have not been delivered. I noticed the suggestion—I do not know whether it comes from the Department of the Treasury or not—not to insist on the receipt of those bonds until after these are issued.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. If that is true, it is a wise suggestion.

Mr. FESS. I saw that in the press. Is that the situation? It is not law or a regulation, is it?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Not at all. It would be entirely optional with the bond purchaser; and the suggestion is made, if made at all, for the purpose of avoiding duplication and expense in the printing of the bonds.

Mr. FESS. I think that is wise, and what I wanted to know was if the purchaser does not insist upon this it will allow these particular bonds to be held back until after the new bonds are issued?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am not authoritatively advised in that respect. My best understanding, however, is that all purchasers of the recent $2,000,000,000 of bonds who desire to convert will have the opportunity, and perhaps be requested to refrain from asking that this present delivery of the bonds already authorized be made to them, but in the meantime to retain their allotment certificates, and this suggestion relates alone to those who may desire to convert. They can then take the new bond rather than the old one and not subject themselves to the trouble of handling, and the department to the expense of printing, the two bonds.

Mr. FESS. So the conversion must come through the suggestion of the purchaser?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will yield, the first interest payable on these bonds is, I believe, payable about the 1st of November, is it not?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The 15th of December.

Mr. CANNON. Now, as I understand, many of these bonds have been printed? I mean of the two billion—the first issue?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I so understand.

Mr. CANNON. If it is not so, a subscriber to those bonds, if he elects to do so, ought to have his bonds at once; otherwise he will not get his interest the 1st of October or the 1st of November.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I understand that all due diligence has been exercised in the work of printing these bonds with a view of making the earliest possible distribution of them. But while this is going on and while the new bond sale is practically pending, it has been thought, and wisely so, in the interest of economy and convenience, both to the Government and to the purchasers, that those who might desire to convert their bonds into new bonds could simply retain their allotment certificates for the present and pursue that course.

Mr. CANNON. That is perfectly proper. But it ought not to shut off the man who desires to retain the 3½ per cent bond from getting his bond.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I do not understand that it is the plan or purpose of the department in any sense to delay the delivery to those who want them.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. GARNER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that I think he will find in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury that he was going to deliver the bonds to those who insisted upon delivery. For those who wanted to convert their bonds, he did not want to print the 3½ per cent and go to that expense. In the meantime the interest will be paid on the certificates, and those who hold the interim certificates will get their interest when the date comes for its payment.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ONE-DOLLAR NOTES.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to print in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury having reference to the scarcity of $1 notes in circulation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in reference to the scarcity of $1 notes. He might as well put in $2 notes, too, because there is also complaint about them. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The following is the letter referred to:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 20, 1917.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN:

There is an urgent demand at this time from nearly all sections of the country for a larger supply of one and two dollar notes, especially of the $1 notes. To help meet this situation I am, in accordance with the law, issuing instructions authorizing the conversion of United States notes of $5 and upwards, of which there were outstanding July 31, 1917, approximately $324,000,000, into one and two dollar bills. Under authority provided by law I am also taking steps to facilitate the conversion of silver certificates of $5 and upwards into one and two dollar bills when presented at the Treasury.

But to provide an adequate supply of one and two dollar bills it will be absolutely necessary to increase very greatly the note-producing capacity of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing by a larger utilization of the power presses, and it is hoped the Bureau of Engraving and Printing will be placed, by appropriate legislation, in a position to meet this demand for small notes which is daily becoming more urgent.

The conversion, however, of a large amount of $5 United States notes and silver certificates into notes of a smaller denomination is likely to produce a scarcity of $5 bills. To meet this deficiency I respectfully recommend that the national-bank act be amended so as to remove the present restriction which prevents the issuance to any national bank taking out a circulation of more than one-third of its total circulation in notes of a denomination of $5.

I also respectfully recommend that every national bank shall be authorized to issue circulation to the extent of not exceeding $25,000, to be secured as provided by law, in notes of the denominations of one and two dollars. I have taken the liberty of having prepared a suggested form of bill to amend the national-bank act to carry out these recommendations and inclose it herewith.

I trust it may be possible to obtain early action on this matter, which is of considerable importance at this time.

Respectfully,

W. G. MCADOO.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,

Chairman Banking and Currency Committee,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SUSPENSION OF WORK ON MINING CLAIMS (H. REPT. NO. 157).

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 147.

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall immediately proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 78, as amended by the Committee on Mines and Mining; that the consideration shall be in the House as in Committee of the Whole; that this shall be the continuing order of the House until such resolution is finally disposed of: Provided, That this order shall not interfere with sending bills to conference, consideration of conference reports, or other privileged matters.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 78, as amended by the Committee on Mines and Mining, which provides for the year 1917 to suspend assessment work on mining claims.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is this a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules, and a unanimous report from the Committee on Mines and Mining on Senate joint resolution 78. It only provides that this work shall be suspended this year.

The committee, after the consideration of the resolution pretty thoroughly, and in talks with men who reside in the West, thought the scarcity of labor during this year made it impossible for these men to do this work, which is largely dead work—not all of it—but a great deal of it is dead work, and men would have to leave the employments which they are now engaged on, where they are doing something valuable for the Government and themselves, and go out and do this $100 worth of work.

The Government loses nothing. I think the resolution ought to pass.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Does this provide for a release of this year?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-eight Members are present—not a quorum.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this vote 261 gentlemen, a quorum, voted. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is recognized.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, there was no division in the committee on this resolution. After a statement had been made as to the parliamentary status of the bill which it makes in order, it appeared to all the members of the committee that the bill should be passed and become a law at the earliest date possible.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. Has not this been done in previous years?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. This is not an unusual thing, and it was thought, in view of the war and the difficulty in getting labor and the difficulty in doing the things that these men are required to under the law, it was but just that this action should be taken at this time.

Now, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, while I represent a mining State, I have had no considerable number of requests for the passage of an act relieving for this year the locators of mining claims from the necessity of expending at least $100 during the year on and for the development of each claim. While that is true with regard to Wyoming it is also true that there has been a very great demand from the surrounding mining States, where there is a large amount of metalliferous mineral development, asking for this relief under the conditions that now exist. The men who hold these metalliferous mining claims—and in the main it will be metalliferous mining claim holders who will be relieved—are largely men of limited means. This year, by reason of the extraordinary demand for labor, they have been called down from the mountains very largely to do needed work elsewhere. It would be a great hardship to require of them that they do their assessment work in every case this year in order to hold their claims. It would not in some cases be in the public interest to require it. I shall, however, at the proper time offer an amendment which I believe will not be objected to by anybody—I hope it will not—excepting from the operation of this act oil placer mining claims. I do not think those responsible for the act intended that oil placer claims should be included in its provisions. Nevertheless they are, under the broad terms of the bill. Oil placer mining claims differ very widely from the ordinary metalliferous mining claims. While conditions exist under which it is perhaps wise that we should relieve the metalliferous miner, the oil-placer locator should this year be at work. This year of all years the oil locator, in the public good, should be developing his claim. There has been, so far as I know, no request or demand—at least none has reached me—from the locators of oil placer claims that they be relieved from the necessity of doing their assessment work. It is important that that work go on, that that development continue; in fact, to attempt to relieve from the necessity of doing assessment work where there is a lively development might complicate the situation badly; and therefore this class of claims should not be included in the general provisions of the bill. I hope the amendment I propose to offer will be accepted.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the rule.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read Senate joint resolution 78, to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order that labor may be most effectively used in raising and producing those things needed in the prosecution of the present war with Germany, that provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements to be made during each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended during the present war with Germany: Provided, That the owner of each mining claim desiring to avail himself of the suspension hereby extended shall during each year expend, in lieu of such assessment work, the sum of $100 in the raising, producing, or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance and support of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $100: Provided further, That on or before the 31st day of December of each year of said period of the war the owner of each of such mining claims shall file in the office of the county clerk and recorder of the county in which such mining claim is situated an affidavit that he has expended or paid such sum or performed such labor as is required herein, describing same, since the 1st day of January of that year.

This act shall not be deemed to amend or repeal S. J. Res. 33 of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "that," insert the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 2, beginning with the word "present" in line 5, strike out all down to and including the word "year," in line 21.

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 2, line 21, beginning with the word "year," insert the following: "year 1917: Provided, That every claimant of any such mining claim in order to obtain the benefits of this act shall file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded on or before December 31, 1917, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL: On page 3, line 3, after the word "act," insert: "Provided, That this act shall not apply to oil-placer locations or claims."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will withhold the announcement just a moment, I want to say that probably this amendment ought to have been inserted into the resolution by the committee, and I feel now that it would be wise to accept it. On behalf of the Committee on Mines and Mining and the Members generally from the West, I feel justified in accepting this amendment.

I therefore hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming will be adopted.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this measure. It is possible, and I presume it will be thought very probable, that my opposition is due to my ignorance of mining laws and mining conditions; but it is proposed by this bill, by a special act, to relieve men who have entered upon mining claims from the terms of the conditions which were imposed upon them when they entered upon those claims, namely, that they should perform work to the amount of $100 in each year; and if they failed to do that their claim should then cease, and such claim or location would be open for entry by any other person who might care to perform the requirements of the law and make entry thereon.

I am opposed to this because it is not a war measure. We have passed two or three special acts relieving the settlers and the worthy pioneers who are prospecting and assisting in the development of these great Western States from the terms and conditions of the statutes where the relief was desired because of absence from home and active participation in the war. They say they can not get men to work upon these claims, and that therefore they should be relieved of the obligation which they assumed when they entered upon the location. That is no sufficient excuse for setting this dangerous precedent. The report states that a large percentage of the work done—I think 90 per cent in some cases—amounts to dead work. I am somewhat unfamiliar with the proper interpretation of the phraseology "dead work," but I assume that it means work that does not really accomplish much, nor does it show the value of the claim or the presence of any valuable metal or ore within the ground.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WALSH. I prefer not to yield just now. I say that to pass this act at this time, particularly with the amendment that has been adopted, which was offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], is unwise. It is late in the year. There are not many more months or weeks when work can be done this year, and if this act is passed, undoubtedly early in the next session we will be asked to pass another special bill relieving the same men for the same reason from performing work next year, because the holders of claims can not get men to do the work. It is well known that a great many of these mining locations are owned and operated by corporations having quite a considerable bit of capital; and in those instances, if the owners of such claims cared to pay a proper rate of wage, in view of existing conditions in this country, they could get this work performed. I have no doubt of that. But if they want to relieve these men from the necessity of expending $100 or performing $100 worth of work, I submit to the House that it would have been more proper to have provided that they should have been required to do only $25 worth of work, or some nominal sum, but require the prospectors who entered into this agreement and took out these claims and agreed to do this work to perform some sort of work in return.

There is such a thing as good faith, and we ought not to be petitioned by any special class to dispense with men evidencing it when they are practically given claims worth, in many instances, thousands of dollars.

We are tending toward a repeal of this provision. If that is done we will relieve them from it. There will be many claims which people other than those who have now filed upon them may believe to be of considerable value. We are saying to them that if John Jones is about to throw up his claim on a certain location, we are going to allow him to keep that claim during the remainder of this year, and presumably all of next year, without doing any work upon it, and so preclude John Smith, the honest prospector who may have waited years for a chance to secure a chance to try his luck and who may have greater faith in the same claim, from filing upon it and keeping the bargain he has made with the Government, namely, to perform this work.

Another reason which I feel is a good one for not passing this measure is that it is not a war measure, and also because of the manner in which the committee has amended the bill. As originally drawn these men who had these claims were obliged to give an equivalent in work or labor or production, either directly to the Government or indirectly to the Army or Navy or the people of the United States, and who are obliged to perform 25 days of labor in such beneficial occupation.

Now, that language would have required these men in lieu of the work upon these claims far up in the lonely mountain, where it is expensive and arduous to get materials and labor and subsistence—it would have required them to furnish an equivalent in labor and materials or production to the Government or the people of the Army or the Navy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for three minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. With that requirement in the bill we would not have been making, so to speak, a present of these claims during the remainder of this year and during the future. I fear the enactment of this legislation will lead to a repeal of that provision requiring $100 worth of work on these claims and virtually make a present of this land to the men who may happen to file on the location.

Nobody can contend that the Government of the United States has not been fair and most generous to the men who go out into that far western country and engage in this sort of work. The laws that have been passed have been such as to encourage them to go into these occupations, and the statutes have been passed giving them every protection. The Federal Government is expending much money for the benefit of the favored few, and the day seems still far distant when the great West will be willing to get down to earth on a plane with the rest of the common people.

Now, I say it is unfair, by a measure such as this, to relieve men of their obligations and make them a privileged class, and result in not improving the development of the country, but will result in hindering the development of the mining country, because the people will file on the claims, allow them to go without any work week after week and month after month, keeping those who are in earnest and in good faith from filing upon them and complying with the requirements of the law.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman realize that the men who file on mining claims at any time between now and the 1st of January, 1918, do not have to do any assessment work at all, and therefore the men now relieved will be in the same position as a man who could go in and file between now and January 1, 1918?

Mr. WALSH. The men now relieved are men who have had claims for a year, and the argument is that because they did not do the work the Government should go in and relieve them and save what money they have expended. In other words, they have taken and entered into an agreement, and because they did not see fit to keep their part of the agreement they should be relieved for the balance of this year, and probably it will be during the term of the war. They will be able to keep these claims despite the wording of the statute which was in effect at the time they filed on them. It does not only affect the men who file now, and there will be very few of them, but those who have filed heretofore and who have been waiting during all this session of Congress to have the Committee on Rules report a special rule to save them from performing this work. If they had been in good faith, if they had wanted to do as they agreed to do, they would have had the work done long ago, and we should not have had to consider this measure as a part of the war program, but would take it up at the regular session of Congress. I trust the House—although I know it probably will not do so—will defeat this measure. We will probably be shown when a war measure is not a war measure.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on the 18th of last June I introduced House bill 5081, providing for the suspension during this year of that provision of the mining law requiring $100 worth of work to be annually performed upon mining claims, which is known as annual-assessment work.

Along about that time, or possibly earlier, several similar bills were introduced in the Senate. The resolution under consideration—Senate joint resolution 78—was passed by the Senate on July 9 and was referred to the Mines and Mining Committee of the House. The Senate committee had not submitted the matter to the Interior Department or the Bureau of Mines for report, and the Mines and Mining Committee of the House deemed it of sufficient importance to warrant obtaining the opinion of the Interior Department upon the subject.

Both my bill and the Senate resolution were referred to the Interior Department, and three reports obtained thereon. As a result of these reports and the consideration by the committee, it was deemed advisable to substitute my bill for the Senate resolution. The Senate resolution, as it passed the Senate, covers the period during the war, whereas my bill only extends it for this year. But the Senate resolution provided for a showing as to the claimants doing a hundred dollars' worth of work in certain other capacities, which the Interior Department reported was impracticable and inadvisable and unnecessary. For that reason the committee asked the adoption of this substitute and very earnestly recommended the passage of this bill.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is entirely in error in assuming that this measure is solely in the interest of the large corporations. As a matter of fact, it is of very little concern to the mining corporations generally, excepting that they would be injured by losing the services of a large number of good miners during the time that they would be required to do their own assessment work on claims.

The fact is that there is such a scarcity of labor throughout the mining sections of the West at this time that it is impossible for people to secure miners to do their assessment work, and the result is the assessment work will have to be left undone very largely—at least, a large per cent of what is not already done—because of the inability of the owners of claims to secure the labor necessary to perform this work.

I will not go into this matter in detail, but will call attention to my report upon this bill, a portion of which is as follows:

After obtaining those reports from the Interior Department your committee received a number of urgent requests from various mining sections of the Western States urging Congress to suspend the operation of the annual assessment law during the war, or at least during this year. This appeal came from nearly all portions of the mining regions of the West, and was very urgently asked for throughout Alaska. These requests are based principally upon the grounds—

First. On account of scarcity of labor and the actual inability to procure men to do this year's assessment work.

Second. Because a great many prospectors and miners have enlisted in the Army and Navy and many others are being drafted.

Third. Because mining development, especially in the way of prospecting and new discoveries, is practically at a standstill at the present time, and the exceeding high cost of powder, steel, and other materials makes assessment work almost prohibitive.

Fourth. Because approximately 90 per cent of all the assessment work done is virtually dead work; that assessment work does not bring about practical development; and during these times it is looked upon as unreasonable and wrong to require any useless or unproductive expenditure of either labor, money, or materials, and that wasted energy in any direction should not be required in these war times.

During times of peace annual assessment work on mining claims performs a beneficial service in preventing mining ground from being held for speculative purposes and has the merit of occasionally leading to important mineral discoveries. Annual assessment work also provides labor and a livelihood to a small but deserving class of pioneer people. But it is thoroughly well known throughout the mining sections of the West that to a very large extent annual assessment work is to all practical extents and purposes an economical loss and utter waste of money, labor, and material.

The general custom for many years throughout many of the mining sections of the West has been to estimate mining work at $10 a foot in sinking shafts or driving tunnels, and that the extension of a tunnel of the ordinary size 10 feet or the sinking of a shaft the ordinary size 10 feet is an expenditure of $100 in assessment work; and when that work is done and that expenditure is made and an affidavit thereof filed, that holds the claim for another year. But it is only in rare cases where this small amount of extension work ever actually brings about any useful development or the opening up of a mine. It is usually performed primarily for the purpose of holding the claim and keeping it from being "jumped," or, in other words, located by some one else.

The owner of a claim either goes out and does that work himself, probably spending two or three weeks or a month in performing the work, or he hires some one else to do so, and furnishes the powder, tools, and provisions necessary for the work. Usually the work is done by hiring some one to do it, and in ordinary times there are men around every mining camp who are glad to get this work to do. But at the present time that condition is entirely changed. There are scarcely any available men in any mining camps or communities, as all men capable of doing that kind of work are very busily engaged in some other capacity. They have either gone to the war or have good positions. Miners and men familiar with the mining industry are in very great demand in all mining fields in the country. They are working in developing, extending, and operating actual mines, doing their utmost in the production of mineral, and there is no available labor, practically speaking, anywhere to do this assessment work this year. It is looked upon, as above stated, as an unnecessary waste to require these men to spend their time and resources doing work on mining claims or prospect holes, only a very small per cent of which will ever turn out to be mines, and when a much more infinitesimal per cent will be developed in any practical way by this annual labor.

In view of this situation, your committee again took up the consideration of these bills, and decided to amend the Senate resolution by substituting in lieu thereof the Taylor bill, providing for an exemption from all annual assessment work during this year, instead of during the war, and making no requirements as to showing of labor in other capacities, and the committee authorized a favorable report upon the Senate joint resolution as amended in that form.

After the committee had come to that determination it also authorized Mr. Taylor to again take the matter up with the Interior Department for further consideration, in view of the status of the mining situation throughout the West, as shown by petitions and letters of appeal asking to be relieved from this annual work. In response to a request for further consideration of the subject, the Secretary of the Interior made an additional or supplemental report thereon approving the action of your committee, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 1, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: In accordance with your request that I submit further advice upon S. J. Res. 78, with amendments suggested thereto by the House Committee on Mines and Mining, I have to advise as follows:

S. J. Res. 78, as passed by the Senate, proposes to relieve owners of mining locations from performing the annual assessment work required by existing law during the existing war, provided that each such claimant shall spend each year the sum of $100 in raising, producing, or manufacturing products for the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform $25 worth of labor in any beneficial occupation, or shall pay into the Treasury the sum of $100.

I submitted an unfavorable report upon this measure to the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, House of Representatives, July 19, 1917, suggesting that the production of minerals is important, as well as the growing of agricultural crops, and that, in my opinion, the exemption from performance of assessment work should not extend further than to claims owned by officers and enlisted men of the United States Army and Navy, which exemption is provided for by an act recently passed.

The House committee's substitute for S. J. Res. 78 is substantially to the effect that owners of mining locations shall be relieved from the performance of annual assessment work during the year 1917, upon condition that each claimant shall file in the office of the proper county recorder on or before December 31, 1917, notice of his intention to claim the benefits of the measure.

Upon further consideration of the matter, I am inclined to favor the resolution as proposed by the House Committee on Mines and Mining. It is more simple and will be easier to administer than would the Senate resolution.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

HON. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives.

There is far greater reason now for the enactment of this law than there was in either 1893 or 1894. In those years there were amply sufficient idle men to perform the work, and they needed the work. It was to a certain extent a hardship to deprive them of the opportunity of obtaining that kind of employment. But at the present time there are, practically speaking, no men available, and the work can not be done. A large per cent of the claimants of these mining locations will be compelled to allow their assessment work to go undone, and take chances of their claims being jumped. It is a hardship upon them with no corresponding benefits to the Government or to the States or mining locations, or any individual, to require them to do this work during this year. On the contrary, the labor, and powder, and steel, and provisions that would be thus needlessly consumed and expended in this annual dead work would be worth very much more to the country if used in the production and development in which it will otherwise be used.

Therefore, your committee urgently recommends the passage of this bill in the amended form as a public necessity, and as an emergency war measure.

I have received quite a large number of letters and telegrams and resolutions in support of this measure. Of course, the Members of the House will remember that we some time ago passed a bill relieving locators who had joined the Army or Navy or other branches of the service from performing annual assessment work during their period of service. But that is not sufficient to meet conditions in the West at this time. The poor prospector does his own work, and the man of means hires men away from producing properties for that purpose.

In times of distress like these, when it is important to produce as much mineral as possible, it is of the utmost importance for the Government itself to temporarily waive the requirements of this annual labor. A law of this kind generally in effect is fair to everybody and will be beneficial to the whole country. It will obviate the necessity of taking men away from producing mines, and thereby increase the production of mineral; and, as I stated in my report on the bill, there is ten times more reasons why this law should be passed than there was for the similar acts of 1893 and 1894.

The present high price of metals has brought about great prosperity to the large mines. But small operators, with narrow and variable ore bodies, are not so fortunate. To them the proportion of expenses, represented by labor and explosives, have risen so high that it has very greatly offset the increased value of their products. In fact, many mines are so short of men that they are prevented from taking advantage of a favorable market. Throughout the West generally the labor situation was never so adverse as it is in the mines at this time.

The joint resolution as amended and now agreed upon reads as follows:

Joint resolution to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on all mining claims, excepting oil locations, during the year 1917.

Resolved, etc., That in order that labor may be most effectively used in raising and producing those things needed in the prosecution of the present war with Germany, that the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements to be made during each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended during the year 1917: Provided, That every claimant of any such mining claim in order to obtain the benefits of this act shall file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded on or before December 31, 1917, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to oil placer claims or locations.

This act shall not be deemed to amend or repeal S. J. Res. 33 of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

MR. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

MR. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

MR. WALSH. Will the gentleman state how or why it is that they can get labor, which is very scarce out in that country, according to the terms of the report, to work on oil wells, but can not get them to work on mines?

MR. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will try to answer that. The drilling for and location of oil claims is, generally speaking, a rich man's proposition; it is usually done by corporations. Developing oil wells is very seldom within a poor man's reach. Poor men do not develop oil claims. For that reason we say that the corporations engaged in speculating in or developing oil lands can and ought to do this annual work. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] simply provides that oil claims shall not be relieved, because, as he says, there are very few poor men who would be benefited by relieving them from the annual assessment work on oil claims; but so far as the metalliferous mining claims are concerned nearly all those locators are poor people, laborers, very often men who have got jobs in productive mines somewhere else. Railroad men, clerks, and farmers very often have a mining claim somewhere. The miners are now getting from four to six dollars a day, and they can not afford to leave their work in the productive mines and go off into the mountains and put in two or three weeks at this time and spend a considerable amount of money on powder, which is very high, and on steel and provisions to do their annual assessment work. As I say in my report, 90 per cent of that assessment work does not develop a paying mine. In many cases they might just as well take that money and throw it into the river for all the actual practical mining development it produces, and this is no time for waste of labor, time, food, steel, powder, or anything else.

MR. WALSH. The gentleman does not contend that most of the locations for mines out there in that mining country are not owned by corporations to a very large extent, does he?

MR. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no; the big paying mines—the producing properties—are very largely owned by corporations. But the corporations do not bother much with the prospect holes. They wait until there is a mine, or until there has been sufficient development to satisfy their experts that they can make a mine, and then they go and buy it and develop it. It is these locations made by the prospectors that the law requires a hundred dollars' worth of work on each year that we seek to protect. This bill is in reality a great conservation measure. It prevents waste, useless expenditure, and loss of time, labor, food, and materials, and also augments the actual production of the country, and the measure ought to meet with the approval of every Member of this House, and I hope and believe it will pass practically unanimously.

MR. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of this legislation as it has been reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House. It should pass, so it can be approved by the President at the earliest moment. It is entirely just and proper legislation. I desire to call the attention of the House to one or two things in respect to the objection made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], that it will affect the men and women who have mining claims this year, and that somebody will get the benefit. A man who files on a mining claim between now and the 31st day of December, 1917, does not have to do any work on his claim for this year but can do it all in 1918, up to December 31, 1918, and as a matter of history in the mining countries, and the district that I represent is the greatest in the world in these mining matters, I want to say that 95 per cent of these claims on this kind of work are by men who have been developing the mines of the West and who spend this amount of money for the purpose of developing the country to the end that the mines may be discovered. They are real prospectors and miners. They are the men who have developed the western country. Early in the spring the snows are deep, and it is hard to get out water claims in many cases, and then they use the water of the streams in early spring and summer for the purpose of washing and sluicing and for actual mining on developed mines. Then comes the seed time and then the harvest, and these men work in the seeding and harvest, and then in the fall they help to gather the crops, and during the months of October, November, and December is the time when 90 per cent of the assessment work is done on the mines. Then they do the prospecting and assessment work. After the spring, summer, and fall work is over they have gathered together a few dollars—they have got a grub stake—and they have their powder and steel and a little burro, and then they go up into the mountains to develop the mine—do the assessment work and mine these prospects. Of course, some work all times of the year; others whenever they can get the money to put into the mining operations. Some get the money out of the prospect or mine; but a great number do as I have just stated. All of that thing has turned out to the advantage of the country every time and under every occasion. These miners who have the energy to do that are very much in demand in the harvest field, in the gathering of potatoes, hops, wheat, and harvest generally, and in all other necessary work that should be done now, and they ought to finish this work and then go into their mines and develop and do this assessment work. Why compel them to throw away, in a great many instances, this hundred dollars' worth of labor that ought to be expended in liberty bonds, and that ought to be expended in assisting their families and in helping the country in other ways at the present time?

I have received letters from women who own mining claims. Their boys are gone and the boy's claim is protected, but the mother's claim is not protected. The boy is gone from the farm and the father has got to look after his own claim. The boy's claim is protected, and why compel the man to give up his time and take his money and go 10 or 15 or 20 miles into the mountain and spend a hundred dollars on this mining claim when the same can just as well wait until next year, and he may be allowed to expend that hundred dollars in defense and development of what we need in this country so much at the present time. Many miners have written and telegraphed me about this legislation. They all want it. It is needed at the present time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that if these claims were allowed to lie for three years that they are being developed or that there would be any development of them?

Mr. RAKER. This bill simply provides that he need not expend the hundred dollars between now and the 31st of December, 1917, at midnight. If he does not do this assessment work of $100 for the year 1917 at that hour, at 12 o'clock midnight, January 1, 1918, the claim is jumpable. Why put this man to this trouble, why compel him to go out and spend this hundred dollars, when you can give him the right to say that his claim will be protected; that it will be looked after; and that the Government is getting the benefit of the man's labor in other fields?

Mr. WALSH. If it is jumpable at 12 o'clock midnight, it is just as easy for the man who has it to jump it again as some stranger.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. Why not?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman never jumped a mining claim.

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. RAKER. You do not want to go out at midnight, as many a fellow has, and never come back again.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Is it the desire to have this law passed on the part of those people holding these claims because of the fact they do not wish to expend the $100?

Mr. RAKER. No, sir; the desire is that this assessment work be relieved, so that they might take this $100 and take their time for the purpose of giving it to the benefit of this country, so that it may successfully conduct this war.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Is it not a further fact that another reason is that it is impossible on account of labor conditions there to employ the labor?

Mr. RAKER. Ah—

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I have received telegrams—

Mr. RAKER. Surely—

Mr. TIMBERLAKE (continuing). Saying that they were offering $15 a day for men to do this assessment work for them and it was impossible to procure this labor.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is correct about labor being scarce, and that it being scarce you have to pay two or three times for the labor, and a man can give his time better to looking after his family and looking after conditions than by using it upon a mining claim at this particular critical period.

Mr. WALSH. Can they get labor for these oil fields?

Mr. RAKER. I think the oil amendment is wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold that for two minutes? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The previous question was ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division, the result of the vote not having been announced.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 3.

So the joint resolution was passed.

The title was ordered to be amended to conform to the text.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY TO THE POPE.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in accord with the sentiments heretofore expressed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], and I unreservedly indorse his speech.

The greatest of all of the President's state papers is his reply to the Pope. Its meaning is plain, its language is simple, and its logic irresistible. With a force that is staggering it exposes in a single sentence the terrible crimes of the German ruling classes, and at the same time points unmistakably to the only pathway out of the darkening storm. It satisfies those Americans who thought there should be a restatement of our war aims. It satisfies those who, notwithstanding the President had in his message to the Senate outlined what he conceived to be the basis of a lasting peace, nevertheless believed that since our recognition of an existing state of war, there should be a concrete statement of our war aims as a party to that war.

Taking advantage of the state of affairs some had assumed to believe that the President had abandoned the high ideals and motives which had first inspired him and was endeavoring to commit this country unreservedly to any war aims that any of our allies might purpose to achieve. Of course no one who knew the facts was deceived, but there was danger of some good people being misled. A great many therefore were anxious that occasion should arise for a definite statement of our war purposes. The peace offer furnished this opportunity. The President arose to the occasion, and in an address, magnificent in form and crowded with substance, stated our aims so clearly and so cogently that no sane American can doubt the lofty patriotism which impels him nor the ideals to which he clings. After that statement no one can doubt the duty of an American. All true citizens have united in a common purpose to fight this war to a successful conclusion, and to weave that conclusion into the fabric of a just and lasting peace.

There can be no cessation of the present strife until a peace shall have been secured by guaranties that will prevent, without question, a repetition of present conditions. This being the end to be attained, everything standing in the way of its accomplishment must be swept aside. The way is blazed. The pathway leads forward, not backward, and we can not stop until that ultimate end shall have been attained. No true American wants the struggle to continue one minute longer.

The note in effect tenders peace to the German people on the following basic conditions:

First. No punitive damages.

Second. No dismemberment of empires.

Third. No establishment of selfish and exclusive economic leagues.

Fourth. The rights of peoples, great and small, to freedom and security and self-government, and to participation upon fair terms in the economic opportunities of the world.

No great nation has ever before offered such terms while yet it possessed fighting strength. Heretofore, the successful nation has always imposed harsh terms. Treaties of peace therefore have always sown the seed of a future strife. The defeated nation, embittered, has nursed its wrongs and sought an opportunity to retrieve its fortunes. But the spokesman of this great country, lifting up his eyes, has caught a vision of earth's tribes and peoples freed from the dangers of ambitious and designing monarchs. After this war "there must be no next time."

One of the great obstacles has been the seeming desire on the part of those engaged in the war to establish exclusive economic leagues and the consequent fear of national ruin. Another obstacle in the pathway has been the fear of dismemberment through which the Kaiser has been able to keep his people deceived and misled. But any seeming confusion has been swept away. The ringing declaration of America's position is as clear as the tolling of a bell. The President has not rejected peace. On the contrary, the door is left wide open and the German people might have peace on terms the fairest that were ever offered, and guaranteed by themselves. Could an American ask for a finer statement than has been given? Until the German people are in a mood to accept such conditions it can not be safe to stop or falter. Every loyal American will press forward.

We all wish the struggle might have been avoided. When the resolution recognizing a state of war was up for disposition our minds instinctively longed for a different solution. If faith by delaying could have seen a bow of promise through a rift in the clouds, or if hope by lingering could have seen a star in the far East to lead us out of the depression, we would have welcomed its light. But Prussianism had decreed otherwise and no choice was left. Prior to the passage of the resolution 19 American ships were sunk and many lives were lost. These ships were going where they had a right to go and doing what they had a right to do. They were laden with the products of American fields, factories, and mines. In the War of 1812 we fought and defeated England for interfering with our rights on the high seas, when no ships were sunk and no American lives lost, and we can not afford to surrender those rights, which we inherited after tremendous sacrifice, to Germany or any other nation.

This is an American war to enforce and protect American rights. In the complex makeup of modern life access to the high seas is essential. Otherwise our products will stagnate on our hands, our people will starve, we will grow weak, and liberty will perish at the hands of autocracy.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question at this time?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman has said that the people of his district are heartily in accord with the President. That is in reference to the war, I take it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I will ask him if it is not a fact that the whole people, if they are worth their salt, are with the President all over the country?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Undoubtedly. The American people are solidly behind the greatest of all American Presidents, our Commander in Chief, Woodrow Wilson. The people have laid aside their differences and are now determined to back the President in whatsoever measures he may find necessary. He is our only star of hope amid all this gloom, and there is no choice but to follow him to the end of the struggle.

With the passage of time I am more and more convinced that we must all unite in a supreme struggle to secure the end to which our Government is pledged and for which our hearts long. This country from Lakes to Gulf and from sea to sea is fighting to the goal of victory, whose effect will tend to unite all peoples of the world. In view of these facts I have recognized the need of the hour and have never withheld my support from measures proposed by the executive head of our matchless Nation as touching the emergencies now pending.

We know not how near nor how far may be the accomplishment of our hopes, but we are conscious of the righteousness of our cause, and we know that it must ultimately prevail. The vision of this country is broadening. We are being molded into a new relationship just as surely as in the Revolutionary War the Thirteen Colonies were being cast in a new form, which was afterwards slowly but none the less surely and gradually wrought out. Inspired by the sacredness of the cause of human liberty, inspired by the wisdom and foresight of the founders of this Nation, inspired by the industry and frugality of a generation of builders, and assisted by the guardians of liberty everywhere, we can trust, with a glorious hope, that when the smoke of battle has lifted a new luster shall shine in the faces of the peoples of earth—their purposes purified and refined as by fire. With these motives accomplished and these ends attained, human liberty will in the future be guarded by the common desire for a lasting peace secured by guaranties to all peoples.

We can hope with a hope that is fast ripening into faith that the time may soon come when, by international agreement, all armament and all military preparation may be reduced to a minimum, when all this economic waste may be avoided; when the governments of earth shall be governments of the people; when the rights of nations, great and small, to the great common highway of the seas will be recognized; when the "reeking tube and iron shard" will become relics of a passing struggle, never again to be invoked; and when liberty, equality, manhood, and fair play shall be the ruling passions of men. The pathway to this hope leads through the darkness and storm of conflict, but surely the glory of the end will justify the struggle and faith of the present.

BUILDING FOR USE OF TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request as soon as he gets through with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2477.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2477. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. It is the Treasury Annex. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2477) to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed, upon land belonging to the United States at the northeast corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Madison Place, in the city of Washington, D. C., a suitable building, complete, for the use of the Treasury Department, and to cause an underground connection of said building with the Treasury Building to be constructed; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into the necessary contracts at a total limit of cost for said building and underground connection of not to exceed $1,250,000. The plans for such public building to be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby further authorized, without regard to civil-service laws, rules, or regulations, to obtain such special architectural or other expert technical services as he may deem necessary and specially order in writing, and to pay for such services such prices or rates of compensation as he may consider just and reasonable from the appropriation for said building, any statute to the contrary notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from Florida would have no difficulty in securing unanimous consent, nor in passing this bill by unanimous vote, if he would agree not to insist upon that amendment. The corner where it is proposed to locate this building, Mr. Speaker, is, without exception, the most prominent, unoccupied corner in the city of Washington. It is diagonally across from the White House, and immediately in front of the Treasury Building. The White House and the Treasury Building are recognized masterpieces of architecture. This building is also to be just across the street from Lafayette Park, one of the most beautiful places in the city.

Now, in this connection, I desire to say a word to the gentleman from Florida about the Fine Arts Commission. It includes among its members some of the Nation's foremost architects. One of them—and I mention him merely by way of example—is the architect of the remarkably fine customhouse in New York City, of the beautiful State capitol of Minnesota, and of the great Woolworth Building, the most remarkable business structure in the world. The members of the commission are not visionary theorists but practical builders, artists, and architects of the very highest rank.

Mr. POUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In one moment. I am addressing my remarks particularly to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think I can save the gentleman the time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In a moment. I desire to direct the attention of the gentleman and of every other Member of the House to the following order, issued in 1910 by President Taft:

Plans for no public buildings to be erected in the District of Columbia for the General Government shall be hereafter finally approved by the officer duly authorized until after such officer shall have submitted plans to the Commission of Fine Arts, created under the act of Congress of May 17, 1910, for its comment and advice.

And I now direct their especial attention to the following, issued by President Wilson in 1913 and never rescinded:

It is hereby ordered that whenever new structures are to be erected in the District of Columbia under the direction of the Federal Government which affect in any important way the appearance of the city, or whenever questions involving matters of art with which the country or Government is concerned are to be determined, final action shall not be taken until such plans and questions have been submitted to the Commission of Fine Arts, designated under the act of Congress of May 17, 1910, for comment and advice.

President Wilson thus expressly directs that no public building shall be erected under the direction of the General Government in the city of Washington which may affect in any important way the appearance of the city until the plans have been submitted to the Fine Arts Commission designated under the act of Congress.

It does appear to me, Mr. Speaker, that we are in danger of doing a very serious and irreparable wrong to the people of the city of Washington and to all the people of the country should we adopt this committee amendment. We should remember our responsibility. The Constitution of the United States grants to the Congress the sole power to legislate for the District of Columbia, and it is therefore our duty not, by our votes, to permit any architectural disfigurement of the Capital City of the Nation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 3, strike out the following: "the plans for such public building to be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the committee amendment; and on that I wish to say a word more, if the House will pardon me.

This Fine Arts Commission has, I think, rather an unfortunate name. It suggests to many people an utterly wrong idea of the character and qualifications of its members. Some of them are, as I said, among the very foremost architects of the United States. Mr. Frederick Law Olmstead is a very distinguished landscape artist. One of the original members of the commission was Augustus St. Gaudens, now dead, a sculptor of world-wide fame. These distinguished men give their services to the people of the United States absolutely free of charge.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. I notice in the bill a provision for the employment of architects. In view of this service that the gentleman has suggested, and from the further fact that we have a department presided over by specialists in that line, what necessity is there for the employment of architects aside from what the Government already has and this commission to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will be very glad to answer my distinguished friend from Iowa. These department specialists erected that noble red brick shed in Judiciary Square, known as the Pension Building.

Mr. CANNON. That was Gen. Meigs.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But it was erected under the sanction and supervision of the department specialists of whom the gentleman from Iowa spoke. They also erected the old Post Office Building on the Avenue, that towering architectural monstrosity which Gen. Hawley, of Connecticut, said was a cross between a cathedral and a cotton factory.

These gentlemen—department "specialists"—also located the new Interior Department Building in as inconvenient and out-of-the-way place as could be found—a place without any relation whatever to the great plan which provides locations for Government buildings with a view to the harmonious development of the city—and then, after thus locating it, they decided that it should be made of red brick. They ignored the Fine Arts Commission entirely, as the act was so worded that they needed not to consult the commission. But the commission earnestly insisted that—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The commission insisted that the building should be built of stone. No one now regrets that it was not made of red brick.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the interior of the building can be made in any form regardless of the exterior, but the Art Commission would absolutely insist that the exterior shall not be constructed of red brick. Do you want your constituents to come here and see near the White House, and facing Lafayette Square and the beautiful granite Treasury Building, an unsightly Government building of red brick?

President Wilson in 1913 in effect prohibited the erection in Washington of any Government building calculated in any important way to affect the appearance of the city until the plans had been submitted to the Commission of Fine Arts. I have just read the order. That order of President Wilson is unrescinded by him, and we ought not to repeal it or disregard his plain wishes by now saying that in erecting this extremely important building on that most slightly corner the commission may be ignored.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if the effect of this amendment will not be to rescind the order of the President?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It will, in effect, rescind the order of President Wilson made in 1913.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Can the President legislate by order?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Is it possible for these experts in the Treasury Department to design post offices that are constructed throughout the entire country and not a building in the Capital City?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. President Wilson's order gives the Arts Commission no authority concerning buildings outside of the city of Washington.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman thinks this action would repeal the Executive order. Does not the gentleman know that in order to repeal the Executive order we should have to expressly provide that these plans should not be submitted to the Fine Arts Commission? If we pass it in this form, we leave it just as it is, with the Executive order outstanding.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But there is this difficulty about that: You would leave it to one officer to say how much it would affect the appearance of the city. The language of the order is, "which affects in any important way the appearance of the city." Some department specialist wishing to build that of certain material might say that if thus constructed it would not "in any important way affect the appearance of the city." President Taft's order was absolute, but President Wilson's order is in that respect qualified.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I suppose there is legislative authority, but where is the legislative authority upon which the order of President Taft and the order of President Wilson were based?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Congress of the United States conferred the authority upon the President to appoint the commission. That act of Congress has never been repealed. In pursuance of that authority President Taft and President Wilson both, in the interest of the preservation of the architectural beauty of the National Capital, made these orders.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to see the legislation that authorizes President Taft or President Wilson or any other President to make an order which it would require an act of Congress to repeal.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois, I will again read President Wilson's order:

It is hereby ordered that whenever new structures are to be erected in the District of Columbia under the direction of the Federal Government which affect in any important manner the appearance of the city, or whenever a question involving matters of art in which the Federal Government ought to be concerned is determined, final action shall not be taken until such plans in question shall have been submitted to the Commission of Fine Arts, designated under the act of Congress of May 17, 1910, for comment and advice.

Mr. CANNON. Let us send out and get that act and see what it says.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is no question about it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I have been for quite a while a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and a few years ago, within the recollection of many Members of this House, we had quite an experience with a controversy that arose between the Fine Arts Commission and one of the departments in regard to the construction of the new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Both sides said they were right. Neither side would yield its views in regard to the construction. The result of it was that for years that old Bureau of Engraving and Printing was a slaughter pen for the people who were working in it, because we could not get action on the new building that was authorized.

The Executive order of the President that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has read does not go nearly to the extent of the amendment that was put in by the Senate, and here permit me to say that the bill that came down from the Treasury Department and that was introduced in the Senate did not contain any such language as that which our committee struck out, but it was put on by an amendment, as I understand, in the Senate Committee on Public Buildings.

What does it do? The Executive order merely said that such buildings in Washington must be referred to the Fine Arts Commission for their comment and advice. This amendment goes further and says that the plan for such building shall be approved by that commission, and it puts it in the hands of that commission to do what somebody did in holding up for years the construction of the new Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Some members of the Fine Arts Commission did me the honor of discussing the matter this morning, and they said it was not their fault, that they did not hold up for a minute the construction of the new building. Well, possibly they did not, and if their views had been accepted it would not have been held up perhaps and it would have gone on, but there was a controversy between them and some others in regard to the matter that resulted in holding up that building for several years.

Mr. DENISON. Who were "the others" of whom the gentleman speaks?

Mr. BURNETT. The Treasury Department.

Mr. NORTON. What views were finally accepted?

Mr. BURNETT. The views of the Treasury Department were principally finally accepted, as I was informed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And the result is a very beautiful building.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; because we took the matter up in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and passed a resolution, which was adopted by Congress, demanding and requiring that they should go on and finish the construction of that building. But for that action the controversy might have gone on until this day, and men and women would continue to be slaughtered as they were in the old building.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that the views of the Fine Arts Commission relative to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving Building were finally adopted in the main?

Mr. BURNETT. In some respects they were, but in the principal points of controversy, as I recall it, they were not.

Mr. MONDELL. The principal point of controversy was whether or not there should be a row of pillars along the side and the end of that building.

Mr. BURNETT. That was one of the points of controversy.

Mr. MONDELL. The pillars were put there.

Mr. BURNETT. If that was contended for by the Fine Arts Commission it certainly does not reflect much credit upon them, for these gentlemen this morning were complaining because some pillars were put in that are there now. They said they obstructed the light. So I hope the gentleman is mistaken when he says that their view was adopted, because they desire now to wash their hands of that.

Mr. MONDELL. Whoever is complaining about the architecture of that building of course is entitled to his own opinion, but most of us think it a very handsome building.

Mr. BURNETT. I think so, but I doubt if we would ever have gotten it constructed if Congress had not taken some action and if the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had not taken some action.

One gentleman on the other side a little while ago made what seems to me to be a wise suggestion. He said we provide in section 2 of our bill that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, without regard to the civil-service law, rules, or regulations, to obtain such special architectural or other expert technical services as he may deem necessary and specially order in writing. Now, does anybody believe that the Secretary of the Treasury would employ inefficient architects, who would recommend the construction of a red brick building there? It is to be an annex to the Treasury Department, for which we are proposing to pay $1,250,000. We have in the Treasury Department the Supervising Architect, who ought to be competent to attend to these matters. Whether they are or not, they attend to a great many such things all over the country. But out of abundance of precaution we have provided in this bill that the Secretary may secure outside architectural and other expert service without regard to the civil-service laws.

A gentleman told me this morning that the plans had progressed to a very great extent already. No doubt the Treasury Department has already advised with the Fine Arts Commission; but what I am objecting to is putting it in the power of this Fine Arts Commission to obstruct this building by making it dependent upon their approval. The executive order does not even squint at anything of that kind. I understand they have already been getting the advice of these people.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It gives them the veto power.

Mr. BURNETT. As the gentleman says, it gives them the veto power absolutely.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it not true that the Secretary of the Treasury has in mind an eight-story building on that corner?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not know. He has never told me.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The Secretary of the Treasury tells me he wants a building about the height of the Belasco Theater and the other buildings in that section.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That will be higher than an eight-story building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; it will be less than an eight-story building.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I have understood that it is in contemplation to put up a building that will be as high as the building regulations of the District of Columbia will permit.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I call for the previous question on the amendment and on the bill to the final passage.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will not press that motion just now.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, we have had two or three speeches. There is only one question in controversy here. The House wants to act—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will not press his motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion for the previous question is not debatable.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I understand the gentleman has not made the motion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I should like three minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does anybody else want any time? I want to reach a conclusion as soon as possible.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill favor the amendment?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly. The committee adopted it, and I am here to represent the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman moving the previous question or not?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I wanted to see if we could reach an agreement. I do not want to cut off anybody.

Mr. CANNON. We have plenty of time; nothing else to do to-day.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman extends invitations to Members to make speeches, he will not get through with his bill to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman from Illinois want time?

Mr. CANNON. I think I could say all I want to say in five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the amendment and the bill close in 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to close debate on the amendment and the bill in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has said about the architectural beauty of Washington has a special significance just now in the consideration of this bill. I know that there is a disposition, when buildings are put up here by men interested in housing large numbers of employees, to get space at the expense of architectural design and something that will be pleasing to the eye and not hit you in the face, as the Pension Building does.

I recall that when the Union Station was authorized there was a great controversy here as to what that building should be, and it was finally agreed in this House and in the Senate that that building, though not erected by the Congress, must pass the judgment of the Fine Arts Commission. I submit to every Member here and to every traveler who comes to Washington, whether he comes from abroad or from the United States, that architecturally the Union Station in Washington is a credit to the architect and to the Fine Arts Commission. It is a beautiful building.

Now, here on this corner just across from the White House, just across from the Treasury Building, which is a beautiful building architecturally, we ought not to permit the placing of a business structure. Business buildings were erected on that corner at great expense. They wanted them for room there, but the Fine Arts Commission and the gentleman who owns the corner yielded to the necessity of maintaining the architectural beauty of Washington rather than to put up an eight-story building under the building regulations.

Now, shall we permit a seven or eight story building to be put up by the side of that and enable the bank buildings on the corner to put up seven or eight story buildings right across from the Treasury, as they could do?

The only way to make sure of this is to strike out this amendment. This is not a matter that ought to appeal to the pride of the committee or anything else. I think we ought to take into account here in considering this matter the necessity for not marring the beauty of that corner.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman propose to delegate to this Fine Arts Commission the absolute veto power over the construction of public buildings so that they may absolutely prevent their erection?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather have that than to leave it to a fine commercial architect.

Mr. GORDON. Does not the gentleman suppose that the Treasury Department would take care of that?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Who is the Treasury Department?

Mr. GORDON. It is under the Executive.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Who is the Executive?

Mr. GORDON. The President.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is he an architect?

Mr. GORDON. The Executive order will cover this case.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not if you put in this amendment, because this amendment would allow the erection of a seven or eight story building.

Mr. GORDON. The amendment does not say so, but the bill as it passed the Senate would give the Fine Arts Commission the absolute veto power.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Fine Arts Commission had the veto power on the Union Station.

Mr. GORDON. This Congress voted $3,000,000 toward that Union Station.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And we vote all the money toward this building.

Mr. GORDON. I do not think this Congress ought to accept a provision which would give the Fine Arts Commission the absolute power.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is not taking half as much risk as it would be to give final judgment to the architects of the Treasury Department.

Mr. GORDON. We do not give them final judgment.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Was not the Fine Arts Commission created for the very purpose of protecting the interests of the city in a case of this sort?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It was.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I concur entirely in all that the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. COOPER, has so well said, but he omitted to state one objection that has been made to the Pension Building, which I have heard stated elsewhere, and that is that the hideous thing is fireproof and will probably last forever. [Laughter.]

I am unable to agree with my friend from Alabama as to the effect of the provision contained in the bill and which the commission now seeks to strike out. Instead of giving rise to controversy I think it will eliminate controversy. The controversy which arose over the construction of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, if I am correctly informed, arose because it was not expressly provided that the Commission of Fine Arts approve of the plans of the buildings. Here, under the provisions of this bill, if it has any meaning at all, it means that the plans shall be submitted in accordance with the views and recommendations of the Fine Arts Commission. They must be prepared in that form. The Fine Arts Commission has the final determination under this bill, and if the architect's plans, whoever may prepare the plans for the building, do not conform to the views of the Fine Arts Commission they must be made otherwise under the provisions of the bill.

If we are to have a Fine Arts Commission at all, if we are to make any use of it, why not use it in this case. The building will probably stand there long after all of us are dead and gone, either to the credit of the city and the country, or else a blot on its appearance in an architectural and ornamental way.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. Does not the gentleman think the building ought to be high enough to conceal the Belasco Theater Building?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think that ought to be left to the Commission on Fine Arts.

Mr. EMERSON. Any building would be an improvement on that.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly there can be no use for the Fine Arts Commission unless it shall be used as it is attempted to be used in this case.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. None that I know of.

Mr. TOWNER. In the first place, with every one of these public buildings for any one of the departments the plans are first drawn by a department from a utilitarian standpoint, and then they are submitted to the Fine Arts Commission for its approval, because of the fact that we need the approval of the Fine Arts Commission or of some one in authority in order that we may have unity and beauty of design and appearance that shall be commensurate with the Capital of the Nation. Is not that the object?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Always; but if the commission is deprived of that authority we might as well abolish it entirely. I think the committee amendment should be defeated.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can say very much in five minutes time. Much has been said about the Fine Arts Commission. They have been very useful, and still, if I understand right, much of the work that they have outlined has been so expensive, as it seemed to Congress, that it has not been entered upon. Twelve years ago, if I am right, at least that long ago, we commenced to get a site for the Department of Justice and the State Department and the Navy Department, from Pennsylvania Avenue down to the Monument Grounds, and from the White Lot over to Fourteenth Street, and at great expense we condemned that property, and then the architects commenced, and they not only bossed the architectural part outside, but they divided it up, and when it came to the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill, or to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—and I think it was the Committee on Appropriations, because it was authorized, if I recollect right—the plans for the buildings were so expensive that the appropriations were not made.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I can not in five minutes. I would like to yield if I could have more time. Let me get down to this proposition. It was about the close of the Roosevelt administration or at the beginning, I am not sure which, and I think at the beginning of his second administration. The Department of Justice was housed on this lot adjacent to the Riggs Bank, and they complained, you know, that the building in which it was housed was going to fall down. Well, they had to dynamite it almost to get it down, but the building where the Department of Justice was was torn down. The United States acquired the balance of the property and was going to build a practical building that would look well architecturally in comparison with the Riggs Bank Building and the other buildings along there, and the cost was to be $400,000. Lo, and behold, it was not built!

I think I shall vote for this amendment. I am not afraid that the Treasury Department or the President, who first issued the order the gentleman speaks of, and who could ask the resignation of the Secretary of the Treasury at any time, will sanction the construction of a building there that will be unsightly. Under this provision—otherwise I would not vote for it—I think that we shall be able to have speedy plans for this building and that we can have constructed there a practical office building inside, with such architectural design outside as will correspond with the Riggs Bank Building and the surroundings. Let us do something practical and let us do it now!

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen are altogether wrong in their contention that adopting the House committee amendment would be antagonistic to the Executive order of the President. The Fine Arts Commission will have the right to go on and advise, and that is what the Executive order says—shall advise with the Fine Arts Commission; but it is here proposed to legislate into this bill—and if you vote for it you are setting a precedent that they will call upon you to follow hereafter, something that the Executive order never contemplated—that the Fine Arts Commission shall have the power to put a veto upon the construction of all buildings in Washington. If you vote for such a proposition, you say that the plans for this building shall be approved by the Fine Arts Commission, and they will be able to hold it up indefinitely, and when you do that you are going to arm them with more power than the Executive order ever gave them or than it was ever intended they should have. If you do that, you gentlemen who remain in Congress for some years will have the same proposition often put up to you—not to permit them to advise, for they have already advised, as they have a right to do, but you will grant them the veto power. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is correct in his statement. As a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for years I have had experience in regard to these matters and they have been holding up—

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I have only two minutes. They have been doing it heretofore. You are asked now to give them greater power than the Executive order ever gave them or than I believe either Mr. Taft or Mr. Wilson would have given them by Executive order. If you do this, you set a precedent by which all Government buildings in Washington may be held up until after the conclusion of the war, when possibly they would not need the annex so badly as they need it now, and you will establish a precedent that will rise to vex you for all time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas and Mr. LONGWORTH) there were—ayes 65, noes 37.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I was going to make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a perfect right to make it. Does the gentleman make it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I do. I would like to have a yea-and-nay vote on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count to see if there is a quorum here. [After counting.] One hundred and nineteen gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand the House is proceeding as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, does it require over 100 to make a quorum?

The SPEAKER. Of course it does.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And only 100 in committee?

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 163, nays 86, answered "present" 5, not voting 178, as follows:

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. TALBOTT. I think if he were present he would vote the same as I voted, and therefore I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have a regular pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. STEELE. I do not know how he would have voted on this soul-stirring question, and therefore I withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. BUTLER was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from California, Mr. LEA. I voted "nay," but I wish to withdraw it and answer "present."

The name of Mr. EMERSON was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one other motion. I move that the House insist on its amendment and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks that the House insist on its amendment and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. CLARK of Florida, Mr. BURNETT, and Mr. AUSTIN.

COMMITTEE ON SUFFRAGE.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House not to exceed one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to address the House not to exceed one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules earlier in the session instructed me to present to the House whenever the war legislation was out of the way a resolution providing for the change of the rules of the House so as to establish a committee on suffrage. I had intended to present that resolution to the House this afternoon. In view of the fact that I am informed that a number of gentlemen have left the city, I shall not present it this afternoon, but I shall give notice now that if I can get opportunity to do so, which I think I can, the resolution will be presented on Monday as early as practicable.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield? In view of the fact that it has just been developed that there is a quorum present, is that not enough to consider this resolution?

Mr. POU. That is true. But the gentleman knows how inquiries are made by gentlemen who contemplate leaving the city. A great many of them were made earlier in the day, and at that time I thought it would not be possible to reach this matter during the day. Upon the opinion that was expressed at that time I am informed that a number of gentlemen have left the city who will be here Monday.

Mr. MONDELL. I trust the consideration of the matter will not be prejudiced by putting it over at this time.

Mr. POU. I trust so, too. I trust those who are absent now will be present Monday and vote for the resolution of the committee.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House not to exceed five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, what is it about?

Mr. NORTON. I desire to address the House in reference to House joint resolution No. 153, which I have introduced, providing for the appointment of a committee of Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate to visit the European battle fronts for the purpose of examining into the conditions and progress of the war being waged by Germany and her allies against France and England and their allies. I also wish to briefly discuss the question of accepting the invitation extended to Members of Congress by the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, for the time being I shall have to object.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House on the same subject for 10 minutes on Monday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, for the time being I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that request. It is not pleasant to make these objections—

Mr. NORTON. All right. I will not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have a reason for it which is not personal.

POTASSIUM.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2156, and pending that I wish to make a short statement about it, if I may.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2156, the potash bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I wish to say that while I do not approve the form of the bill in all respects, and shall expect to offer one or two amendments to it, and would object to the consideration now if there was hope of getting it in little different form, in view of the fact that there is no such hope and that the matter is one of vital importance and interest at this time, I shall not object to consideration of the legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORTON. Reserving the right to object, let the Clerk report the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2156) to authorize exploration for and disposition of potassium.

Mr. NORTON. May we not have the bill read first?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant who is a citizen of the United States, an association of such citizens, or a corporation organized under the laws of any State or Territory thereof, a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates, silicates, or nitrates of potassium on public lands of the United States, except lands in San Bernardino County, Cal., for a period of not exceeding two years: Provided, That the area to be included in such permit shall not exceed 2,560 acres of land in reasonably compact form.

SEC. 2. That upon showing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of one of the substances enumerated in section 1 hereof have been discovered by the permittee within the area covered by his permit, the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for 640 acres of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, to be taken in compact form and described by legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if the land be not surveyed, then in tracts which shall not exceed 2 miles in length, by survey executed at the cost of the permittee, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. All other lands described and embraced in such a prospecting permit from and after the exercise of the right to patent accorded to the discoverer, and not covered by leases, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior, through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, and in such areas as he shall fix, not exceeding 2,560 acres, all leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be specified in the lease and which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of offering the same, and which shall not be less than 2 per cent on the gross value of the output at the point of shipment, which royalty, on demand of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid in the product of such lease, and the payment in advance of a rental, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter; not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively; and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods, upon condition that at the end of each fifty-year period succeeding the date of any lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods, and a patentee under this section may also be a lessee: Provided, That the potash deposits in the public lands in San Bernardino County, in the State of California, may be operated by the United States, or may be leased by the United States upon satisfactory terms.

SEC. 3. That in addition to areas of such mineral land to be included in prospecting permits or leases the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to a permittee or lessee under this act the exclusive right to use, during the life of the permit or lease, a tract of unoccupied nonmineral public land not exceeding 40 acres in area for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the permit or lease.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve the authority and shall insert in any preliminary permit issued under section 1 hereof appropriate provisions for its cancellation by him upon failure by the permittee or licensee to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit.

SEC. 5. That no person shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, exceeds in the aggregate in any area 50 miles square an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres allowed to any one lessee under this act; that no person, association, or corporation holding a lease under the provisions of this act shall hold more than a tenth interest, direct or indirect, in any agency, corporate or otherwise, engaged in the sale or resale of the products obtained from such lease; and any violation of the provisions of this section shall be ground for the forfeiture of the lease or interest so held; and the interests held in violation of this provision shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in any court of competent jurisdiction, except that any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition.

SEC. 6. That said Secretary, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act may reserve to the United States the right to dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided further, That if such reservation is made it shall be so determined before the offering of such lease; that the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

SEC. 7. That each lease shall contain provisions deemed necessary for the protection of the interests of the United States, and for the prevention of monopoly, and for the safeguarding of the public welfare.

SEC. 8. That any lease issued under the provisions of this act may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in a court of competent jurisdiction whenever the lessee fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act of the lease, and the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof: Provided, That no provision or limitation shall be inserted or included in any lease waiving or requiring the waiver of the right of the lessee or of the United States to resort to the courts.

SEC. 9. That the provisions of this act shall apply to all lands of the United States which may have been or may be disposed of under laws reserving to the United States the potassium with the right to prospect for, drill, mine, and remove the same, subject to such conditions as to the use and occupancy of the surface as are or may hereafter be provided by law.

SEC. 10. That 50 per cent of all moneys received from royalties and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State wherein the leased premises are situated. The remaining 50 per cent shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act.

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act.

SEC. 12. That the deposits herein referred to shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, and except as herein otherwise provided all laws or portions of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent any State or Territory wherein the lands or deposits leased are located from levying and collecting taxes on improvements upon or the output or product from any lands or minerals leased under this act.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to incorporate in every lease issued under the provisions of this act a provision reserving to the President the right to regulate the price of such mineral extracted and sold from the leased premises, which stipulation shall specifically provide that the price or prices fixed shall be such as to yield a fair and reasonable return to the lessee upon his investment and to secure to the consumer the product at the lowest price reasonable and consistent with the foregoing: Provided, That such lease issued under this act shall also stipulate that the President shall have authority to so regulate the disposal of such mineral produced under such lease as to secure its distribution and use wholly within the limits of the United States or its possessions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question as to the amount of land, if the chairman knows, now being operated for potassium in this country.

Mr. FERRIS. There is a very little in Wyoming and a very little in Nebraska, and they are getting some from the washing of wool and other sources, but practically none is being developed in this country. We formerly bought our entire supply from Germany, and the country has been used to a consumption of 237,000 metric tons a year, and in consequence of the stoppage of the supply the price has risen from $20 a ton to $480. It is very important that something be done in the way of legislation along this line.

Mr. NORTON. And this is to stimulate the search for potassium in this country?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and the immediate relief that we have in mind is to get Searles Lake developed. There is a lake in San Bernardino County, Cal., covering about 39,000 acres, and from that source we hope to get potash for the use of farmers and for the manufacture of munitions and for the manufacture of soap and glass and other products in the manufacture of which potash is being used. We have been buying practically every pound we use from Germany, and of course the supply there being cut off we can not get it at all, and the Interior Department and the Council for National Defense and everyone who has given attention to the matter has pleaded that Congress do something in the most earnest fashion at the very earliest possible moment for the relief of the industries I have named.

The following is a carefully digested analysis of each and every one of the paragraphs of this bill. It will be of aid to the House Members and any other readers of the Record in explaining the sections, their purport, and purpose:

THE POTASH BILL.

Section 1 of the bill as reported by the House committee authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue prospecting permits to citizens of the United States covering areas of not to exceed 2,560 acres in any one case for the purpose of exploring for potash on public lands. The life of such a permit is not exceeding two years. Land in and adjacent to Searles Lake, Cal., a very large known deposit of potash is excepted from the provisions of this section because of the fact that it is well known and is ready for development and requires no prospecting work to be done.

Section 2 authorizes the prospector under the permit described in section 1, upon his discovering a valuable deposit of potash, to obtain a patent for not exceeding one-fourth of the land in the permit. This provision is designed to induce exploration for this valuable substance which might otherwise not be had, as these deposits, if found, are likely to be in arid desert basins, the prospecting of which is an arduous and expensive matter. Section 2 also provides that all the lands in any prospecting permit not so patented shall be subject to lease by the Secretary of the Interior in areas not exceeding 2,560 acres, conditioned upon the payment of moderate royalty. The leases are to be indeterminate, but the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to readjust the terms and conditions of such leases at the end of each 20-year period. Specific reference is made to the known deposits of potash in and adjacent to Searles Lake, and it is provided that they may be operated by the United States or may be leased by the Secretary under the terms and provisions of the act. There are now two small plants for the manufacture of potash located on the shores of this lake, and several other persons or corporations have indicated a willingness to take leases should this bill become a law. Railroad facilities are already provided, and early development of this deposit seems assured should the bill become a law. Provision is also made in this section for the leasing of certain known potash deposits in rock in Sweetwater County, Wyo. These lands also contain valuable deposits of coal, and the bill provides that the potash may be leased under the provisions of the act on condition that the coal be reserved to the United States.

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary to permit the use by any permittee or lessee of not exceeding 40 acres of unoccupied nonmineral public lands for camp sites or refining works in connection with any permit or lease.

Section 4 directs the Secretary of the Interior to place in each permit appropriate provisions for its cancellation should the permittee fail to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of work.

Section 5 is designed to prevent monopoly or interlocking stock-holding interests; limits any lessee from holding more than one-tenth interest in any other agency engaged in the sale or resale of potash products, and provides for appropriate forfeiture proceedings in the United States court for violation of the provisions of the section.

Section 6 directs the reservation in any permit or lease of a right for joint or several use of rights of way through lands permitted or leases for those persons working or developing other lands for similar deposits or for shipping or treating the products under authority of the United States, its lessees or permittees, or any other public purpose. The section also authorizes the Secretary, in his discretion, to dispose of the surface of the lands embraced in any lease under any applicable existing law, providing, however, that this must be determined before the offering of a lease.

Section 7 directs that each lease shall have in it provisions necessary for the protection of the public interest and prevention of monopoly.

Section 8 authorizes the forfeiture of any lease through appropriate proceedings in the United States court whenever the lessee fails to comply with the provisions of the act, of the lease, or of general regulations in force at date of the lease.

Section 9 permits of the leasing of potassium deposits in lands of the United States disposed of under nonmineral laws, with a reservation of the potassium deposits.

Section 10 provides for the disposition of royalties and rentals under the act. They are to constitute a part of the reclamation fund for the irrigation of arid lands in the Western States, and upon return to the reclamation fund after such use 50 per cent is to go to the Treasury of the United States, the other 50 per cent to be paid to the State within the boundaries of which the deposits are or were located, the money to be used by the State for the construction and maintenance of public roads and schools.

Section 11 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make necessary rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of the act.

Section 12 protects existing valid claims made and maintained in compliance with the old placer-mining laws, and also stipulates that nothing in the act shall prevent the States or other local authorities from exercising any rights which they may have to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, outputs of the mine, or other rights or assets of any lessee.

Section 13 directs the Secretary of the Interior to incorporate in every lease issued a provision reserving to the President the right to regulate the price of all minerals extracted or sold from the leased premises, the price to be fixed so as to yield a fair and reasonable return to the lessee and to secure to the consumer any of the products at the lowest reasonable consistent price. A proviso to the section also vests in the President authority to regulate the disposal of the potassium products so as to secure their distribution and use wholly within the limits of the United States or its possessions.

For a number of years chemical experiments have been under way for the purpose of securing potash from the brines of Searles Lake at the lowest possible cost with the greatest maximum extraction of potash, and it is stated that the process now in use in a small way will effect this result; that should this bill be passed it is probable that a number of lessees will at once engage in the business of extracting potash from this brine, producing a supply which will meet to a large extent the demands of the United States for agricultural, commercial, and munition purposes, and that at a cost far below existing prices and more nearly consistent with the price obtaining prior to the war. The present time is peculiarly favorable for the creation of a potash industry in the United States and this bill offers a golden opportunity for the utilization of known potash deposits in the time of urgent need.

Mr. NORTON. Does this bill follow the line of the legislation of the last Congress?

Mr. FERRIS. It follows it quite closely; yes. We struck out some Senate amendments and inserted almost verbatim some of the provisions of the bill of the last session which twice passed the House almost by unanimous consent.

Mr. NORTON. Section 13 is in addition to that?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. Section 13 is in addition to that. That is something new, along the line of the food-control bill that we recently passed, and it gives to Congress the power to fix prices, so that this natural monopoly can not be used to oppress the farmers and others who use potash.

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the gentleman that my objection is confined only to section 13.

As has been stated, the passage of this bill is strongly urged by the Government departments, is strongly urged by Secretary Lane and the Geological Survey, and I will print at length at this point a communication from the Director of the Geological Survey, addressed to myself, as chairman of the committee, for further information on the subject. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, September 21, 1917.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: I have sent to each member of your committee copies of the latest report on potash, which fortunately was issued just this week, in time for your use. In accordance with your suggestion I take pleasure in making the following comments on S. 2156 as reported out by your committee:

Section 1: The exception of Searles Lake from the action of the prospecting provisions of this act would seem to need no special explanation. This lake as a source of potash was first brought to public attention in 1912 by the Geological Survey, and the presence of potash in the brines had been known by chemists who had analyzed samples of the brines. Plainly no further discovery is needed in the area described on page 2, lines 1 to 5.

Section 2: The reward placed upon discovery following prospecting under this law is placed at a patent of not to exceed one-fourth of the area embraced in the prospecting permit. Of course the House amendment in line 13, page 2, has as its purpose the protection of the Government in case a permittee should apply for only 640 acres in his prospecting permit, in which case he plainly should not receive the whole tract under the patent, else the Government would fail to have any adjacent land available for leasing under the provisions of the subsequent sections of the act.

Page 3, line 16: The interests of the public are best protected by the indeterminate period. The expensive installation of plant that is necessary for efficient production makes any short-time lease certain to involve an involuntary hazard. The readjustment of terms and conditions at the end of the 20-year period fully protects the public. The correctness of the indeterminate term is, in a way, indicated by the practice that is becoming more common of oil-land owners leasing their lands for a fixed period "and so long thereafter as oil or gas may be produced therefrom."

The reference in the second proviso, page 4, lines 7 to 12, is to the leucite hills in Wyoming, where there are especially rich potash volcanic rocks, which have been repeatedly referred to as a valuable source of potash and which were especially described in a publication of the United States Geological Survey in 1912. The 1916 potash report, pages 132 and 133, also refers to the experimental work that is being done on this peculiar rock from Sweetwater County. This rock ranges from about 8 per cent to nearly 12 per cent of potash, and 10 per cent is a moderate average of the potash content of the leucite-bearing rocks of this area. The Geological Survey report referred to gives a description of the Government land, including the mesas and buttes formed by these lavas, and estimates the available rock at nearly 2,000,000,000 tons, which would represent a potash content of 197,000,000 tons. These areas of volcanic rock are closely associated with the underlying and later coal-bearing rocks of the Rock Springs coal field. The noteworthy points with regard to these rocks is that they contain a somewhat larger percentage of potash than any other known igneous rocks, and the potash-bearing silicate is more easily broken down for the purpose of potash recovery than are the other silicates like feldspar.

Section 5: This type of limitation of stock holding in several corporations holding leases is common to much of the public-land legislation that has been before Congress within the past 10 years. It is plain that limiting a stockholder to an interest in only one corporation is unwise, and it has been thought necessary simply to limit his maximum holding in a number of companies to the ownership in the several leaseholds equivalent to what as an individual he could hold in a single lease.

Section 9: This is important as providing for such separation of the various mineral estimates as may be provided for in either the past or the future. This is complimentary, of course, to the last provision in section 2.

Section 13: The House amendments to this section simply provide that in price fixing which it is specified must be such as to yield a fair return upon the lessee's investment, all of the mineral products shall be considered. It seems evident that the price of the potash salts derived from the Searles Lake brine, for instance, could not be fixed with a view of allowing such a fair profit without taking into consideration and, indeed, controlling the price at which the by-products like borax and soda are sold.

This section is most important, because it absolutely insures that such development of Searles Lake as may be undertaken by the strong companies that are needed to make a success of the operation will be wholly in the public interest. The efficiency and resultant low-cost operation that can be obtained only by large units of operation will be secured and at the same time the President can control the situation to the end that the people, including both the agricultural and the manufacturing interests of the country, may secure the needed potash at low price. The proviso also gives the President power to limit the distribution of this essential mineral to the home market.

A description of the Searles Lake situation is given on pages 90-94 of the 1916 potash report.

If the question arises as to the possibility of the application of this law to deposits other than Searles Lake or the leucite hills, reference can be made to a number of undeveloped projects listed in the survey report, in New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, Oregon, and California (see pp. 104-108), and, of course, the legislation also applies to the alunite deposits such as are already outlined in Utah, alunite being the sulphate of potash and thus coming within this act. (See sec. 1, line 10.) The alunite deposits of several States are also described on pages 108 to 116.

In conclusion, I can not make a better statement of the present conditions of the demand and supply of potash than the statement of fact that the 14,000 tons just reported as produced in the United States in the first six months of 1917 exceeds by nearly 50 per cent the domestic output for the whole of last year, which in turn was ten times the production reported for 1915. This may seem a marvelous growth of an infant industry in time of unusual demand, but the unfortunate part is that the expected potash output for the present year, large as it is in terms of past production, does not, however, represent more than about 10 per cent of what this country annually used before the war. I see no way to increase this output, therefore, on anything like the scale needed, and especially from a source that may be expected to permit competition with the German potash, except by opening up Searles Lake under the best possible conditions, which I consider provided in the measure reported by the House committee.

Yours, very cordially,

GEO. OTIS SMITH, Director.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I see by the report that two mills or plants are already established on Searles Lake. The question I want to ask is, Why is congressional action necessary to allow those to operate?

Mr. FERRIS. They are only experimental, and they have no title to the lake. The only way they can use it is to acquire the right by lease through this bill. They can not get the control or use of the land in any other way.

In fairness to the Committee on Public Lands of the House, in fairness to the House of Representatives, I must say that we have not been negligent in providing for the development of potash in the Western States. Four years ago, during the early part of the Sixty-third Congress, the House Public Lands Committee brought to this House as a part of the conservation program practically this same bill, providing for the development of potash on the public lands. It passed the House, was referred to the Senate, was not acted on by the Senate, and died with the ending of the Congress. Again, at the opening of the Sixty-fourth Congress, I introduced H. R. 406, which dealt with this particular subject and in practically this same fashion. This bill was reported from the House Public Lands Committee, brought into the House, considered early, and passed. It, too, laid in the Senate during the remainder of the Sixty-fourth Congress without action thereon and died with the ending of the Congress. The Senate is to be congratulated upon finally taking up this matter and dealing with it, and I am glad that both the Committee on Public Lands and the House have been willing to aid in its consideration and help get it up and pass it at this time. It is of intense importance to the Government at this particular time; it is intensely important to the six and a half million farmers of the Republic, many of whom need potash for the replenishment of their soil; it is intensely important to those interested in the conduct of the war, who need potash in the manufacture of munitions; it is intensely important to the manufacturers of soap, glass, and other material of everyday use, of which potash forms a part. Secretary Lane explains the importance of this legislation in his letter to me of August 31, 1917. It is short, to the point, and I shall print it at length at this point. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.
Washington, August 31, 1917.

MY DEAR Mr. FERRIS: I direct your attention to S. 2156, entitled "A bill to authorize exploration for and disposition of potassium or sodium," which measure was passed by the Senate August 10, 1917, and, as I am informed, has been referred to your committee for consideration.

In reports upon this and other measures I endeavored to emphasize the importance of legislation which will make these deposits available for use at once. In a letter addressed to the Senate Committee on Public Lands, I pointed out that according to a pamphlet entitled "Potash Industry," published by the German Kall Works, Chicago, Ill., practically all of the potash produced prior to the war came from the mines of Germany, and that in the year 1911 the consumption of potash by the principal countries of the world was: Germany, 422,341 metric tons, or 49.8 per cent of the total production; and the United States, 237,453 metric tons, or 28 per cent of the entire production. Examples of increase in production of agricultural crops cited in this pamphlet show yield of corn on an acre in Indiana fertilized with potash 75.7 bushels, without fertilizer 32.1 bushels; sweet potatoes in South Carolina, with potash fertilizer 250 bushels per acre, without fertilizer 122.1 bushels; beans in Michigan with potash fertilizer 22.7 bushels per acre, unfertilized 5 bushels per acre.

The foreign supply of potash is not now available, and the United States is suffering in an agricultural way from the lack of this important fertilizer. This is particularly true with respect to the cotton crop of the Southern and Southeastern States. As you are aware, the known deposits of potash in the public lands are withdrawn from entry awaiting legislation, the withdrawal including Seales Lake, Cal., one of the largest known deposits in the world. I am informed that two experimental plants for the production of potash, located on the shores of this lake, have been recently completed. They have direct outside railroad connections, and it is alleged that they can not only start work at once, but that their capacity can be largely increased if legislation be had and leases granted.

I regard this bill as an important war measure and believe that the public interests require its prompt enactment. If this potash is to be available for next year's crop, the legislation should be had within the next two months. I have therefore to request that same be taken up by your committee and, with any amendments that may be deemed advisable, reported to the House, with recommendation for immediate enactment.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

HON. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I observe in the committee report the following:

The bill is strongly urged as an emergency measure and as a war measure by the Secretary of the Interior and the several bureaus of his department. It is strongly urged by the Council of National Defense as being urgent, and I must request that it be passed at the earliest possible date.

May I ask the gentleman if he was the only member of the committee present who took this action?

Mr. FERRIS. No. All the members of the committee were present and voted in favor of the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I knew the gentleman had great influence, but I thought perhaps the word "we" should have been used there instead of the word "I." [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is correct in that. That is a typographical error. The word "we" would have been better.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I know that the gentleman is the leader of his committee. I want to ask another question. I am very much in favor of the object sought by this bill. It is one way of determining a merchantable method of making potash in this country. However, there are others than that provided in this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. I am aware of that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And I trust, of course, that if this bill passes it will not serve to retard in any way the investigations of the Government in regard to producing potash out of kelp and other substances.

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. It is the hope of every arm of the Government, so far as I know, and of every member of the Committee on Public Lands that we should get potash from every source that we can. It is going to be difficult to compete with Germany even then, as the gentleman knows.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 5, after the word "to," strike out the word "grant" and insert in lieu thereof the word "issue."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 9, by inserting, after the word "right," the words "for a period not exceeding two years."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 12, after the word "in," strike out the words "San Bernardino County, Cal., for a period of not exceeding two years" and insert the words "and adjacent to Seales Lake, which would be described if surveyed as townships 24, 25, 26, and 27 south, of ranges 42, 43, and 44 east, Mount Diablo meridian."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, it is called to my attention by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] that in the committee amendment on page 1, line 12, we struck out the word "California," and that it ought to be incorporated on page 2, line 5, after the word "meridian." I therefore move that after the word "meridian," on page 2, line 5, the word "California" be inserted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Now, the question is on the committee amendment which was read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this legislation. At least I am in favor of the purposes of the legislation. One may be in favor of the purposes of a bill and not be in favor of the bill itself in the form presented. That is the situation in which I find myself with regard to this legislation. The principal provisions of this bill may not prove to be particularly important so far as they relate to potash, because from examinations that have been made it does not seem very probable that we shall discover any considerable amount of potash salts on public lands except in certain localities where they have been somewhat developed. The particularly important feature of the bill is that which relates to Searles Lake, in California, where potash salts have been developed to some extent, and where in all probability it will be possible very greatly to increase their production. There are also some deposits of leucite in Sweetwater County, in Wyoming, which it may be possible to utilize in the production of potash, although up to this time difficulty has been found in the development of a workable process for its extraction from the rock. But these are the sections—and they are specifically referred to in the bill—that are hopeful in the matter of potash development. So far as the remainder of the public domain is concerned to which the bill refers, it seems doubtful whether we shall ever be able to develop considerable deposits of potash. We hope that we may.

My objections to the bill are to the provisions other than those which refer to Searles Lake. They are to the character of this so-called leasing legislation, which is in harmony with general leasing legislation that has been presented and which is subject to the same objections from my viewpoint. I want to say a few words with regard to those general provisions now, not because they are so important as affecting this bill, but because they are important as a general proposition of legislation.

This is called a leasing bill. It seems to provide for the leasing of public lands. In fact, most of those who have examined it and most of those who have examined the general leasing legislation, so called, seem to assume that there is no other disposition of the public lands provided for except that of leasing. As a matter of fact this bill and similar provisions in the general leasing bill, so called, provide very largely for patents in fee. If I had the time and the House was sufficiently patient—I shall not ask the House to listen to me at the length that would be required—I think I could demonstrate that under this bill it might occur that little land would ever be leased except the Searles Lake and Sweetwater County lands, and that a large part of the remainder might be patented.

In this particular argument I am not assuming that it may not be wise to continue to patent public lands containing such deposits; but my contention is that when we assume to pass from a policy of patenting in fee, and so passing lands into private ownership, to one of leasing, we should do so, and we should not retain in bills purporting to provide for leasing provisions under which a large portion of the land may pass into private ownership under fee title, without cost to the patentee and without control by the public after the title has passed.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman has just said that the Searles Lake deposits are practically the only known deposits of potassium in the country. It will be noticed that Searles Lake is excepted from the provisions of the bill providing for a patent, and under this bill Searles Lake can only be leased.

Mr. MONDELL. That is just what I said, that, with the exception of the Searles Lake region, which is the important region from the standpoint of this bill, a system is provided under which the lands may largely be patented.

Mr. ELSTON. One-fourth of them may be patented.

Mr. MONDELL. It would take some little time for me to elucidate the processes whereby one-fourth of one prospecting permit being patented, a prospecting permit might be secured for the remaining lands and one-fourth of those lands be patented, and so on indefinitely until the land was all patented. That could happen under legislation of this kind. I grant you that it would not be likely to happen that all or even a major portion of the lands would thus pass into private ownership, but this is the point I desire to make in connection with all this legislation: If it is wise to pass from a system of private ownership in fee on lands containing potash to one of leasing under control, as provided in this bill, even to the matter of fixing prices—if that is a wise thing to do, as I have been inclined to believe, if it is wise to do that, we should adopt that policy to the exclusion of the policy of ownership in fee. We do not do it in this bill. We do not do it in the other bills. The theory is that the wildcatter, the first prospector, must be given some peculiar incentive, and that a sufficient incentive can only be found in the ownership in fee. I do not think that is sound.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. The men who are prospecting the public domain and who are interested in its development, with whom I have talked, have not in the main agreed with that contention. They would very generally prefer to lease a considerable area under control than to obtain the ownership in fee of a small tract, with little hope of securing interest in a larger acreage. That statement has been made to me by operators with whom I have talked.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that practically all the testimony before the Public Lands Committee in the last six years has been in consonance with what the committee have reported in this bill as to the disposition of the permit and the patenting of one-fourth, if a man discovered valuable mineral?

Mr. MONDELL. I have read quite a bit of the hearings before the committee, and while I may have missed some of them, I will say to the gentleman that I do not recall having read anywhere where that subject was clearly and definitely dissociated from all other questions discussed at any length by anybody.

The gentleman knows the peculiar conditions under which these hearings have been had, that the time has been taken up largely by people who had little interest in the general legislation but whose interest was in remedial legislation. Gentlemen of course were content not to dispute with the committee on the general provisions of the bill offered by the committee, they had other fish to fry and were not disposed to jeopardize their own peculiar interests by arousing the antagonism of the committee by objecting to provisions of the bill that did not immediately interest them.

Mr. RAKER. I think the gentleman is referring to the hearings before the Senate committee and not the House committee, because it is just the other way in the House committee. This trouble in regard to the oil situation has centered around the Senate committee. The House committee adopted these provisions.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman wants it that way I am willing to admit that many are in favor of it. I am not. I do not believe that it is wise. If we are to have a potash-leasing policy let us have a leasing policy, not a mixture. Now, let me follow that a little further. It has been claimed to be wise to establish a mineral-leasing policy, because through it we may secure larger revenues for the reclamation fund and for local development. That advantage gained under a leasing system is lost under a system of ownership in fee.

It is urged that we should go into the leasing system because it provides public control over and economy and safety in the operation of the mines. That advantage is lost under a system of private ownership, except as the private mines are controlled by local and State authority.

It has been insisted that leasing legislation is wise because under it you may and do confine individuals or corporations to one not overlarge leasehold. If there is advantage in that, which I doubt, if that is wise we lose all such advantages of limited holding when we retain the system of private ownership. The committee has gone so far in this bill under section 13 as to provide control over the price of the product, but that control relates wholly to land held under leases and not to the land that may pass into private ownership. If that is wise the benefit is lost as to the land patented.

Now, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, this bill will probably not affect a sufficient part of the public domain to make these provisions very important one way or the other, but they are tremendously important when we come to these other and larger measures that will affect millions of the public domain. I may have constituents who like that sort of provision, but my view of it as a responsible official is that if we are to pass a system of mineral leasing we should do so without mixing it up with these very seemingly liberal provisions in regard to leaseholdings. Put everybody on the same basis; treat all alike. And right there is a very important question. Will these seemingly liberal provisions with regard to fee title really be worth much, after all, in the practical administration of the law? It would be entirely possible under the bill for a large proportion of the land to go into private ownership under fee title. It would be entirely possible for the Secretary to limit to the very smallest per cent imaginable the opportunity for patents in fee seemingly extended by the provisions of the bill. My objection is that the bill does not do what it assumes to do—establish a leasing policy, and, further, that the opportunities apparently offered for titles in fee may be almost wholly denied.

There is a further objection which I shall meet in a moment by an amendment which I shall offer. The bill provides that the receipts from rents and royalties shall go into the reclamation fund, leaving the localities in which the mines are located without any opportunity to secure funds for local improvement, maintenance of school buildings, roads, and so forth. I shall at the proper time urge the Senate provision in the bill under which one-half of the funds will go to the community and one-half to the reclamation fund.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want only a word in reply to the gentleman from Wyoming. I think it is due that a word of reply should be made. The facts are these: Under the placer law and all existing mining laws every miner who goes on the public domain gets title in fee to all of it if he complies with the law. Under this provision a man that just goes out and mines and hunts for minerals, if he discovers them, gets a patent of one-quarter of his lease permit and three-quarters of the developed land becomes the property of the Government. We are saving three-fourths for the Federal Government while under the old law we did not save any. Whether this law is good or bad, it is three-quarters better than any preceding law.

The position of the gentleman from Wyoming is very well known in this House.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield? I introduced a coal and oil leasing bill in the House more than four years ago, and at a time when it was not entirely popular. I urged leasing legislation a number of years ago, but it was a genuine leasing policy, not one of this sort.

Mr. FERRIS. Has not the gentleman been opposed to leasing legislation from the day that we went to work on it?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that that is not so. I have objected continually to this sort of legislation that pretends to be leasing legislation when, as a matter of fact, it is not leasing legislation with regard to one-quarter at least of the area affected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I will just test the gentleman's good faith. If the gentleman will move to strike out the 640-acre patented land that is to go as a reward for the settler doing the prospecting, I shall do as much as I can to accept the amendment and help him, and we shall see who is in good faith. I have worked at this matter too long to have any side issues or any prehistoric matters brought in here. I have struggled with this legislation for five years, and we put it through the House. Each time it has died in the Senate, because they were opposed to legislation, as the gentleman has been, of a leasing character. I am not in favor now, nor ever will be, of legislation to lease homesteads or Government agricultural lands, but I am in favor of leasing mineral lands, oil lands, potash lands, that are within themselves almost natural monopolies, because I believe in that way we can better conserve the interests of the Government. I do not wish to misstate the gentleman's position—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to misstate the gentleman's position. We have been trying to conserve 165,000,000 acres of forest reserve, 53,000,000 acres of coal lands, 5,000,000 acres of oil lands, and 35,000 horsepower in water-power development, and we have been trying to develop the West, and develop it well, so that the Government could get the advantage. This has been done not through the efforts of myself but of the Public Lands Committee, made up of Republicans, Democrats, and Progressives, and we have had the support of every Democrat and many on the Republican side. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and other gentlemen over there have been helpful with this legislation that has twice passed the House.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I was interested in the statement made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and I want to know whether I understand it or not. As I understand the bill, the first section provides for a prospecting permit, and the prospecting permit must be definitely determined—that is, as to its area?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. The second section provides that not to exceed one-fourth of that land may be patented?

Mr. FERRIS. That is right.

Mr. TOWNER. How is it possible, as I understood the gentleman from Wyoming to say, that that would permit the land practically to be absorbed by patents that may be issued?

Mr. FERRIS. It could not. The greatest amount of land that could be patented in any case would be one-fourth, and three-fourths of the remaining land would be the property of the Government, which the Government could develop or lease upon a royalty basis, or sell, or do with it whatever it desired. There is no way in which that evil could result which the gentleman from Wyoming suggests may result. It then becomes, instead of wildcat territory—worthless, undeveloped territory—real territory, developed territory, of value to the Government and to the people.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to ask the gentleman another question. The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. I want now to ask the gentleman whether he thinks that it is important that this one-fourth clause by which the land may be patented entirely be retained for the immediate development of the potash prospects?

Mr. FERRIS. I am very glad the gentleman has asked that, and I will answer him frankly. This bill is a compromise. Four years ago during the very early part of the Sixty-third Congress, as the gentleman will recall, we passed in this House a bill dealing not only with potash but with phosphates, oil, gas, coal, and mineral lands. The Senate killed it, because they were not in favor of a leasing policy. Again, in the last Congress we duplicated the performance. We passed it and sent it over to the Senate early in the beginning of the Sixty-fourth Congress. It laid there for two years and no action was taken. This year I was appealed to to submit it again and have it passed by the House. I said I would take no further action in the committee or in the House, or at least assist in passing anything, until I could be convinced that the Senate was willing to do something. They came forward and passed a pretty good bill here. They put in section 13, which provides for a price fixing, so that a natural monopoly can not be used to extort high prices, and they provide for a leasing policy and offer as the only reward one-fourth of the discovery, which is three-fourths better than we have ever had before.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman, as he knows, I am sympathetic with the idea of the leasing policy.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman helped us put it through.

Mr. TOWNER. But I do believe that if it was necessary to make this much of a sacrifice to secure the important development of this land we ought to make the sacrifice.

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is probably true.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to inquire about the supply. How much is there in this lake? Is it inexhaustible?

Mr. FERRIS. It is almost. There are 25,000 acres of it, and we are assured by the geologists, Dr. Smith and others who came before us, as can be ascertained by an examination of the printed hearings, that it will last for a great many years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The country being greatly interested in the subject, that will be good information for the country. I see here they have given a statement as to the effect of the use of potash and the nonuse of it and one effect is upon the bean crop up in Michigan.

Mr. FERRIS. I noticed that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It says where the crop was made by the use of this fertilizer it yielded 22.7 bushels of beans per acre, which is a pretty good yield, but not an extraordinary yield.

Mr. FERRIS. No. That is Secretary Lane's letter.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And that on unfertilized land it yielded 5 bushels per acre, which I think any acre of land would produce, or even more than that. I wondered whether or not the statement was based upon any hearings or upon absolute test, or was it simply a guess?

Mr. FERRIS. The letter came to the committee in response to a request for a report on the bill, but we did not go into that very extensively in the hearings, as the great value of potash was patent to all men in and out of Congress. Whether that is correct or not I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Did the committee believe that the use of potash makes a difference of 400 per cent in the crop?

Mr. FERRIS. I presume it depends upon the character of the crop and the character of the soil. Perhaps that is an overestimate; however, I do not know, but in any event it is of very great use in agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, yes; its use is really good.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Why is it, with potash at such a tremendously high price, this great supply has not been worked before?

Mr. FERRIS. Because of the great question as to whether the placer law applied to it at all, and for the further reason it has been withdrawn from entry, and for the further reason that last year the consumption of potash was 237,453 metric tons, and that was brought from Germany at $48, which was cheaper than we could produce it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Nebraska has produced some potash—I think more than any other State in the Union; something like 20,000 tons—and because its price has been so enormously increased ought to be an inspiration for an increased production. I understand potash sold for $500 a ton, and I can not understand why, if potash has not been produced, where it will be under this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. As the gentleman knows, only a very small proportionate part was produced in Nebraska. There was some in Wyoming and all over the country.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The fact that it was at such an enormous price was a reason for its being produced. That is an inspiration for men to produce it.

Mr. FERRIS. The real reason for its being produced and the greater activity now is the fact that we can no longer buy it at $48 a ton from Germany, but must pay $480 a ton to get it at all.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The potash that brought $48 a ton was sold for that price and then resold at $300 or $400 a ton?

Mr. FERRIS. No.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It has been for the last two years?

Mr. FERRIS. That is because of the war?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. But prior to the war the price of potash in this country to the farmer, sold on the Atlantic coast, where the freight rates are not so heavy and where they have water transportation, was about $48 a ton.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Since the war began, with this enormous price, I was wondering why, if a greater production of potash was not stimulated, how it was going to be under this bill?

Mr. FERRIS. I am very glad that the gentleman from Nebraska asked that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a couple of minutes more. I do not want to take up too much time, but—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. The reason is simply this: The House committee has not been recreant in regard to this matter. Four years ago the purport of this bill was introduced as part of the general conservation or leasing bill. It went to the Senate and failed. Two years ago we passed this same provision. This was the leasing bill—H. R. 406—which passed two years ago and four years ago and went to the Senate, and the Senate was opposed to any kind of a leasing proposition. Their theory was to let the land go to patent outright to the men who discovered it. The Senate and House were at loggerheads over the policy. Now the Senate has passed this measure and the House is endeavoring to take advantage of it so as to pass it at the earliest possible moment so as to develop these potash deposits.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Have not there been two plants operating there producing this potash?

Mr. FERRIS. No; there are two small experimental plants, but not producing it. They have not any title. Let me say to the gentleman—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. On what subject?

Mr. KINKAID. Potash. I know a great deal about it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of potash. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. On what subject?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I desire to insert in the RECORD a speech of a former governor of Colorado, Alvah Adams, on the Belgian Commission to this country. It is the most eloquent and most beautiful presentation of the matter that I have seen anywhere in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a speech of ex-Governor Adams. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the bill reported by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. It will be the means of furnishing more potash to our farmers, and I am glad to see that there is no serious opposition to it.

I rise to address the House briefly upon the contents of a telegram sent from Washington to Germany by Count Von Bernstorff in January of this year and published in the Washington papers this afternoon.

This telegram was given out at the State Department to-day. It contains insinuations and reflections upon the integrity of Congress, and presents a situation that deserves our serious consideration and investigation. In the telegram sent by Von Bernstorff, the representative of the German Government, he asks permission "to pay out $50,000, as on former occasions, to influence Congress," and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, Germany by her utter disregard of her treaty obligations to us, and by her failure to respect our rights as a neutral nation, forced me to the conclusion that she was of the opinion that we were too cowardly to fight, but I did not know before that the impression prevailed in Germany that we were a corrupt people and that Germany believed that the Congress of the United States could be bribed by German money.

Do you wonder now that after the Kaiser obtained this last impression from Von Bernstorff's telegram that he determined to break his promises to the President and to practically declare war upon the United States, as he did one week after this slanderous telegram was sent? The President, in his war message, mentioned certain foreign, corrupt, and sinister influences at work in our country, and the telegram sent by Von Bernstorff is an admission that Germany had a corrupt fund in the United States and that money from that fund had been used on former occasions to influence Congress and to carry on the German propaganda in this country.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that certain men and certain newspapers have changed their positions completely in the last few months. Before Germany made war upon us some of them were quarreling with the President because he would not go to war with Germany. They urged that the United States send men and money to France, but later, and I fear under the baneful influence of Von Bernstorff's evil organization, they reversed their positions and have been giving aid and comfort to the enemy. But, Mr. Speaker, Congress does not deserve the dastardly insinuations made against it by Von Bernstorff in his telegram of January 22, 1917.

I do not know what Members of Congress, if any, impressed the slanderous Bernstorff with the idea that Congress could be influenced by German money, but I do know that this telegram presents an ugly and a serious charge against the Congress of the United States and that it deserves attention at our hands.

Gentlemen of the House, we are honored with places in the greatest lawmaking body in the world, and the Constitution confers upon us the power to act when war threatens or when war is forced upon the country. We have exercised that power, and before we were called upon by the President to exercise that power to do what was best for this country Von Bernstorff, the representative of the German Government, sitting here in the Capital City, was carrying on a corrupt propaganda trying to influence the lawmaking body of this Nation against its own interest and in the interest of the German Government.

I do not know what Members of Congress, if any, have been influenced by this mysterious German organization. If I were permitted to express my opinion, I could name 13 or 14 men in the two bodies who, in my judgment, have acted in a suspicious manner. If Members have acted in a suspicious manner by the introduction of resolutions or bills or by speeches in the Congress or out of it, that leads to the conviction that they are not loyal to this Government in the hour of its peril—they ought to be investigated, and if found guilty they ought to be expelled from the House and from the Senate of the United States. If there is a man in either body who is not giving whole-hearted support to the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy in this war, he is not entitled to a seat in either branch of Congress.

Gentlemen, we are at war with the most desperate and the most brutal monarch in the world, and sedition and treason must not be tolerated in anybody now. Even Members of Congress must not do things that smack of sedition and disloyalty.

Count von Bernstorff suggested that Germany express friendship for Ireland. He said it would aid him in getting certain influences over here. Germany did express that friendship for Ireland immediately. She declared in favor of home rule for Ireland.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. So it seems, Mr. Speaker, that the German Government carried out that part of Von Bernstorff's suggestion.

Now, then, Von Bernstorff said that he wanted to use $50,000 more. For what purpose, Mr. Speaker? Why, to influence the Congress of the United States, he said. Now, then, what was done in that regard? Where was that money spent? I must admit that the conduct of some that I know has been suspicious and an investigation ought to be had. But I do want to say in conclusion that, as a Member of this House, I denounce the Bernstorff telegram as a slanderous insult against the great body of clean, honest, and loyal Americans who compose the two bodies of Congress. For the few who have acted suspiciously I have no word to say. They have my supreme contempt and they deserve the contempt of the American people; and in the name of the decent and loyal membership of this Congress, I ask for an investigation of the slanderous charges of Count von Bernstorff, of Germany. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take more than a few minutes of the time of the House, but this matter of a potash supply for this country is of such supreme importance to agriculture that I feel the House should have it brought to its attention.

I want to congratulate the Committee on Public Lands for its work in reporting out this bill. If the testimony before that committee is at all accurate—and we have no reason to doubt it—as to the supply of potash in Searles Lake, Cal., then we have almost immediately available as much as 5,000,000 tons of that mineral which is so essential in the production of a certain kind of agricultural crop, and which is likewise so necessary in the production of munitions of war.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LEVER. For a question.

Mr. QUIN. How many tons do we need a year for normal times?

Mr. LEVER. The normal consumption of potash in this country before the outbreak of the war was between 230,000 and 240,000 tons a year. So that if the experts who testified before the Committee on Public Lands as to the quantity at Searles Lake are correct, we should have on hand in the neighborhood of 20 years' supply in that one spot, if through this bill we shall make it available to development.

I am glad also that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands has made it entirely plain that the lower House of Congress has not been negligent in the matter of undertaking to supply this country with potash. Older Members of the House will recall that about 1909, on account of some rather suspicious breaking of contracts between the German Government and certain of our own citizens who were buying potash, there was inserted in the Agricultural appropriation bill an item for ascertaining the sources of potash and other fertilizer ingredients in this country, if any. The Department of Agriculture discovered the kelp beds of the Pacific, and has done its work largely along the line of undertaking to develop them. The last appropriation bill carried a sum sufficient to undertake to develop or demonstrate on a commercial scale the feasibility of manufacturing potash out of the giant seaweed or kelp. I have no report—

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. LEVER. I will yield in a moment. I have had no report within the past month or more from the Department of Agriculture on the progress they were making, but about six weeks ago I went over the matter very carefully with the gentleman who has charge of that work, and he informs me that the machinery is being put down and that they are now about in position to make the actual demonstration that these ocean weeds contain sufficient potash to supply our country for all time, if it can be extracted on a commercial scale.

If these gentlemen in the Department of Agriculture are correct in sizing up the situation we should in the course of a few years be on an absolutely self-sustaining basis with respect to potash, because their testimony has been that we could manufacture—their hope has been, at least, that we could manufacture—potash out of kelp, send it by way of the Panama Canal and deliver it upon the Atlantic seaboard in competition with the German Government under normal conditions. Whether they can do that or not is a matter of demonstration. I believe that they may accomplish that hope. But, gentlemen, the statement that I have made, backed by the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], proves beyond any shadow of a doubt that those of us who have served heretofore in this body have been exceedingly active since 1909, when the first acuteness in the potash situation took place.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan for a question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Has there been any estimate made by the committee or otherwise which shows how much it will cost to manufacture this potash out in Searles Lake when they once undertake it?

Mr. LEVER. I have not looked into the testimony before the Committee on Public Lands as to that, except to see a general statement in the testimony of some witness to the effect that it was thought that they could develop this Searles Lake potash to supply our needs in competition with German salts under normal conditions. If I am mistaken in my recollection of the statement I will be glad to have some member of the committee correct me.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield for a question.

Mr. KETTNER. For the benefit of the House I wish to say that the Hercules Powder Co., in the last year and a half, has been employing from 800 to 1,000 men in the manufacture of potash from kelp. Besides that plant there are four plants in San Diego working day and night, and have been for over a year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is there not a Government plant there, too?

Mr. KETTNER. It is not the Government plant. That is farther up the coast.

Mr. LEVER. I want to say this, gentlemen: Under normal conditions potash salts sell in the market at $48 a ton. The kind of salt we use for agricultural purposes does not cost so much. It is something between $10 and $12 per ton. But potash salts to-day sell for $48 a ton. In fact, they can not be had for agricultural purposes at all, and it is up to us, as far as possible, to undertake to supply our country with this absolutely necessary ingredient of fertilizer, because there are kinds of crops that you can not produce unless you have some potash. That is not entirely true of cotton; but, as a practical observer of farming conditions, I know that in the sand belt of the South, where cotton can be grown very successfully with potash, the yield, because a lack of it this year, will be reduced, I should calculate, from one-half to one-third.

Mr. STEENERSON. What other crop is it used for?

Mr. LEVER. For potatoes and tomatoes and vegetables generally; practically all crops of that character. I felt I ought to say that much, as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, in support of this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say just a few words in regard to this bill now pending before the House, words that possibly have not been said up to the present time. All of the provisions of this bill that is now before the House were considered four years ago by the Committee on Public Lands, and extensive hearings had. The bill was taken up before the House and passed. The bill went to the Senate, but it did not become a law, because the Senate did not even report it or favorably dispose of it.

At the beginning of the Sixty-fourth Congress the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands again introduced the bill.

Hearings were again had, because there were new members upon that committee, and the bill was again taken up and thoroughly gone into by the committee, to see wherein there might have been any mistakes or imperfections, so that those mistakes or imperfections might be supplied or eliminated. That bill was H. R. 406 of the Sixty-fourth Congress. It passed the House and went to the Senate, and died during the Sixty-fourth Congress.

The chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, Mr. FERRIS, reintroduced the bill in the Sixty-fifth Congress. The provisions relating to potash are practically the same as this bill, with one exception, as to Searles Lake and a small piece of territory in Wyoming. In addition this bill contains section 13, which gives the President the power to fix the price of potash and its products, and so forth.

The Senate bill which we are now considering, which was passed by that body and that came before the Committee on the Public Lands of the House, had a number of imperfections in it.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. RAKER. I had rather not yield until I make the consecutive statement which I have in my own mind. In this Congress the Committee on the Public Lands again took up this legislation and considered the bill now before the House and amended it so that it would carry out the provisions of House bill 406 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, to the end that after so much had been done by the committee and the House the labor would not be lost. The Department of the Interior, the Geological Survey, the Department of Agriculture, and, in fact, all the various departments of the Government, in addition to the best other information we could obtain, have assisted, that there might be proper legislation whereby potash might be discovered and developed, and every one who desired to prospect for this mineral be given an opportunity to do so, giving him 2,560 acres to prospect on, with a proper permit for two years, under approved rules and regulations, with the additional opportunity that when he had discovered potash he might patent one-fourth of the land upon which he held a prospecting permit, so that he might go on uninterruptedly, while the other three-fourths would not be opened again for prospecting or for patenting, but would be opened for leasing under the general provisions of this bill. The remainder of the tract would then be immediately available for the purpose of leasing and obtaining more potash.

Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to Searles Lake. There are only 160 acres of Searles Lake upon which there is a patent. All the rest of the land covered by this lake is withdrawn. Notwithstanding that, every foot of it has filings upon it by private individuals. These filings have been under contest before the Land Department, and there have been many contests in the courts to determine who was entitled to the possession of this lake. We believe, and the department believes, that facts have been developed whereby it can be shown that practically all of these filings were made for foreign interests. If these facts be true and properly established, the claims will be held void and this country will not be deprived of the benefit of that valuable deposit of potash.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. This bill reserves Searles Lake, to the end that the Government may utilize it in establishing a plant itself if it desires to do so, or may lease the land. It is expected that these pending contests will be disposed of in a short time and in favor of the Government and its citizens. They believe the evidence shows beyond all question that these filings on the lands covered by Searles Lake were made on behalf of aliens or in the interest of aliens. It will take in the neighborhood of $4,000,000, as it was stated before the Committee on the Public Lands, to put in a proper plant by which this mineral can be developed. Further, we were told by those who know that the moment this bill becomes a law these parties, or others to take their place, will be on hand with the money and the means to lease the deposits of Searles Lake and put up a proper plant to develop potash, so that there will be an ample supply each year for the Government of the United States, irrespective of our being unable to obtain any of the German supply of potash. There is no doubt but what this bill will pass the House without a dissenting vote. It is emergency legislation, and so recognized by all who are familiar with its provisions.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. Debate on that amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. QUIN. I move to strike out the last three words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, it is my judgment that this is a very important bill. Not only is there almost a potash famine in this country for agricultural purposes but also for the manufacture of munitions of war. It is commonly understood that the principal source of supply for potash is in the Black Forest of Germany. Every citizen of this country knows that we are at war with Germany, and that we can not now get any potash from that source. That is the reason why the fertilizer factories of this country can not supply the potash in fertilizer that the farmers of this country must have, and that is one of the reasons why the munitions makers, including our Government itself in its arsenals, have had to pay such an enormous price for the potash that they must use in the manufacture of explosives, and so forth. This bill will fix it so that our Government can have all the potash necessary at a reasonable price. It fixes it so that the fertilizer factories of this country can have all the potash necessary to manufacture fertilizer. We get the kelp out of Pacific waters—Lake Searles—and ship it through the Panama Canal to the Gulf of Mexico and along the Atlantic coast. It is also true that nitrogen is scarce. The Congress passed a law by which $20,000,000 was appropriated for the purpose of establishing a great nitrate factory, but to my utter amazement nothing has ever been done except to appoint a commission who selected four different sites for plants, I believe, at $1,000,000 each, which we know means nothing so far as fertilizer for commercial purposes is concerned. That nitrogen proposition that the American Congress believed was going to be worth so much to the American farmer is a dead issue. Why it was not carried out I can not say, but this Congress ought to inquire into that fact and see why nothing has been done.

According to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], chairman of the great Agricultural Committee of this House, 5,000,000 tons of potash can be secured from the source mentioned in this bill—Lake Searles—and that, too, at a very small price as compared to what we now pay. That is sufficient to last for 20 years. Shall we fail in our duty to the farmers and the Government? He stated that it could be produced at about $48 a ton. I believe the price is now $500 or $600 a ton, and one officer from a Government arsenal testified before our committee the other day that this Government for the manufacture of munitions of war would give $900 a ton if it could get all of the potash that it needs.

So with the facts staring us in the face that potash is becoming scarcer every day and that the farms of this country must produce agricultural products, we know that without a proper supply of potash and nitrogen there will be a scarcity of agricultural products.

The farmer can not afford to pay the exorbitant price now demanded because of the scarcity. The Government must come to his rescue with cheaper potash and nitrogen.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. We can get nitrogen into the soil by legumes and other plants whose roots penetrate the soil, such as peas, velvet beans, soy beans, and various kinds of clover. They take the nitrogen from the atmosphere and deposit it in the soil. But we can not get potash into the soil in that manner. There is no way we can get potash into the soil except through commercial fertilizers and the excrement from live stock. That is one of the essential reasons why this bill should become a law, and become a law as soon as possible. If the American farmers are to have the fertilizer to carry on farm operations, Congress must provide the means. If the American Government is to have the potash necessary to make munitions of war to carry on the war and win it, Congress must make the necessary provision and secure the potash. This bill will do it, and for one I am heartily in favor of it. This bill will locate all of the potash on the public lands in the United States, as well as utilize the kelp potash in the waters described. I think the gentleman who is chairman of the committee has done a fine piece of work in bringing it forth, and I hope that it will pass this afternoon. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendments are withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "one," insert the words "or more."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 13, strike out the words "640 acres" and insert the words "not to exceed one-fourth."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 3, line 17, strike out the words "50-year" and insert in lieu thereof "20-year."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 3, lines 22, 23, 24, and 25, strike out the following:

"Provided, That the potash deposits in the public lands in San Bernardino County, in the State of California, may be operated by the United States, or may be leased by the United States upon satisfactory terms."

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That the potash deposits in the public lands in and adjacent to Searles Lake in what would be, if surveyed, townships 24, 25, 26, and 27 south of ranges 42, 43, and 44 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, may be operated by the United States or may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior under the terms and provisions of this act: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may issue leases under the provisions of this act for deposits of potash in public lands in Sweetwater County, Wyo., also containing deposits of coal, on condition that the coal be reserved to the United States."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is his opinion that under the last paragraph in this amendment which refers to the potash deposits in Sweetwater County—the leucite hills deposits—the prospecting provisions of the bill would apply, or was it the intention of the committee to put them on all fours with the Searles Lake land and deposits?

Mr. FERRIS. The latter is the idea as it was worked out by the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman's interpretation of the provision is correct, it is in line with the view that I have taken of the policy that we should follow in all these matters.

Referring to some discussion had a little earlier, I regret that the chairman of the committee takes so much to heart observations I made in regard to the policy of this bill. We certainly all have a right to our own view of the proper policy to pursue. It is no answer to a criticism of a certain policy to criticize the man who opposes the policy, and certainly no answer to misstate his position in regard to the matter.

I introduced coal and oil leasing bills in this House when the gentleman from Oklahoma was a fledgling. I am inclined to think I introduced such leasing bills before he came to Congress. I have been in favor of a proper policy of that kind for many years, and at a time when it was not wholly popular in the West. I am not against this legislation, I am against some features of the plan which have been adopted.

Now, as to the question as to how much of this land might pass into fee ownership, let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that section 2 does not provide that after the lands have been embraced in a prospecting permit and a certain portion of them have been patented that thereafter the remaining lands shall be reserved for leasing purposes. There is no provision of that kind in the bill. The provision simply is that the lands once embraced in a prospecting permit may thereafter be leased under competitive bidding, but under the terms of the bill the lands embraced in a prospecting permit left after the patented area is eliminated could at some future time and might very properly, under the theory of the bill, be again subject to a prospecting permit. It does not always follow that lands in close proximity to those prospected and developed are by reason of the discovery then made necessarily developed into proven territory. Conditions are such that sometimes you have a new wildcat or speculation proposition in very close proximity to a fairly well-developed mineral field.

Now, as to the suggestion of the gentleman from Oklahoma that I offer an amendment striking out the provision of the bill which provides that the prospecting licenses shall ripen into a patent to one-fourth of the land, he knows very well that the only logical amendment that could be offered would be one under which the prospecting permit would ripen into a lease. It would follow that the form of lease provided in the bill under competitive bidding would be eliminated. In other words, the entire character of the legislation would be changed. The gentleman could not and would not accept the responsibility of approving such an amendment or series of amendments off-hand. I offered such amendments when the general mineral-leasing bill was before the last Congress, but the committee was pledged to the other plan, as they are now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I am very much in hopes that under this bill we shall have large developments in potash. I am in hopes that we shall secure the development of the so-called leucite hills, in Sweetwater County, in my State. Heretofore, while considerable sums have been expended with a view of developing processes for the extraction of the potash in these rocks, it has been difficult to develop any process that would extract the potash at a reasonable cost; but with the present high price there is every incentive to further development along those lines, and I am very much in hopes that under the opportunities this bill will afford that these deposits may be developed.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Let me call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that if it is intended to have this provision refer to Sweetwater, Wyo., under the same terms as that with respect to Searles Lake, the language ought to be changed, because the language used there would only allow the general provisions of the bill to apply, and not the exceptional provisions. I suggest to the chairman that an amendment ought to be offered by inserting after the word "under," before the word "provisions," the word "like," and strike out the words "of this act," so that it would read:

That the Secretary of the Interior may issue leases under like provisions for deposits of potash in public lands in Sweetwater County—

And so forth.

Mr. FERRIS. May I call the gentleman's attention to the absence in that second proviso of any words for permits, but I have no objection to that. It was the object of the Interior Department and the committee intended to let the Secretary of the Interior make concessions to those parties who had expended $40,000 in trying to develop forests, but who found themselves on coal lands and who under the law could not operate for potash on coal lands. They could not go any further.

Mr. TOWNER. I suggest the difficulty to the gentleman. Perhaps there is nothing in the suggestion.

Mr. FERRIS. There may be.

Mr. TOWNER. But the trouble with that proposition is that while the difficulty with regard to coal, and perhaps conflicting rights that would arise under coal and potash may be relieved, it would not relieve the Sweetwater County project from the general terms of the bill so that they might take the one-fourth of the land—

Mr. MONDELL. That one-fourth provision applies only to permits of undeveloped land, so that I do not think the gentleman's amendment is necessary, but if he thinks so I shall accept it.

Mr. TOWNER. I would defer to the gentleman's judgment in that regard.

Mr. FERRIS. We went into that thoroughly. In the first part of the bill the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue permits on undeveloped land, and this provision authorizes a lease of land where it has already been discovered, both in Searles Lake and in Sweetwater County.

Mr. TOWNER. This has received the approval of the Interior Department?

Mr. FERRIS. The Interior Department drafted it.

Mr. TOWNER. As they will have to interpret it, I suppose it is safe.

Mr. FERRIS. They drafted it and brought it to us.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. In the next section there is no amendment offered by the committee, but there should be one. May I offer it now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the best practice is to take up the committee amendments first. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 12, after the word "hereof," insert the words "or otherwise."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 17, after the word "any," insert the word "other."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 24, after the word "in," strike out the words "any court of competent jurisdiction" and insert in lieu thereof "the United States district court for the district in which the property or some part thereof is located."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 5, after the figure "6," insert: "That any permit, lease, occupation, or use permitted under this act shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to permit for joint or several use such easements or rights of way upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same, or of other lands containing the deposits described in this act, and the treatment and shipment of the products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees, or permittees, and for other public purposes: Provided."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 7, after the word "in," strike out the words "a court of competent jurisdiction" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the United States district court for the district in which the property or some part thereof is located."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 11, insert the following: "or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force under the date of the lease."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, before that amendment is voted upon I ask unanimous consent in the last amendment to change the word "hereof" to "thereof."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to change the word "hereof" to "thereof" in the last amendment just adopted. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma, the chairman of the committee, for a moment? Just what is the purpose of striking out those words, "any court of competent jurisdiction," and inserting "the United States district court"?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the gentleman asked that, for I think the record ought to show why. In considering this same legislation in the two preceding Congresses, it being then part of the so-called conservation leasing bill, after thrashing it over and over again, it was the thought of the committee that these controversies over Government leases ought to be tried out in a Federal court rather than in the local or State courts. Let me give an additional reason to that, as that standing alone probably would not be sufficient. Out in the West there is extensive litigation going on over oil wells on Government lands, and in some instances millions of dollars of property is impounded in money and in oil awaiting the action of courts and what not to determine the relative rights of the parties. The difficulties arise and the litigation arises due to two withdrawal orders—one by ex-President Roosevelt and one, I think, by ex-President Taft—and those people are litigating to-day in the courts, and also prosecuting their claims before the Congress, to determine what the real interests of the Government were, which are large, or might be large, pertaining to the leasing of these oil wells. It was thought that we had better try them out in the Federal courts rather than for it to go to the local courts, which might be influenced by local sentiment, and we felt that some provision should be made with reference to these controversies, and therefore incorporated it in this bill in an abundance of caution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the litigation to which the gentleman refers pending in the State courts now?

Mr. FERRIS. Some of it has been, but the bulk of it is in the United States courts. Some of it has been in State courts through restraining orders, injunction proceedings, applications for relief, and so forth. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] says that it is all in the Federal courts now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, if I understand the gentleman correctly, that which lies fundamentally at the bottom of it is the fear that the local courts might be influenced by local prejudices?

Mr. FERRIS. It almost amounts to that; yes. For instance, in the West the litigation and the matter in controversy is of such transcendent importance and the amounts are so large—I had those amounts at my hand and I remember some of them—there was an instance where a single oil claim goes up into the millions of dollars and the money was impounded, the oil impounded, awaiting decision whether that belonged to the Federal Government or the claimant, growing out of these withdrawal orders.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would not like to agree to the proposition that just because the amount involved is large that therefore it is necessary to go into the Federal courts to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the State courts, certainly not in my State, but I defer to the superior judgment of the gentleman on this proposition—

Mr. FERRIS. These are Government leases we are dealing with. We are dealing with Government property and Federal questions and Federal matters, and while in the main I do not want to cast any slander on any State courts—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman it seems to me that is the ground really upon which this ought to be justified, that you are dealing with Federal property, and therefore you should try it in the Federal courts.

Mr. FERRIS. I desire to say in all frankness—

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, certainly the very desirable object would be to prevent a conflict of jurisdiction between the State and the United States courts, and if this amendment is adopted it will prevent any possible conflict of jurisdiction.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, is it not true that those cases that involve Federal issues should be taken by the Federal Government to the Federal courts, and therefore it is better to have them initiated in the Federal courts. They will be taken to the Federal courts ultimately in any event, and I think it would be more satisfactory to the people to have them taken to the Federal courts. If the gentleman will recall the legislation which his committee reported with regard to reserved rights of land where mineral is retained by the Government where there are certain issues between rival claims, the committee very properly provided those cases go to a court of competent jurisdiction, to which many, if not a majority, of the cases would be referred.

Mr. FERRIS. That is controversy between two citizens. We anticipate most of those controversies.

Mr. MONDELL. And evidently these cases would go to the Federal court.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. By the removal of the Federal Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 7, line 11, after the word "lease," insert the words "or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 7, line 14, after the word "thereof," strike out the colon and the following language:

"Provided, That no provision or limitation shall be inserted or included in any lease waiving or requiring the waiver of the right of the lessee or of the United States to resort to the court."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 7, line 19, after the word "shall," insert the word "also."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 7, line 20, after the word "all," insert the words "deposits of potassium salts in the."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 8, after the figure "10," in line 1, strike out all of the language down to and including the word "act," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That all moneys received from royalties and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, but after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, 50 per cent of the amounts derived from such royalties and rentals so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard in opposition to the committee amendment.

The Senate bill provided that 50 per cent of the royalty and rentals should be paid to the States where they accrued and 50 per cent should go into the reclamation fund. The committee amendment provides that all of the royalties and rentals shall flow into the reclamation fund, and after they are repaid 50 per cent shall then be paid to the States and local communities for schools and roads. It occurs to me that it is compelling the local communities to wait a long time for their share in the benefits of this legislation to ask them to wait until the money shall have been paid into the reclamation fund and then repaid. I do not believe you could ever tag the dollars that come from these sources in such a way as to ever identify them when again, after the lapse of many years, they might emerge in repayments to the reclamation fund.

It is altogether too uncertain and nebulous a proposition to hold out any real, substantial hope to the communities of benefit from the law. We are taking from these communities the benefits that would accrue to them from taxation on the values in the lands when owned in fee, leaving them nothing on which to raise funds, except the opportunity to tax the improvements and possibly the sums derived through a mine-output tax. This legislation has been approved largely in the West, at least, because of the fact that there is hope that through it we may secure larger returns to the public than we do under private ownership, as our mineral resources are exhausted and as our deposits are depleted; and the communities should not be disappointed in their hopes of benefit through laws like this. The day when they are to be benefited should not be put off to so distant a time that there is little hope of the present generation getting any benefit. Therefore I hope that the amendment will not be adopted, but that the communities will immediately receive 50 per cent of the rents and royalties. I want to say my expectation is that ultimately this plan of equal division of funds between the States and the reclamation fund will be agreed upon. I have seen signs on the street cars at one time and another saying, "Some time this, that, or the other. Why not now?" I commend that slogan to the House now.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma will pardon me for trespassing. I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to refer back to a provision that was passed, because I think really there ought to be some explanation of it. On page 7, beginning with line 15, striking out the proviso, the bill says: "Provided, That no provision or limitation shall be inserted or included in any lease," and so forth. Do I understand that amendment was suggested by the department?

Mr. FERRIS. This proviso that was stricken out?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. No.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I mean, was the striking of it out suggested by the department?

Mr. FERRIS. They were in favor of it, and so were the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. You did not think it was necessary? Or did you strike it out because you did not think that ought to be provided in the contract?

Mr. FERRIS. My point is this: There is always clamor in the West that claimants for public lands, claimants for mineral lands, claimants for forest lands, should have a right to come in and sue the Government. I have never been in favor of turning citizens of my own State or of any other State loose to sue the Government. It may work a hardship upon individuals, but the interest of the Government is most important, and we have required everyone else to come in and secure their claims through the Committee on Claims, which is a very circuitous route.

In each instance where I have observed authority was being given or attempted to be given to any class of citizens to sue the Government I have been against it. I thought that was what this proposed to do. If the claims were unimportant out there we might not have to be so cautious, but the fact is the claims of the oil people are so extensive and so vast that scarcely any Member of Congress knows what is going on out there. These oil people have interests out there that are mountain high, and the Government has rights and interests out there which are technical and hard to preserve. I did not know what that was put in for. It has never been in any other legislation, and it was not clear who was responsible for it, and I thought it was an attempt to allow the people to sue the Government promiscuously and bring down a shower bath of trouble on our heads, and therefore I proposed to strike it out.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has there been any leasing before?

Mr. FERRIS. We have had leasing on Indian lands, but not on the Government domain. On the Indian lands the leasing system has been going on successfully. We have never had leasing on the Government domain because at the other end of the Capitol we have never been able to get through a proposition for leasing. What they want to do over there is to give away the land. I have been striving, and the committee has been striving, to preserve the land to the Government. We have not been able heretofore to get any legislation on the subject of leasing as far advanced as this is. The Senate has finally decided to allow the Government to lease its own property, and I am trying at least to help make that first step in that direction.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not want to take up more time here—

Mr. FERRIS. I should be glad if the gentleman would take time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, accepting the gentleman's suggestion, I do not think it would interfere with the individual leases, but if the Government makes itself a party to a business contract and we put in a provision there that you can not go into the courts, by striking that language out you could leave it where the administrative authorities can put into the lease, if they choose to, a provision that they shall not resort to the courts.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true, but they have to grapple with a lot of wary old birds out there, and the Government's hands ought not to be tied, and the Government should have its rights preserved. I may be a little overcautious, but I believe that should be kept in, and the committee so believed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 9, by striking out all after the figures "12," on page 7, down to and including the word "act," on line 17, and inserting the following:

"That the deposits herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals, shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 10, line 8, by striking out the word "such" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "all."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 10, line 12, by striking out the words "the product" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "any of such products."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 10, line 16, after the word "of," by striking out the words "such mineral" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the potassium products."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. That disposes of the committee amendments. I move to strike out the word "grant," in line 15, page 4, and insert the word "issue."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER: Page 4, line 15, strike out the word "grant" and insert in lieu thereof the word "issue."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. FERRIS. I move that the House insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the Senate, in order to facilitate the consideration of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House insist on its amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LENROOT.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER, KY.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bridge bill which will take but a minute. It has been pending a good while, and there is no objection to it. And I am anxious to get it through the House today, so that there will be plenty of time to get it through the Senate before adjournment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which he sends to the Clerk's desk.

The bill (H. R. 5335) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., authorized by an act approved January 28, 1916, was read by title.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. LANGLEY. It is.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think we ought to take up a bill that is on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. LANGLEY. The bridge is in process of construction, but the time limit has expired. Unless the time is extended the work can not, of course, legally proceed, which would result in irreparable injustice to gentlemen who have put their money into it. I hope my friend from Massachusetts will not object.

Mr. WALSH. All right.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. LANGLEY. It is; and the War Department recommends the extension of the time. I assure my friend from Tennessee that the bill is all right and ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to make a very short statement about the Unanimous Consent Calendar. We have been running here at loose ends about it, so to speak, during this whole session. The Unanimous Consent Calendar has been called only once; and while the Chair is as much in favor of maintaining the integrity of that calendar as anybody else can be, it seems to the Chair that it is an imperative necessity to pass such things as these bridge bills. Consequently when the leaders of the two parties and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], who has the calendar specially in charge, do not object, the Chair will recognize gentlemen. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of a bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved January 28, 1916, to be built across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., is hereby extended one year from the 28th day of January, 1916.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "the," strike out the word "time" and insert in lieu thereof the word "times."

Page 1, line 3, after the word "for," insert the words "commencing and."

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "is" and insert the word "are."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "extended," insert the word "to."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "year," insert the words "and three years respectively."

Page 2, line 2, strike out "sixteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen."

Mr. LANGLEY. The date 1916 was a typographical error. As I drew the bill it read "1917." The other amendments proposed by the committee are, so the chairman informs me, in line with the phraseology which they have adopted in similar cases recently, and they are satisfactory to me.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANGLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GERMAN PHILOSOPHY IN THE WORLD WAR.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the subject of German philosophy in the world war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for five minutes to speak on German philosophy in the world war. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, for three years the world has seen a war heretofore beyond the imaginings of man. Death and destruction have walked the earth, and heartbreak, sorrow, and the devastation of passions run riot have been the rule and not the exception.

At last we have entered the conflict. The overwhelming vote of the American Congress was for war. Representatives coming from all parts of the Union, representing the people of every walk of life, being themselves representative of every class, selected presumptively for the confidence that the people had in their ability, integrity, and judgment, have decided that the United States shall become a participant in the European struggle. Why?

I shall seek to answer this question, or at least give the reasons why I believe that our participation is imperatively necessary and righteous. Behind every act lies its philosophy, the motives, emotions, and will that brought it into being. To grasp its meaning one must have grasped its philosophy. Its significance lies in the reasons for its doing.

A few years ago Europe was a smiling land, the seat of learning and culture; the genius of the artist had builded well, and building and monument sought to express in molded form the ideals of the human soul; the riches of years, the collection of the toil of centuries expressed itself in painting, fresco, and cathedral, and in the smiling face of a garden-like land. War! And under the battering of cannon shot the fair land of France and Belgium became a ruin. Ancient cathedral and humble cottage became brethren in destruction. Where the devotee once knelt before his sacred altars and where happy children prattled and played with childish glee around the cottage hearth, bat and reptile alike have their home. The earth is rotten with the decaying flesh of men, the quiet of peaceful landscape has given place to the braying of war, thousands go to exile and as slaves work under the will of military masters, the cry of the woman in travail through force and not through love fills the land, and the moans of outraged womanhood and childhood can be heard in hamlet, city, and field.

More than this, violence has stretched its hand from the land to the sea and from the floors of dark ocean caves the skeleton fingers of baby hands wave with the movement of the waters, and skeleton arms of dead motherhood still clasp skeleton babies to fleshless breasts, rocking them to quietness with the movement of the waves. Outrage with the war cross has visited our own shores, and men and women shattered with dynamite have died in a hell of shock and flame. Spies fill the land even in times of peace, and plotting and intrigue are the order of the day.

We have seen these things and we have wondered. We have seen heroic little Belgium overrun and devastated contrary to the laws of nations, the laws of humanity, and solemn treaty obligations; we have seen the law of nations flung to the winds by the Imperial German Government, and innocent men, women, and children—neutrals and noncombatants—ruthlessly murdered on the high seas; we have seen the harmless, inoffensive civil population of Belgium and France given over to outrage, slavery, and the wanton destruction of private property, and we have asked ourselves why Germany has no regard for treaties, no regard for law, no regard for the accepted rules of civilized warfare. We have seen her plotting to involve us in war with Mexico and Japan if we should dare to insist upon our legally acknowledged rights to sail the seas, promising to give to Mexico a portion of our territory—Texas and New Mexico; we have seen her, through her accredited representatives in this country, busily engaged in plots to destroy our factories, violate our neutrality, and destroy the lives of our citizens. We have seen her prohibit us the right to sail the sea, calmly telling us that if we exercised this right, our citizens and our ships would be sunk without warning. These are the facts. What is their philosophy? If we can determine it, we will have an explanation of what has been done and also a criterion of future conduct.

Von Bernhardt, a Prussian general, in his work Germany and the Next War, which appeared in 1913 in the first two chapters, "The right to make war and the duty to make war," sums up the philosophy of the German autocracy. Speaking of war, he says:

War is a biological necessity of the first importance, a regulative element in the life of mankind which can not be dispensed with, since without it an unhealthy development will follow, which excludes every advancement of the race, and therefore all civilization.

Again:

The law of the stronger holds good everywhere.

Again:

No power exists which can judge between States and makes its judgments prevail. Nothing in fact is left but war to secure to the true elements of progress the ascendancy over the spirits of corruption and decay.

Again:

Lastly, in all times the right of conquest by war has been admitted. It may be that a growing people can not win colonies from uncivilized races, and yet the State wishes to retain the surplus population which the mother country can no longer feed. Then the only recourse left is to acquire the necessary territory by war.

Having reached the conclusion that war is desirable in itself, he says:

From this point of view efforts to secure peace are extraordinarily detrimental to the national health so soon as they influence politics—the efforts directed toward the abolition of war must not only be termed foolish but absolutely immoral, and must be stigmatized as absolutely unworthy of the human race.

And—

Again, speaking of the argument that war could be condemned on Christian grounds, he says:

Christian morality is personal and social and in its nature can not be political. Its object is to promote morality of the individual in order to strengthen him to work unselfishly in the interests of the community.

In short, the ordinary moral considerations which restrain individuals in their acts toward one another have no application to governments.

In another place he says:

Reflection thus shows that war is not only an unqualified necessity, but that it is justifiable from every point of view.

Claus Wagner also subscribes to these views. Treitschke taught that the morality of the State can not be judged by the standard of individual morality; that the morality of the State must be judged by the nature and reason of existence of the State; and that the end all and be all of a government is power. Treitschke again observes:

Among all political sins the sin of feebleness is the most contemptible; it is the political sin against the Holy Ghost.

Haeckle taught that "force takes priority over right."

Clausman states:

All idea of philanthropy in war is a pernicious error.

Marshal von Hoesseler was quoted as saying:

If a people have the right of dominion its power of conquest constitutes the highest moral law, and before it the vanquished must bow.

Gen. Hartman said:

When the national war breaks forth terrorism becomes a necessary military principle.

Erzberger is quoted as saying in the Reichstag:

This war ought to be as pitiless as possible.

Von Moltke said:

War is an ordinance set by God.

In 1913, in the year prior to the war, an official German report reads in part as follows:

Neither ridiculous shriekings for revenge by French chauvinists, nor the Englishman's gnashing of teeth, nor the wild gestures of the Slav will turn us from our aim of protecting and extending German influence all over the world. It is our sacred duty to sharpen the sword that has been put into our hands and to hold it ready for offense as well as for defense. We must accustom them (our people) to think that an offensive war on our part is a necessity. We must stir up troubles in the north of Africa and in Russia. In the next European war it will also be necessary that the small States shall be forced to follow us or be subdued. In certain conditions their armies and their fortified places can be rapidly conquered or neutralized. This would probably be the case with Belgium and Holland.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi is making a very interesting speech, and I want to hear more of it. I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENABLE. A few years before the war the Pan Germanic League published a manifesto under the name of "Universal Empire." In it was stated:

Progressive effort will be carried on until our batteries can be unmasked without danger. Europe will then find herself confronted by a situation already prepared, even to the minutest details, and against which she will be powerless.

Gen. Wrochem at a meeting of the German Defense League at Danzig, March, 1913, said:

A developing, onward-striving people like ourselves requires new land for its energies; and if peace will not secure it, then war only remains.

J. L. Reimer, in a work entitled "Ein Pandermanisches Deutschland" (A Pan German Germany), writes in 1905:

It is precisely our craving for expansion that drives us into the paths of conquest, and, in view of which, all chatter about peace and humanity can and must remain nothing but chatter.

Klaus Wagner, in his work Krieg or War, in 1906 writes:

Let us bravely organize great forced migrations of the inferior peoples. Posterity will be grateful to us. We must coerce them. This is one of the tasks of war; the means must be superiority of armed force. Superficially such forced migrations and the penning up of inconvenienced peoples in narrow "reserves" may appear hard, but it is the only solution of the race question that is worthy of humanity. * * * Thus alone can the overpopulation of the earth be controlled; the efficient peoples must secure themselves elbow room by means of war, and the inefficient must be hemmed in and at last driven into reserves where they have no room to grow * * * and where, discouraged and rendered indifferent to the future by the spectacle of the superior energy of their conquerors, they may crawl slowly toward the peaceful death of weary and hopeless senility.

Again:

Every great people needs new territory; it must expand over foreign soil; it must expel the foreigner by the power of the sword.

Albrecht Wirth, in his book Orient und Weltpolitik, published in 1913, writes:

One thing alone can really profit the German people—the acquisition of new territory.

Maximilian Harden, writing in his paper August 12, 1911, says:

Since the western powers restrict our right to life, it is necessary that we should attach one of them to us or that we should sweep them out of our way by force.

Again, July 29, 1911:

The hostile arrogance of the western powers releases us from all our treaty obligations * * * and forces the German Empire, resolutely defending her vital rights, to revive the ancient Prussian policy of conquest.

C. L. Poehlmann, writing in 1914 in his book, The Good of the World War, states:

If every representative, rising to the height of the great time in which he lives—

And so forth—

we shall be an unconquerable people, capable of ruling the world.

In a book, Germany at the Beginning of the Twentieth Century, which appeared in 1900, it is written, speaking of the method of conduct of war:

Even if there were no question of vengeance, even if we were not demanding reparation for ancient wrongs * * * the crime of opposing the development of Germany is so great that the most trenchant measures are scarcely a sufficient punishment for it.

Again:

Whoever enters upon a war in future will do well to look only to his own interests and pay no heed to any so-called international law. He will do well to act without consideration and without scruple.

Nietzsche in his work The Joyous Wisdom writes:

Hatred, delight in mischief, rapacity, and ambition, and whatever else is called evil, belong to the marvelous economy of the conservation of the race.

Again—

In reality the evil impulses are just in as high a degree expedient, indispensable, and conservative of the species as the good, only their function is different.

Gen. Hartman states in the thirteenth volume of his work on Military Necessity and Humanity that—

Terrorism is seen to be a relatively gentle procedure, useful to keep in a state of obedience the masses of the people.

Reimer, from whom I have already quoted, writes in his Pan German Germany:

If the nations in question have nothing Germanic in them, and are therefore foreign to our kultur, the question at once arises, Do they stand in the way of our expansion, or do they not? In the latter case let them develop as their nature prescribes; in the former case it would be folly to spare them, for they would be like a wedge in our flesh, which we refrained from extracting only for their own sake. If we found ourselves forced to break up the historical form of the nation in order to separate its racial elements, taking what belongs to our race and rejecting what is foreign to it, we ought not therefore to have any moral scruples or to think ourselves inhuman.

In a series of pamphlets by the professors of Berlin University and a few others appears a sermon by Pastor D. Baumgarten (1914-15), his subject being the Sermon on the Mount, and his statement is as follows:

Whoever can not prevail upon himself to approve from the bottom of his heart the sinking of the Lusitania, whoever can not conquer his sense of the gigantic cruelty to unnumbered perfectly innocent victims * * * and give himself up to honest delight at this victorious exploit of German defensive power, him we judge to be no true German.

Eduard von Hartmann in his The Philosopher of the Unconscious says that—

Belligerent states are always and exclusively in a pure state of nature, in which there can not possibly be any question of right.

In a publication which appeared in 1914, "Was uns der Krieg bringen muss" (What the war must bring us), appears this statement:

Treaties under international law are no more than the formulated expression of the existent relations of power between states. If these relations of power have so far changed that a real or imaginary vital interest of one of the States demand and render possible the alterations of such treaties, it is the simple duty of the leader of that state to effect the alteration by all conceivable means, so long as the risk does not appear greater than the anticipated advantage.

Gen. von Bernhardt, from whom I have already quoted, states in his book Germany and the Next War:

The law of the strong holds good everywhere. Might is the supreme right, and the dispute as to what is right is decided by the arbitrament of war. War gives a biologically just decision.

Reimer states in his work:

Let it not be said that every people has a right to its existence—

And so forth.

By making play with this principle one may put on a cheap appearance of civilization, but only so long as the people in question * * * does not stand in the way of a more powerful people.

Prof. von Seyden declared in the Frankfurter Zeitung:

Germany should and wishes to be let alone. The Germans are the elect people of the earth. They will accomplish their destiny, which is to govern the world and to direct other nations for the welfare of humanity.

Gen. von Disfurth stated in a published interview:

Germany stands as the supreme arbiter of her own methods, which in time of war the world must be compelled to accept.

Mr. Speaker, from the above quotations, which might be multiplied almost indefinitely, the philosophy of German autocracy is apparent. Summed up, this is the reasoning: It is a great law of nature that the highest development of each species of creature is worked out through the survival of the fittest; that throughout all the animate world the stronger grow stronger by preying upon the weaker; that this, being a law of nature, is a law of God and is right; that human beings are creatures, and so the law applies to them; that nations or States being but aggregations of human beings; it applies to governments, and so it is right that nations should expand and grow strong at the expense of weaker peoples; that since weaker peoples will resist and wars will come as a necessary accompaniment of this righteous expansion and growth, wars are right, and since wars are right anything that makes war effective or more effective is right; that the moral considerations which restrain individuals have no sort of application to governmental action or to men acting for their governments.

In view of this philosophy the acts of Germany are ruthlessly logical. Holding to it for 40 years she diligently prepared herself for war.

The opportunity presented itself. An Austrian prince was assassinated by a Serbian, and Austria-Hungary, bound by treaty with Germany and under German influence, made such demands upon Serbia as were never made before by one sovereign State upon another, and which no State could accede to without becoming a vassal. Even in this contingency Serbia acceded to all demands but one in her desire to avoid war, and this one was that Austrian judges and officers should try Serbian citizens in Serbian courts. Within 48 hours war was declared and the world plunged into a sea of blood.

Germany, France, and England each had a treaty with the little country of Belgium whereby they pledged themselves to preserve and defend the integrity of Belgian territory in the event of a European war. Because the frontier between Germany and France was heavily fortified, it was considered expedient to attack France through Belgium. Heroic little Belgium refused to permit her territory to be used in an attack upon a neighbor with whom she was at peace and refused to break her treaty with France. Contrary to the law of nations, contrary to solemn treaty obligations, contrary to the laws of humanity, the German armies were hurled across her borders, her country devastated, her citizens killed, her men and women enslaved and forced to work for German masters. What mattered the treaty? What mattered the destruction of property? What mattered the law of nations and the rules of humanity? Was not Germany living and acting according to the great, divine, biological law?

The German chancellor called the treaty a "scrap of paper," and the Kaiser excused the international highwaymanship on the grounds of military expediency. "War being right, anything that makes it effective is right."

To the German military mind terrorism is a legitimate means of warfare in that it breaks down the morale of a people and renders their conquest the more easy. Says the German war code:

A war conducted with energy can not be directed merely against the combatants of the enemy State and the positions which they occupy, but will in like manner seek to destroy the total intellectual and material resources of the latter.

Poor Belgium! Poor France! If the sworn testimony of your citizens and soldiers be true, your daughters have been ravished before the eyes of their mothers; your babies impaled upon the spikes of bayonets, stretching their little arms in their agony, appealing to a philosophy which knows no pity; your young women have been mutilated with the sword of officers and the bayonets of private soldiers; your homes destroyed through sheer wantonness; and your land made a desert waste. But what are these things but incidents in the operation of a great biological law? And who would say that there was guilt since these things were done in behalf of the State?

Is this all? Since war is right and what makes it more effective is right, we find that rules of civilized warfare are thrown to the winds, undefended towns and cities are attacked by airship and old men, women, and children killed because it is thought that thus the people may be made to long for peace and to surrender the sooner. Contrary to her own solemn agreements with other nations, cruel methods of warfare have been resorted to; men gurgling, die from poison gases, or shrieking, die from liquid flames first used by the Germans.

In view of this philosophy, what man can fail to see that a nation whose ruling power subscribes to it, constitutes a standing menace to the peace of the world, boldly declaring that she purposes to make war upon any nation at any time she believes that by so doing she can gain territory or power; that this is not only her right but her duty? And in view of it, how fallacious is the statement that the outrages committed by her are the acts of a war-crazed people! We all have longed for the time when wars should cease and nations might be relieved of the tremendous burdens of huge armies and navies. As long as a government exists believing in and acting upon the philosophy of the German Government there remains nothing for nations to do except to arm themselves against that day when they may be attacked. The destruction of, or the rendering impotent of, German autocracy is the only remedy.

But we did not go to war to correct a philosophy but because this philosophy resulted in the making of warfare upon us.

We are all familiar with the facts as to how Germany, throwing aside all rules of international law and all rules theretofore prescribed by herself, instituted the practice of sinking merchant ships by submarines without warning and without an opportunity for neutrals and noncombatants to reach a place of safety. It is the rule, according to international law and the practice of nations, to which Germany subscribed prior to this war, that while a belligerent has the right to sink the ship of its enemy, it has not the right to do so unless it does afford and can afford an opportunity for neutrals and noncombatants to escape; that the vessels of neutrals carrying contraband of war can not be sunk until, after search, it is determined that contraband is in fact carried and until an opportunity is afforded for neutrals and noncombatants to escape to a place of safety.

Germany, however, because it suited her military purpose, violated this rule to which she herself had subscribed and sank hundreds of the ships of neutrals without warning and without an opportunity for women, children—neutrals and noncombatants—to escape. Ship after ship was sent to the bottom of the sea without warning—torpedoed without notice—and thousands of innocent men, women, and children, contrary to all law, all the rules of humanity and the custom of nations, were sent, all unshriven and untimely, to their graves.

We remember with what horror we awakened one morning to learn that the great ship Lusitania, without warning and without the poor boon of a second's notice, had been sent to the bottom of the sea by a German submarine, carrying with her in her mad plunge to the ocean deeps the bodies of 116 American citizens, men, women, and babies—all killed without sanction of law and without the slightest compunction of conscience.

We remember how our Government, loath to plunge into the European struggle, after lengthy negotiations elicited a promise from the Imperial German Government that thereafter no ship would be sunk without warning and without an opportunity being given for neutrals and noncombatants to escape, and yet a few months thereafter we were formally notified that after a certain date the Imperial German Government proposed to sink without warning and without notice all vessels of all nations, friends or enemies, going to an enemy country or to the port of a friendly one loaded with contraband or loaded with noncontraband, or, indeed, even if empty, provided it came within certain zones of the sea, including the ocean around Great Britain, the North Sea, and the Mediterranean, we being granted, however, the right to send one or two ships a week into certain ports if we decorated them in a definite way with certain stripes and signs after the verisimilitude of a barber's pole. And true to her warning, Germany is daily sending to the bottom of the sea without warning ships of all countries, friends and enemies alike, and excuses the violation of law, human and divine, on the theory that it is necessary to the waging of a successful war, and that in doing it she is but living according to the divine law of the survival of the fittest. "Anything that makes war effective is right" is her doctrine.

To submit to the German decree and the ukase of the Kaiser to stay off the seas meant that the commerce of the United States would have been ruined, for not only under this decree were we prohibited from trading with the enemies of Germany but also with any country, for to reach them we would have had to pass through these prohibited ocean zones and our ships would have been sunk. Obedience meant the abandonment of American commerce; it meant that the products of our farms and factories would have had no market; that southern cotton and western and northern wheat would have rotted in the fields; that the factories of the country would have lain idle; that thousands of workmen would have been thrown out of employment and their families suffer for the necessities of life. But it meant more than this. It would have meant the sacrifice of national honor; that we had sunk so low in quality of courage from the days when we battled for our rights on the sea in the war with the Tripoli pirates and with the English in 1812 that we, like beaten hounds, would have obeyed the unlawful order of a foreign potentate. Obedience meant financial and industrial ruin for the people of our country, and in addition to this it meant the loss of national self-respect and honor.

The sea is the common highway of all mankind and has been so recognized from time immemorial. Neutrals at all times have had the right to carry on their commerce on the seas. I am frank to say that I have been unable to grasp the point of view of the few Members of this Congress who take the position that we should have submitted to this unlawful decree of the Kaiser. It was submit or fight, and a vote against war meant a vote to submit.

I am one of those who believe that it is the duty of the Government to protect the citizen in his rights wherever he may be, on land or sea. As I see it, government has only one excuse for existence, and that is the protection of the citizen in his property, his life, and his liberty, and when a government fails or refuses to do that it fails in its only function.

I believe that that flag which hangs there with its stripes of white emblematic of the purity of our national motives, its red emblematic of the virility of our national purposes, and its field of blue binding in a common field the stars of the States emblematic of our Union in a common cause for the promotion of our purposes and the attainment of our ideals, should be truly a token of the protection which this Nation affords to the rights of its citizens whether at home or abroad. Under its folds the citizen should be able to stand with a proud consciousness that behind him is a proud Nation of a hundred million of his fellows ready to protect him in the exercise of his just rights.

But there be those who profess to believe that we should have waived our rights in this instance and have obeyed the imperious command of German autocracy. They say that Germany is mad and we could afford to waive our rights until she had gained her sanity. In the first place, I have shown that these acts are not the result of desperation but are true to her philosophy—the cold, deliberate acts of calculating policy.

Again, in insisting upon the observance of international law, our Government is rendering the high service of preserving law in the world, for if it be once admitted that a supposed military necessity or that expediency can change the well-understood rules of international law, these rules would cease to exist, for each nation would reserve to itself the right to say what constituted necessity and what made a certain course expedient.

The Imperial German Government practically blockaded our ports and prohibited us from trading with the European world, because to do so we would have had to pass through the prohibited territory. There be some who apparently profess to believe that we should have admitted the right of Germany to do this or else the Government should have waived the right.

As I have indicated, this meant the industrial ruin of the country. The southerner's cotton would have been worth but a few cents a pound, since we only use five or six million bales in this country, less than half of the amount raised; the wheat and corn would have rotted in the fields for lack of a market, and factories would have been forced to close because of the lack of a market for their product, resulting in thousands being thrown out of employment. But more than this, the Government could not have submitted to the Kaiser's order to get off the seas without a complete loss of national honor, the forfeiture of the respect of the citizens of other countries and that of our own. Each nation has a right of way or easement across the seas. It is the great national highway, just as the citizen has a right of way along the public roads of his State. Suppose that I should serve notice on a farmer of my State that, if he exercised his right to go along the public highway from his farm to his market, I would kill him, and kill him, too, in the most cowardly way, by assassination from ambush, and he should go to the sheriff or the governor of the State and state the case to him, and the governor or sheriff would reply that it was true that he had the right to travel the highway, but that I was a desperate man and if he was protected in his right and the right defended that someone might get hurt, and so the best thing for him to do was to go home and resign himself to bankruptcy and his family to possible starvation and want—what would you say of the position of the governor or sheriff? You would say that they should be impeached; that the Government must protect its citizens in their rights; and that there was but one answer that Government could make, regardless of costs, and that was that the law must be enforced and the citizen protected if anarchy was not to come and right cease to exist.

If I can not prohibit the use of a highway by threats of or actual assassination, why can the Imperial German Government do it? If the State can not take the position of sending its citizen home undefended, how can the United States Government do it? Our citizens have a right of way across the seas as truly as the Mississippi farmer has a right of way along the public highways of that State, and if the State government must protect him in the exercise of the one right, why must not the Federal Government protect him in the exercise of the other?

When the citizens of the United States, our brethren, were being and are being sent to the bottom of the seas, feebly assassinated, and our shores blockaded contrary to all law and right, I say that there is but one answer that the Government can or should make to the citizen whose rights have been invaded, and that is to fight for the vindication of the right until lawlessness is driven out and right is firmly established. To do this is necessary, or else the name of America will become a hiss and a byword the world over; we will bear the name of cowards, and Americans will have no rights either on land or sea; our farmers will face ruin for lack of markets, and our industrial establishments will close and their employees will face want, penury, and starvation, while the owners will probably face financial ruin and bankruptcy. But aside from this, what man is there with iron in his blood and courage in his soul who would wish to tamely submit to this decree of the Kaiser, and who could do so without feeling that the fire of courage was burning low and that ghosts of fear had shaken his soul?

There be those in this Congress that have so voted. I do not question their motives, but I can not grasp their point of view. I hate war as the devil hates righteousness. I shrink from its sorrow, its heartbreak, its suffering, and its death; but there are some things worse than these—a loss of national and individual honor and self-respect and the driving out of international law and the setting up of international anarchy.

There be those that have said that we should, during the continuance of the war, retire within our shores, abandon our trade with the belligerent countries, and wait until peace should again come to the earth. Aside from the practical ruin that such a policy would have brought to our citizens and the economic revolution that it would have worked, it can be said with all soundness that even though we might have done this voluntarily, we would never have consented to do so at the imperious and unlawful order of German autocracy. But the Imperial German Government goes further and says that we shall not trade with any part of the world, enemy or friend, provided that our ships sail certain portions of the sea.

There be those who say that they would be willing to fight if our own shores were invaded and outrage were committed here, but that we should not go to war for the loss of life of Americans at sea; that they should stay at home. I can not see the difference between a right on land or a right on water. One is as sacred as the other. But let us examine this contention on its merits. I know of no principle why a right to life, liberty, and property which exists on shore should cease as soon as water is reached. Surely there is nothing in the chemical constitution of water that can work this nullification, and it would be a dastard Government which would adopt such a dastardly doctrine in respect to the rights of its citizens,

I have heard it stated that this country should not defend its citizens on the seas, and that if a man were fool enough to sail the seas and were killed in consequence it was his own fault and that no patriotic citizen would do so and thus run the risk of plunging his country into war; that if some young fool, looking for a new sensation, sought this method of gratification his death should be on his own head. In the first place, there are not such fools; if they desired this sensation so keenly it could be obtained so much cheaper by sitting on a keg of powder and lighting a fuse. The men who sail the seas in ships, entitled to the protection of the law, do so because they must in order to carry on the commerce of our country and earn a livelihood for their dependents. Does any farmer believe that his cotton, his wheat, or his corn jumps of its own accord to foreign countries? Is there any man who does not realize that the good price he gets for his product is because it is needed by the European world as well as our own and that men must transport the products and look after the business of transportation if the products are to bring this price? Is there any farmer in this land who does not realize that if the policy indicated were carried out that it would mean that cotton and corn would be worth but a few cents per pound or bushel and that ruin would come to all classes, the farmer included? Surely not.

But did the German philosophy of her right to make war for power and pelf and according to her own methods regardless of law, treaty, and solemn agreement result only in invasion of American rights on the seas? It is a well-established fact that Germany filled our country with spies when we were at peace with her, and through her accredited diplomatic agents in this country busily plotted to plant bombs in our ships, and while using our country as a base to plot to destroy her enemies, also used it to blow up and destroy our factories with dynamite, thus killing in our own land our men, women, and children.

Is this all? No. While still at peace with us, but intending to announce to us that she would prohibit our use of the seas and paying us the compliment of believing that there was still manhood and courage in the land, 15 days before her note was sent she sought to obtain a promise from our southern neighbor—Mexico—by which Mexico, in conjunction with Japan, would make war upon us if we should resist unlawful submarine warfare, and in the event of a German victory Mexico would receive as her reward our States of Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico.

Is this all? No. German agents with German gold have corrupted some of our citizens and have endeavored to stir up civil war in the land. I have it on reliable authority that an effort was made to organize the negroes in the South to rise against the whites, and in the event of a German victory the southern country was to be given to the negroes for their own. Fortunately, the negro who received this flattering offer sent it to his Congressman, and the letter was turned over to the secret service of the Department of Justice.

A short time ago a citizen of this country who was convicted of endeavoring to stir up insurrection in Kentucky stated, according to press reports, that he had been paid several thousand dollars by certain strangers to finance the movement.

You men, if any there be, who will not fight to defend rights at sea answer me this question: Will we fight when, through the machinations of German autocracy, our factories are blown to the ground with dynamite and our men, women, and children incased with sheets of flame, blister, and gurgle and die in horrid pain? Will we fight when plots are afoot, foolish and futile as they may be, to rouse the dead fires of race animosity and turn the women and children of the South over to the tender mercies of a race war? Will we fight when, through the German ambassador's office in Washington, while yet at peace with Germany, a proposal is made to have a friendly neighbor make war upon us and the promise is made to take from us the sacred soil that holds the bones of our sires; to dismember our country and by violence and bloodshed blot from the flag the stars that shine to the glory of three of the sisterhood of States? Will sister look on complacently at the proposed rape of sister? Will Mississippi bear with complaisance the plots for the murder of her fellows? God forbid! It is not true. As long as the fires burn on the altars of patriotism, as long as courage is a manly virtue, as long as love of country, of righteousness, and of law well up as a living water to cleanse the hearts of men in time of national stress, no!

If these be not acts of war against us, what are they? We did not declare war against Germany, but recognizing that she was waging war against us, both on land and sea, we voted to dedicate, if necessary, the last man and the last dollar to the defense of our citizens.

It has been said that England violated our rights on the seas and we did not go to war with her. True, she probably did and will doubtless be made to compensate for the injury done. But England has only done injury to property, and this can be fully compensated for by money; but Germany has done injury to life, that can not be replaced, recalled, or the loss of which can not be compensated for in any adequate manner. True, England has, in the past, seized certain of our ships, but she has not torpedoed them. She has taken them into a prize court, where the rights of the parties can be eventually determined. Germany has sent them to the bottom of the sea. As has been well said, there is a vital difference between a prize court and a torpedo.

We can afford to wait for compensation in money which will be adequate, but we can not wait when a practice is being followed which results in the loss of hundreds of the lives of our citizens.

It is urged in some quarters that this war was caused by the wealthy men and munition manufacturers of the country. Horrible thought and horribly false!

Did the munition makers and wealthy men of America cause the world war?

Did they induce Germany to sink the Lusitania and send our men, women, and children to die like trapped rats?

Did they sink American ship after ship and hundreds of ships of other countries upon which Americans were lawfully traveling, sending our countrymen to untimely graves?

Did they order themselves, together with the whole mass of the producers of America, from off the seas, prohibiting them from trading with the world?

Did they blow up their own factories with dynamite, killing their helpless employees?

Did they induce Germany to sink their own ships?

Did they try to induce Mexico to make war upon us if we should resist aggression and promise to give away a part of their own country?

Did they fill the country with spies, with German gold to secretly encourage all elements of discontent with the hope of creating insurrection and unrest and so paralyze the arm of our country?

Did they endeavor to stir up race riots and insurrections in the South?

To state the cast is to refute any such absurd contention.

These were the things that were done by Germany and these were the things that forced us into war. I do not know whether the rich men and munition makers of America will profit more or less since our entry. The American Congress was not concerned with wealthy men when it declared that a state of war existed. It declared that a state of war existed because of what Germany had done and was doing and because defense was a necessity. This much I know, that before the war the munition makers were selling their wares to the countries of Europe at their own price and without their profits being taxed. Since our entry into the war their profits are taxed and prices largely fixed. They will make less now than before.

The only way that Americans could have caused the war was to have caused Germany to commit the outrages against our rights. Of course, the American munition maker who was selling munitions to the allies to shoot at Germans had a great deal of influence (?) with the German Government, and so it can be reasonably argued (?) that the munition maker caused the war, as some seem to think.

I have heard it said that our citizens would be willing to fight on our own shores, but were not willing to go abroad. Such a contention springs either from an unwillingness to fight at all or from a failure to appreciate the facts of the case. It is a God-given privilege that we can fight 3,000 miles away. From the graves of Napoleon and Alexander German autocracy has dug the rotted corpse of the idea of world dominion, and the military and ruling class of Germany have dreamed dreams of seeing the banners with the imperial eagle floating in sovereignty in every part of the world. It was fight Germany now with the aid of the other countries arrayed against her or fight her later alone. I verily believe that without the intervention of the United States that she would have been victorious over France, England, and Italy through submarines. Conjure up the prospect and its possibilities. How would we like to have Germany, with her peculiar doctrines, take Canada from a beaten England and be our neighbor on the north? If so, every dollar in the country must be spent for armament and every man be a trained soldier. Or suppose that Germany, having conquered her enemies had taken over their navies and had looked with envious eyes upon the riches of this country. With the combined navies of England, France, Italy, and her own she could have swept our Navy from the ocean as a housewife sweeps the dust from the hearth and landed troops unhindered on our shores, to reenact here the scenes of murder, destruction, and rapine which Belgium has witnessed. Or assume that these countries would have sunk their navies rather than have them fall in her hands, still with the resources of these countries at her disposal and with their shipyards in her hands, in a few years she would have a navy before which we would be powerless, or at least so formidable that we would have to put our entire national energy into ships and armaments. Does anyone believe that with her philosophy she would have been any more tender with America than she was with Europe? She wants colonies, money, power, and she believes that it is her right and duty to take them by force, if need be. Does anyone believe that she would fail to challenge the Monroe doctrine and force us either to fight in its defense or else do as some urge us to do now, relinquish our rights and permit her to colonize and dominate South America, postponing only the day when she would seek to place the yoke upon our necks? As for me, I believe that this is as truly a war of self-defense as any that has been waged by any nation; that when we fight we fight for the integrity of our soil, the honor of our women, the lives of our children, and the freedom and the institutions that were purchased by the blood of our fathers. What they won we defend. Defend we must, here or abroad, and blessing it is that the issue can be decided far from our women, our children, our homes, and our firesides.

Mr. Speaker, I was one of those who voted to fight. In this I believe that I was right. I do not impugn the motives of those who voted otherwise. The grave question was to be decided by each man as he saw it. We were actually at war, and fight we must.

But the question has been decided. Now, it only remains to achieve the victory, and what a call to victory there is!

From the caverns of the sea childish hands wave us on; dead mothers, with seaweed in their hair, hold out their dead babes so that, seeing them so foully done to death, our souls will arm themselves with righteous resolution. Old Glory, fast in the rotting wreckage of some torpedoed hulk, never intended to have sheltered in its folds the crawling sea snail and slimy snake, but to flutter, all untrammelled, in the breeze, tugs at its yard, striving to take its rightful place within the air; our dead intently watch to see whether their boasted right to live and love and work were but a figment of the brain, a thing to laugh at by the living.

Babies, old men, women, and tender maidens point here and there to show the wounds of bayonet thrust and pistol ball; ghosts of soldiers burnt by fire and choked by poisoned gas whisper in our ears, asking whether there be no law or sacredness of treaty; the air is full of the cries of outraged childhood and violated women; from the spirit world Lafayette—he who gave us liberty and the rule of law when, bled white and reeling from the blows of an English-ruling but a German king, we staggered to a fall—stretches forth his hands, asking us if gratitude be dead. Our sires rise up to know if they, heroic soldiers of freedom in the early days, are sires of a dastard brood who think so lightly of what they earned with blood that we would toss it to a Prussian king.

Righteous indignation because of violated rights on sea and land, the destruction of life, the plotting of war, and the intrigue which would fill our land with strife strengthens our arms and inspires our souls for the fight.

The realization that when we fight we fight for the preservation of our liberties, the sanctity of our home, the honor of our women, and the preservation of our right to live and work according to our national ideals urges us to increased endeavor. More than this, we realize that in fighting we are helping to strike down a false system of thinking which has filled the world with strife, sorrow, and suffering, and in the presence of which liberty, whose very life is freedom and absence of fear, must weight herself with armor and carry a sword in her hand.

The die has been cast. There is but one place for the American citizen. Either he must stand beneath his flag, with heart and soul and strength and might, doing all he can for the victory of his country, or else he must take his place in work, if not in heart, with the enemies of his land. He who, by word or deed, precept, or example, palsies the arm of his country in this struggle may be honest in intent, but, as far as results are concerned, he renders as effective aid to Germany as though he were an avowed enemy of his country. What matter it to dead Cæsar whether done to death by the dagger of the envious Cassius or the well-beloved Brutus? [Applause.]

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of giving free use of the mails to the enlisted men during the period of the war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the free use of the mails for the enlisted men during the war. Is there objection?

Mr. EMERSON. Reserving the right to object, are the selected men to have that privilege?

Mr. LONERGAN. All soldiers in the service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMUTATION OF NAVAL RATIONS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5646) increasing the commutation value of the naval rations from 30 cents to 40 cents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5646) increasing the commutation value of the naval rations. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, I think we have done a pretty good day's work. A good many Members have left the Chamber with the understanding that nothing further was to be taken up this afternoon. I think it is not fair to take up legislation at this late hour of the day after they have gone with the understanding that there will be nothing more done. These matters can be disposed of on Monday without any difficulty.

Mr. PADGETT. I would be very glad to dispose of it to-day. The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman as soon as possible on Monday.

Mr. MONDELL. Personally, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill and would be glad to have it disposed of, but a number of gentlemen have asked me if there is to be any further legislation this afternoon; and thinking there would be nothing further done, I said that there would be nothing, and they have left upon that understanding.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until next Monday, September 24, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with copies of reports from Lieut. Col. W. B. Ladue, Corps of Engineers, on reexamination of the project for improvement of St. Lucie Inlet, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 370); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting tentative draft of a bill to authorize the Secretary of War to contract for the care and treatment, at any public hospital under the control of any State or Territory of the Union, of certain insane patients (H. Doc. No. 371); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting tentative draft of suggested amendments to S. 82, to transfer Frederick W. Cobb from list of machinists to list of chief pay clerks, United States Navy (H. Doc. No. 372); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5839) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, in Aitkin County, Logan Township, State of Minnesota, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 146), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2435) authorizing the counties of Itasca and Cass, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said counties, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 147), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DECKER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2688) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City, Mo., authorized by an act approved June 17, 1914, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 148), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAYBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2816) granting the consent of Congress to the Gainesville Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across Red River, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 149), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2774) granting the consent of Congress to the Gilmer-Pittsburgh Coal Co. to construct a bridge across the Little Kanawha River, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 150), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DECKER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2710) granting the consent of Congress to Webbers Falls Railroad Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River between the towns of Webbers Falls and Gore, in the State of Oklahoma, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 151), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2813) to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 152), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DOREMUS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2298) to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 153), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6094) amending the act to increase the limit of the cost of certain public buildings, etc., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 154), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 6175) giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade of Alaska; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, September 22, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee in the hour of supreme need for Divine guidance and blessing, an hour which is to try to the utmost the forces of Christian civilization. And as we face conditions that call for unity of counsel and for sacrifice and suffering we would not pray that Thou wouldst deliver us from the hour, for for this cause Thou hast brought us to the hour, but we pray Thee to save us from the evil of it, that we may be enabled to conserve in the day of our trial the spiritual forces of a great Nation, and in the end to accomplish the Divine will in us as a Nation. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

ORDNANCE AND ORDNANCE STORES (S. DOC. NO. 108).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of additional appropriation in the sum of $4,000,000 required for the service of the fiscal year 1918 for increasing the facilities for the proof and test of ordnance material, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2477) to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2156) to authorize exploration for and disposition of potassium with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2156) to authorize exploration for and disposition of potassium, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LENROOT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5901) to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5335) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., authorized by an act approved January 28, 1916, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 2830) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark., and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have received several petitions of the same nature if not expressed in the same words, and I should like to have one of them read by the Secretary. I shall not ask to have any more read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW BRITAIN, CONN., August 31, 1917.
HON. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of Chamberlain Council, No. 2, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolution title: Immigration restriction.

"Whereas Congress wisely enacted by over a two-thirds vote, notwithstanding the veto of the President, a 60-page immigration law, February 5, 1917, containing much of the legislation recommended by the Congressional Immigration Commission; and

"Whereas the proper enforcement and administration of this needed patriotic legislation has been weakened and most dangerous and unfortunate precedent set by an order of the Commissioner General of Immigration, approved by the Secretary of Labor, authorizing the admission of certain contract laborers and illiterate aliens, specifically excluded by the law, under the authority alleged to be conferred by a clause authorizing the admission of 'otherwise inadmissible aliens' for 'temporary' stay; Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we urge the effective enforcement of the splendid new immigration law; ask for the repeal of any such clause as that under which it is claimed that the Secretary of Labor and the Commissioner General of Immigration have authority to admit illiterates, contract laborers, insane aliens, and even criminals when such is in flat contradiction of the whole spirit and letter of the law; and be it further

"Resolved, That we urge the enactment of other legislation recommended by the Immigration Commission, such as the numerical limitation based on percentage of naturalized aliens coming from the various countries; and be it further

"Resolved, That we request the Senators and Congressmen of Connecticut to support H. R. 4852 and H. R. 5369."

Trusting that you will give this matter your careful consideration and support, we remain,

Yours, very truly,

[SEAL.]
Attest:

JOHN W. HEMINGWAY, Councilor.

HARRY E. SMITH,
Recording Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the City Federation of Parent Teachers of San Bernardino, Cal., praying for the establishment of a moral zone around all military camps, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	James	Norris	Smith, Md.
Brandeggee	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Smoot
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Sterling
Culberson	Kellogg	Pittman	Swanson
Cummins	Kendrick	Poinceter	Trammell
Curtis	King	Pomerene	Underwood
Fletcher	Kirby	Ransdell	Vardaman
Gerry	McKellar	Saulsbury	Warren
Hale	Martin	Sheppard	Watson
Husting	New	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks

Mr. JAMES. My colleague [Mr. BECKHAM] is absent on account of illness in his family. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I will let this announcement stand for the present.

I wish also to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is absent on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the present.

Mr. HUSTING. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] on official business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], is detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. FRANCE, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. CALDER, Mr. LODGE, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. REED entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] on account of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I hope the Senator will withhold that motion for a moment, until I can introduce a joint resolution.

Mr. MARTIN. I am willing to withhold the motion if there is business to present.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. 110).

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me say to the Senator from Virginia that the conferees on the trading-with-the-enemy act are ready to report, and I think we ought to consider that report. It is a very important matter. The conferees on the part of the House are exceedingly anxious to have it disposed of, and went so far as to submit the report yesterday in the House, and it is printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN. I knew of no business that was requiring the attention of the Senate. I withdraw the motion for an adjournment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to submit the conference report on what is known as the trading-with-the-enemy act, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall object to its consideration to-day. I think the report ought to be printed. I have just had an opportunity to glance at it a little. It seems to me to be a very important proposition. I will ask that it go over under the rule.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that it is printed.

Mr. NORRIS. I just learned an hour or so ago that it had been printed, and I have glanced over it hastily. I want to consider it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over under the rule and be printed.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 68, 128, and 129.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 13, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 66, 69, 71, 72, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 103, 104, 106, 107, 108, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 117, 119, 121, 122, 124, 125, and 126, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the last line of the Senate amendment strike out ", and private bankers"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 3. That it shall be unlawful—

"(a) For any person in the United States, except with the license of the President, granted to such person, or to the enemy, or ally of enemy, as provided in this act, to trade or attempt to trade, either directly or indirectly, with, to, or from, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, any other person, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that such other person is an enemy or ally of enemy, or is conducting or taking part in such trade, directly or indirectly, for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an enemy or ally of enemy.

"(b) For any person, except with the license of the President, to transport or attempt to transport into or from the United States, or for any owner, master, or other person in charge of a vessel of American registry to transport or attempt to transport from any place to any other place, any subject or citizen of an enemy or ally of enemy nation, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person transported or attempted to be transported is such subject or citizen.

"(c) For any person (other than a person in the service of the United States Government or of the government of any nation, except that of an enemy or ally of enemy nation, and other than such persons or classes of persons as may be exempted hereunder by the President or by such person as he may direct), to send, or take out of, or bring into, or attempt to send, or take out of or bring into the United States, any letter or other writing or tangible form of communication, except in the regular course of the mail; and it shall be unlawful for any person to send, take, or transmit, or attempt to send, take, or transmit out of the United States, any letter or other writing, book, map, plan, or other paper, picture, or any telegram, cablegram, or wireless message, or other form of communication intended for or to be delivered, directly or indirectly, to an enemy or ally of enemy: Provided, however, That any person may send, take, or transmit out of the United States anything herein forbidden if he shall first submit the same to the President, or to such officer as the President may direct, and shall obtain the license or consent of the President, under such rules and regulations, and with such exemptions, as shall be prescribed by the President.

"(d) Whenever, during the present war, the President shall deem that the public safety demands it, he may cause to be censored under such rules and regulations as he may from time to time establish, communications by mail, cable, radio, or other means of transmission passing between the United States and any foreign country he may from time to time specify, or which may be carried by any vessel or other means of transportation touching at any port, place, or territory of the United States and bound to or from any foreign country. Any person who willfully evades or attempts to evade the submission of any such communication to such censorship or willfully uses or attempts to use any code or other device for the purpose of concealing from such censorship the intended meaning of such communication shall be punished as provided in section 16 of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 4, in line 2 of the Senate amendment, strike out the word "other"; on page 4, in line 9 of the Senate amendment, after the word "otherwise," insert a comma; on page 4, in line 10 of the Senate amendment, after the word "time," insert a comma; on page 4, in line 13 of the Senate amendment, after the word "company," insert

a comma, and in the same line, after the word "enemy," where it occurs the second time, insert a comma; on page 4, in line 15 of the Senate amendment, after the words "United States," strike out the comma and insert a semicolon; on page 5, in line 4 of the Senate amendment, strike out the words "or treaty"; in line 7 strike out the words "or treaty"; and in line 9 strike out the words "or treaty"; in line 11, after the word "act," insert a comma; in line 12, after the word "President," insert a comma; and in line 13, after the word "enemy," strike out the comma; on page 6, in line 5 of the Senate amendment, after the word "company," insert a comma; in line 6, after the word "granted," insert a comma; in line 13, after the word "act," insert a comma; in line 14, after the word "President," insert a comma; and in line 22 strike out "fifteen" and insert the word "sixteen"; on page 7, in line 9 of the Senate amendment, strike out "fifteen" and insert the word "sixteen"; in line 10, after the word "or," insert "to any"; in line 18, after the word "company," insert a comma; and in line 20, after the word "pay," strike out the comma; on page 8, in line 5 of the Senate amendment, after the word "custodian," insert the words ", hereinafter provided for,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 7, line 3 of the bill, after the word "That," insert ", during the present war,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the proposed amendment after the word "Whenever" insert ", during the present war,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 9, line 21 of the proposed amendment as engrossed, strike out "suspension" and insert "postponement"; on page 9, after line 23 of the proposed amendment, strike out the balance of the amendment and insert the following:

"(b) That the President may investigate, regulate, or prohibit, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, by means of licenses or otherwise, any transactions in foreign exchange, export or ear-markings of gold or silver coin or bullion or currency, transfers of credit in any form (other than credits relating solely to transactions to be executed wholly within the United States), and transfers of evidences of indebtedness or of the ownership of property between the United States and any foreign country, whether enemy, ally of enemy or otherwise, or between residents of one or more foreign countries, by any person within the United States; and he may require any such person engaged in any such transaction to furnish, under oath, complete information relative thereto, including the production of any books of account, contracts, letters or other papers, in connection therewith in the custody or control of such person, either before or after such transaction is completed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 7, line 25 of the bill, after the word "President," strike out the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 9, line 13 of the bill, after the word "President," strike out the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "known to be, or whom the representative of such corporation, association, company, or trustee has reasonable cause to believe to be"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 13, in line 11 of the amendment, after the word "act," insert a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 11, in line 19 of the bill, after the word "President," strike out the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 10, page 19, of the amendment strike out the words "the laws of the State" and insert: "law"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 19, in line 10 of the bill, after the word "may," insert: ", when duly authorized by the President"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 19, in line 21 of the bill, strike out "who desires" and insert: "desiring"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 20, line 4 of the bill, after the word "as," strike out "it" and insert the word "he"; on the same page, in line 5 of the bill, after the word "Provided," strike out "it" and insert the word "he"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", including the fixing of prices of articles and products necessary to the health of the military and naval forces of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 21, line 23 of the bill, after the word "expiration," strike out "the" and insert "one"; in the same line, after the word "thereafter," insert a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 24, line 16 of the bill, after the word "President," strike out the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 25, in line 3 of the bill, strike out the word "such"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6, page 29 of the amendment, strike out the words "in like manner as though he were the absolute owner thereof," and insert the following: "If and when necessary to prevent waste and protect such property and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 26, in lines 19 and 20 of the bill, strike out the word "(or such other officer as the President shall direct)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 26, in line 23 of the bill, insert the following: ", during the present war,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 27, line 23 of the bill, insert the following: ", during the present war,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the first line of the amendment proposed by the Senate, after the word "shall" insert "during the present war,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 28, line 23 of the bill, after the word "Stationery," insert the following: "typewriters and exchanges thereof,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 19. That 10 days after the approval of this act and until the end of the war, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association, to print, publish, or circulate, or cause to be printed, published, or circulated in any foreign language, any news item, editorial or other printed matter, respecting the Government of the United States, or of any nation engaged in the present war, its policies, international relations, the state or conduct of the war, or any matter relating thereto: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any print, newspaper, or publication where the publisher or distributor thereof, on or before offering the same for mailing, or in any manner distributing it to the public, has filed with the postmaster at the place of publication, in the form of an affidavit, a true and complete translation of the entire article containing such matter proposed to be published in such print, newspaper, or publication, and has caused to be printed, in plain type in the English language, at the head of each such item, editorial, or other matter, on each copy of such print, newspaper, or publication, the words "True translation filed with the postmaster at _____ on _____ (naming the post office where the translation was filed, and the date of filing thereof), as required by the act of _____ (here giving the date of this act)."

"Any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this section is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association, to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same, or to transport, carry or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage, approved June 15, 1917: Provided further, That upon evidence satisfactory to him that any print, newspaper, or publication, printed in a foreign language may be printed, published, and distributed free from the foregoing restrictions and conditions without detriment to the United States in the conduct of the present war, the President may cause to be issued to the printers or publishers of such print, newspaper, or publication, a permit to print, publish, and circulate the issue or issues of their print, newspaper, or publication, free from such restrictions and requirements, such permits to be subject to revocation at his discretion. And the Postmaster General shall cause copies of all such permits and revocations of permits to be furnished to the postmaster of the post office serving the place from which the print, newspaper, or publication, granted the permit is to emanate. All matter printed, published and distributed under permits shall bear at the head thereof in plain type in the English language, the words, "Published and distributed under permit authorized by the act of _____ (here giving date of this act), on file at the post office of _____ (giving name of office)."

"Any person who shall make an affidavit containing any false statement in connection with the translation provided for in this act shall be guilty of the crime of perjury and subject to the punishment provided therefor by section 125 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States,' and any person, firm, corporation, or association, violating any other requirement of this act shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars ($500), or by imprisonment of not more than one year, or, in the discretion of the court, may be both fined and imprisoned."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Res. 101) to provide further for the national security and defense by insuring to the Government of the United States an adequate supply of paper at a fair price and by insuring a supply and equitable distribution at fair prices to the industries of the United States; to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $155,400 for the acquisition of land for mobilization, aviation, maneuver, training, and supply purposes in El Paso County, Tex., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $316,941 for the acquisition of land as an addition to the Leon Springs Military Reservation, Tex., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

JULIA P. TURNER.

Mr. COLT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 136), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Julia P. Turner, widow of George M. Turner, late a folder in the folding room of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

THE ZONE SYSTEM.

Mr. McKELLAR. On August 31 the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] received a telegram from the Literary Digest about the zone system, and he has written a reply. I ask unanimous consent to have the telegram and the reply of the Senator from Ohio printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., August 31, 1917.

Senator ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

When you voted in favor of zone system you were probably unaware of the injustice it would mean to a hundred thousand boys and girls throughout the country who are studying current events and history in Literary Digest. To 170 high schools in Ohio we are sending thousands of copies weekly of the Literary Digest at half price, exactly the same price as pupils in New Jersey pay. Under the zone system the price will be 6 cents in Ohio and 5 cents in New Jersey. It does not seem to us a wise policy to adopt a system which compels a citizen of Ohio or California to pay more for his reading matter than the citizen of New York. As citizens we realize that the tremendous strain under which every Senator has been working in trying to equitably adjust the many sides of the war-revenue measure during the recent months, and do not wish in any way to be understood as criticizing any man's judgment, but we respectfully urge you to carefully reconsider the zone system, for we feel sure it has in it the seed which may easily develop a sectional spirit and at a time when unity of purpose and action are essential to our country's safety.

THE LITERARY DIGEST.

SEPTEMBER 13, 1917.

GENTLEMEN: Your telegram criticizing my vote in favor of the zone system as involved in the McKellar amendment received. I submit that it is not quite fair that you place between yourself and the fire of public criticism "a hundred thousand boys and girls throughout the country." The public is not asking and will not ask, when fully informed, that the Government pay the expense of the delivery of the magazines and newspapers of the country.

I have been a subscriber to and a reader of the Literary Digest for more than 20 years. That fact alone will indicate my estimate of it.

If it is necessary to increase the subscription price in order to meet the additional postage, increase it.

Let me be perfectly frank with you. The Literary Digest is your business proposition. You are publishing it to make money. You are prompted by the same motives that actuate every other publisher. Of course you desire to serve, and you are serving, the public, but it is not primarily for that purpose that you are printing the magazine. Every business man engaged in a legitimate enterprise is serving the public, but that is no reason why the Government should afford him free transportation.

Publishers are the only class of people in this country that I know of who are receiving a bonus from the Government. Why should they have it rather than anybody else? Why should they not pay the expenses of the service they get from the Government as well as those who use first-class postal privileges? There is no defense in good morals that you can make of the present situation. Students of the subject may vary in their estimate as to whether magazines and newspapers are costing the Post Office Department forty or fifty millions of dollars or seventy or eighty millions of dollars more than it receives from them. No one whose judgment is worthy of serious consideration denies that it costs the Government less than three or four times the amount it receives. Postmasters General, from Mr. Bissel to Mr. Burleson, agree upon the subject that the Government all these years has been the loser.

In my judgment good political morals require that publishers should pay for the service they receive from the Government, and that Congress should not be required to tax the drinkers of tea and coffee or the public generally in order to get sixty or seventy millions of dollars from them to offset the bonus paid the publishers. I realize very fully that this is not a very politic thing for me to write, but it is the truth, and neither you nor I should fear the truth.

Allow me to say to you in all candor that it has been a very great disappointment to me to know that the leaders of educational thought in this country are constantly serving in the capacity of a lobby here in Washington, or through the mails, in order to intimidate Congressmen and Senators so that they may get a continuance of the financial favors which they have been enjoying at the hands of the Government for so many years. Has it come to this—that our moral standards are based upon our financial interests?

Your splendid magazine would have a greater influence if you were courageous enough to take the stand that you want to pay for the favors you are getting from the Government and want everybody else to do likewise. It comes with poor grace from publishers to criticize Senators and Congressmen because of mistakes they make here in Washington—and when they make mistakes they ought to be criticized—while these same publishers insist that a bonus or a subsidy of millions be voted to them annually.

Think of it. The publishers have been enjoying these special privileges for years and years, and now when we are in the throes of war a large number of them are conducting a campaign through the mails and the press, not only to get a continuation of second-class mailing privileges, but to urge legislation authorizing an expenditure of $3,000,000 to advertise the coming issue of bonds. It is a very great disappointment to me that publishers assume this attitude.

My judgment is that if you will put both sides of this proposition up to your readers in the columns of your magazine the vast majority of them will say that they want to pay the expense of the delivery of your paper.

Publishers increased the price of their advertising to meet the increased cost of paper. Why can not they increase the subscription price and further increase their advertising rates, if necessary, in order to meet the actual cost of delivery?

Very sincerely,

ATLEE POMERENE.

The LITERARY DIGEST.

New York City.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a statement made by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], which I have taken from the Brooklyn Eagle of September 15, relating to water-power legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered. The statement referred to is as follows:

PASSAGE OF THE SHIELDS BILL URGED TO DEVELOP NATION'S WATER POWER.

[By WESLEY L. JONES, United States Senator from Washington.]

"It is vitally important to the economic and commercial welfare of this Nation that Congress no longer delay the enactment of laws under which our wasting water powers may be developed. The following brief statement shows the importance of the immediate passage of such legislation to the State which I have the privilege of representing in part in the United States Senate:

"Of the 9,700,000 water horsepower in the State of Washington requiring Federal consent before it can be utilized, but 96,000 horsepower, or 1 per cent has been developed, and the remaining 99 per cent, or 9,600,000 horsepower is going to waste. Meanwhile we are importing coal from Canada; vast areas of silent desert lands, which, given water, would yield great harvests in these days of food shortage, are held back from reclamation through lack of cheap electric energy for operation of pumping plants; three transcontinental railroads are unable to electrify their systems across the State, and industrial plants, the establishment of which would give us the diversity of industry so badly needed to further our progress and prosperity, are prevented from building.

"By provisions in the river and harbor act of 1890 and 1899 Congress has prohibited the placing of dams in navigable streams without the consent of Congress in each case. No executive authority, unless the stream lies wholly within a single State, in which case the State legislature may grant the authority, subject to approval of plans by the Secretary of War. As navigable streams almost invariably touch or traverse more than one State, the exception is unimportant.

"An existing statute passed by Congress in 1910, known as the general dam act, prescribes the terms under which dams may be placed in navigable streams when Congress grants specific consent. This statute, even if made operative by an enabling act, makes requirements which render investment unsafe and effectually prevents development. During the first two years after the passage of this statute Congress granted its consent to the development of 12 water-power projects in navigable streams, of which but two have been developed, and their financing was only made possible because they were adjuncts to existing systems.

"The other 10 could not be financed under the restrictive terms of the permits granted. Not a single water-power project has been developed in a navigable stream during the past five years. During these years water-power projects actually formulated and ready for development, located in 17 Southern and Western States, aggregating 2,122,000 horsepower, have been prevented from development, as no responsible banker, trustee, or business man would invest a dollar upon the security afforded by such permits. The production of this energy through utilization of water horsepower now wasting would save annually 8,427,000 tons of coal, would allow the labor of 7,000 men to be used for other much-needed purposes, and would permit the use of thousands of cars for carrying merchandise instead of coal. Furthermore, by these river improvements 1,160 miles of inland waterways would be opened to navigation without the appropriation of Government money.

"The importance of action is realized by Congress, which has had the enactment of a new navigable stream water-power law under consideration for the past four years. A bill drawn and introduced by Senator JOHN K. SHIELDS, of Tennessee, was passed by the Senate at the last session by a vote of 46 to 22, after a discussion covering a period of five weeks, during which time every phase of the question was carefully considered. The bill was amended by the House and sent to conference, was not reported out, and died with the close of the last Congress.

"Senator SHIELDS reintroduced the bill (No. 1419) at the present session, and it has been reported without amendment to the calendar by the Commerce Committee, of which I am a member, and will undoubtedly again be passed by the Senate when its consideration is reached. The bill has been criticized by so-called conservationists for reasons which I shall not attempt to controvert because, to my mind, they are manifestly impracticable and, if adopted, would effectually prevent development.

"The bill appeals to me as an orderly, masterly product of high-class statesmanship. It safeguards every public interest, and yet its terms are fair toward those who would engage in the naturally hazardous business of development of water powers. Senator JOHN K. SHIELDS, the author of the bill, is one of the most respected Members of the United States Senate. He was formerly chief justice of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, and the development of its water powers is of greatest importance to his State. I am glad to be able to say that this important national question was not made a party issue in its consideration by the Senate, and I am glad, as a Republican Senator, to be able to line up alongside the great Democratic Senator from Tennessee in approval of his views upon this subject.

"The Shields bill authorizes the Secretary of War to issue permits to develop water powers in navigable streams to properly qualified applicants who, in his judgment, are best fitted, in the public interest, to develop the water resources. The bill sets forth at length general terms and stipulations, and the Secretary of War is made the administrative authority to carry them into effect. The bill provides for a permit period of 50 years, at any time after which the Government may, on two years' notice, take over the property for itself or for a subsequent grantee by paying the fair value of the property, not including the rights granted by the Government. The bill provides for protection of the public interests as follows:

"(a) Water-power projects for which permits are issued must be such as in the judgment of the Secretary of War shall be best adapted to a comprehensive plan for the improvement of waterways for all uses and produce the highest practicable power development.

"(b) The public-service commissions of the States in which the water powers are located are given control of rates and service when the business is intrastate, and the same regulatory authority is conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission when the business is interstate.

"(c) The Secretary of War is given authority to examine the books of the grantee and to require them to submit sworn statements of every detail of their business transactions.

"(d) Provision is made for cancellation of the grant in case the grantee fails to comply with the terms.

"(e) Unlawful trust or monopoly or restraint of trade is forbidden.

"(f) The grantee is required to install, at his own expense, locks, booms, sluices, lights, signals, or other structures in aid of navigation purposes, and furnish, free of cost, power for operation of same.

"(g) The grantee must reimburse the United States for the cost of investigation and supervision incidental to the transaction.

"(h) The grantee is required to pay reasonable charges to the United States for benefits accruing from headwater improvements established and maintained by the United States and for the use of any Government land used in power development.

"The bill provides that work must be begun within two years from the date of the permit and completed within such time as may be specified by the Secretary of War, and provides for diligent, orderly, and reasonable development and continuous operation of the water power, subject to market conditions. The bill provides that contracts extending beyond the life of the permit for sale of energy may not be made with permission of the public-service commission of the State in which the water power is located.

"The Shields bill is distinctly a compromise measure. It is the product of the long conflict of views and of the efforts of the Senate to deal intelligently with the subject. Like all compromise measures, it is probably not completely satisfactory to anyone, but as a whole it concededly does safeguard the public interests and concededly is fair enough to capital to secure investment in water powers. In my judgment, it is not at all subject to the objections which have been most vehemently urged against such proposed legislation in the past. Consequently it can and should be supported both by those who have been chiefly interested in insisting upon public safeguards and also by those whose chief interest has been to secure development of the great resources. It is to be hoped that, in the public interest, this bill may be accepted by both Houses of Congress, be signed by the President, and speedily become a law."

ADDRESS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT (S. DOC. NO. 109).

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document a very eloquent, able, and patriotic speech which was made by the Vice President of the United States before the Supreme Council of Scottish Rite Masons at New York City, Monday, September 17. It is a very fine and splendid address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 5335. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., authorized by an act approved January 28, 1916, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to object, but I want it to be understood before the bill is taken up that it will require some time in its consideration. It relates to a very important matter, and there is some difference of opinion among the members of the committee which reported the bill. I say in fairness to the Members of the Senate who are here that it will require a quorum and some discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I also want to say to the Senator asking the unanimous consent that there are at least two Senators who are interested in this measure, one of whom is now acting as a conferee on the revenue bill and the other is engaged on the great appropriation bill that is before the Committee on Appropriations. It is absolutely essential that the conferees shall agree, and also that that bill shall be reported to the Senate at the earliest date possible. If they are to be taken away from that work, I believe it will not hasten the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think all Senators will agree that this is a subject matter of very great importance. It has already passed the House twice, the second time in the form it appears here, with slight amendments made by the majority of the Senate committee. The bill was twice favorably reported to the Senate by the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I recognize the fact that there is some difference of opinion about certain provisions of it and I assumed, of course, that there would be some debate. While I would be very glad to have final action upon the bill to-day I can understand that the discussion may be so prolonged that that would be impossible or, at least, impracticable. I have no desire to unduly force it to a conclusion, but I have felt that it ought to be taken up and considered by the Senate and be made the unfinished business so that it could be disposed of at this session. I do not believe that it is going to take an unusual length of time, though I appreciate the importance of the issues presented to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 1, before the word "prices," to insert "or depresses," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That nothing contained in the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, shall be construed as declaring to be illegal an association entered into for the sole purpose of engaging in export trade and actually engaged solely in such export trade, or an agreement made or act done in the course of export trade by such association, provided such association, agreement, or act is not in restraint of trade within the United States, and is not in restraint of the export trade of any domestic competitor of such association: And provided further, That such association does not, either in the United States or elsewhere, enter into any agreement, understanding, or conspiracy, or do any act which artificially or intentionally and unduly enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 5, line 18, after the word "unduly," to strike out the word "affects," and to insert "enhances or depresses"; and, on page 6, line 1, after the word "its," to strike out "business, in order that it may thereafter maintain its organization and management and conduct its business in accordance with law"; and to insert "organization, business, conduct, practices, or management in order that they may comply with the law," so as to read:

Whenever the Federal Trade Commission shall have reason to believe that an association or any agreement made or act done by such association is in restraint of trade within the United States or in restraint of the export trade of any domestic competitor of such association, or that an association, either in the United States or elsewhere, has entered into any agreement, understanding, or conspiracy, or done any act which artificially or intentionally and unduly enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association, it shall summon such association, its officers, and agents to appear before it, and thereafter conduct an investigation into the alleged violations of law. Upon investigation, if it shall conclude that the law has been violated, it may make to such association recommendations for the readjustment of its organization, business, conduct, practices, or management in order that they may comply with the law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to inquire, with due respect, if this bill is to be passed here with a purely perfunctory reading, without any consideration? In the first place, this bill ought not, in my judgment, to be brought forward at this time at all. It has been understood that this session of Congress should be devoted to the enactment of war legislation, and that other legislation would not at this time be considered. This bill is not a war measure. This legislation was proposed before the European war broke out, and long, long before the United States became involved in that controversy. We are almost at the close of the war legislative program. It has been generally understood that Congress would adjourn, at least for a short time, before the December session. The impression has been to the effect that we would probably be able to close up the program that had been discussed and get away about the first week of October. In order to accomplish that very-much-to-be-desired object, discussion has been limited to an extraordinary degree with reference to a number of important measures. Perhaps some of them suffered for lack of full discussion.

Now, with that situation, the pending bill is brought forward. I did not object to its consideration at this time; the truth is that I did not know that unanimous consent was being asked for that, although I was in the Chamber. I do not want to be in the position of an obstructionist, but it is impossible that this bill shall have full consideration at this time, in my judgment; and if it is given full consideration, I am quite sure the session is going to be prolonged.

Let me illustrate the situation. Here is the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] pressing for the consideration of the trading-with-the-enemy act, still undisposed of in its final form. We have now under consideration in the Judiciary Committee, and are conducting hearings upon it, what is known as the civil-rights bill, a bill of great importance and involving many very doubtful and difficult propositions of law and of fact. If that bill can be brought forward and diligently discussed and disposed of at this session, in addition to all the other business that is pressing for attention, it seems to me this session of Congress will have done very well.

I am not prepared to discuss this bill, and I certainly am not prepared to consent to its passage without a full understanding of its provisions. I do know that it proposes to annul in part that system of law which we have been building up in this country for 25 years, and which is generally known by the term of antitrust legislation; and I do know that when we undertake a thing of that kind we ought to do it at a time when Congress is in a position to deliberate coolly regarding the whole question.

If I understand the import of this bill, it most radically changes the policy which has been accepted as the fixed policy of this country by every President of the United States, by every Congress, and by every political party for the past 25 years. It may be possible that some change of these great laws is necessary; but we ought to consider the question at a time when we can do so in a cool, deliberate, and careful manner.

There is less necessity for this legislation to-day, in my humble opinion, than there has been at any time during the past 25 years, and for this reason—that our foreign commerce is to-day all practically under the control of the Government under what is known as the embargo power. Whatever goes abroad to-day goes abroad because it is permitted to go by the President. He can stop all traffic with foreign countries, and the power entirely to stop traffic carries with it the power to regulate the traffic which is permitted.

So I hope this bill can go over until the next session of Congress, when we may give it careful thought and attention and when we can have an attendance in the Senate to consider it. A few minutes ago, when the bill was read, there was more than a quorum of the Members of the Senate present. Before the reading of the bill had been completed the membership had drifted away until there were not to exceed probably 15 or 16 Members of the Senate in the Chamber. This is not because Senators are not interested, but it is because, in the press and crush of work at this time, it is necessary for them to be in their offices or in their committee rooms.

I appeal to the Senator in charge of this bill, for whom I have the utmost respect and the kindest feeling, not to ask that this bill shall be forced forward at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I am sorry that I can not always agree with my distinguished friend from Missouri. I must take issue with his position in several respects.

It is true that it was our purpose at the beginning of this session, and is now, to give our attention principally to the war measures. I differ from him when he takes the position that this is not, in one sense of the word, a war measure. It is one of those bills, it is true, that have been before the Congress for a considerable time. It has been the subject matter of a vast deal of discussion by the business men and the business organizations of the country for a number of years. It affects our export trade only. It does not affect our domestic trade, save and except incidentally. Of course, the two classes of trade can not be divorced from one another to such an extent that we may say that neither affects the other. No one could take that position, but they are essentially separate and distinct; and now, at this very time, when we are dealing not only with our allies but with neutral countries, the feeling is still extant that we ought to pass legislation of this kind for the purpose of enabling our business men to get their fair share of the foreign trade.

I realize that there is much force in what the Senator says when he takes the position that our export trade at the present time is largely controlled by the President through the medium of the embargo act, but that affects immediately our war conditions, our war powers. This has reference not only to what may be war conditions, but to our peace conditions quite as well. For a period of two years or more there have been constant conferences between the allies themselves, even before we declared war, looking to the trade of the future, and I dare say that the Senator will not contend for a moment that we ought not at the present time to have an eye to our trade of the future.

I have purposely not brought up this bill when there were measures pending before the Senate such as the trading-with-the-enemy act, the revenue measures, and the different military and naval bills, but it has so happened that we have been adjourning here from day to day without anything to do because there was not anything else of very prime importance on the calendar which was demanding the attention of the Senate.

I may say that in conference with those members of the Government who have been more or less conversant with our foreign trade I have been advised by gentlemen in whom I am sure the Senator has the greatest confidence that there never was a more pressing time for legislation of this character than this particular moment, and I can not agree with my friend when he suggests that there is a possible disposition to press this matter on without consideration. That is not our purpose. I think Senators generally are familiar with the purport of this bill. I do not agree with him when he says the purpose is to make fundamental changes in our present antitrust laws. That is not the case. I take it that as a general proposition Senators will agree that, for instance, the Sherman law has an intraterritorial effect. It is not extraterritorial in its jurisdiction. I realize that there is a certain so-called twilight zone in which Senators and lawyers may differ as to just what the scope of the Sherman law is. I think the judgment of the best lawyers is generally that it does not embrace those acts that are extraterritorial; but there may be certain phases of foreign commerce which may be affected by it, and I do not think it would profit us very much to go into that discussion and endeavor to point out the dividing line. Suffice it to say that the business public have had some considerable doubt as to the extent to which they might form associations for the purpose of engaging solely in what may be called extraterritorial or foreign trade.

It is to a desire to set aside these doubts, to give a certain amount of reassurance to those who are seeking foreign trade, that we owe the origin of this bill. I think that when the Senator carefully reads the bill he will find that we have not in anywise affected the operation of the Sherman law, so far as it relates to intraterritorial or domestic business. It seeks only to make it perfectly clear that these associations may be organized for the sole purpose of our foreign trade. Beyond that we do not care to go; and then we have provided particularly that all the operations of these associations shall be subject to the jurisdiction and control of the Federal Trade Commission; and if in anywise they may be interfering with what may be regarded as fair competition, or if they may be violating the laws of the land—trust laws or others—then the Federal Trade Commission can investigate and make orders respecting the conduct of their business; and if they fail to comply with these orders, then these matters may be certified over to the Department of Justice for such action as they may think proper.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. REED. If they are certified to the Department of Justice for such action as it may see proper to take, what action can it take when we have repealed the only laws under which it has authority to act?

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; we have not repealed them.

Mr. REED. You have repealed them as to foreign trade. That is the purpose of this act.

Mr. POMERENE. No. These associations may attempt to do certain acts which may materially affect our domestic commerce, or they may affect the business or commerce of domestic competitors in this trade. They may be violating the law in that respect; but if so, that is a matter for investigation, and these acts thus performed will not be permitted by this legislation. It is quite true that we want to make perfectly clear the fact that the Sherman law does not apply to that particular kind of business which may be denominated strictly foreign business to the extent that we allow associations to be organized and to act under the pending bill.

Mr. REED. And if these associations do things that are inimical to the welfare of this country, their act goes to the Federal Trade Commission; and if the Federal Trade Commission can not deal with them, they are then to be reported to the Attorney General. Now, what is the Attorney General going to do after you have repealed the law that gives him authority to act?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it may be that these acts may relate to domestic commerce. The Senate must bear in mind that by the very terms of the bill it is limited to export trade, and this is defined as follows:

That the words "export trade" wherever used in this act mean solely trade or commerce in goods, wares, or merchandise exported, or in the course of being exported, from the United States or any Territory thereof to any foreign nation.

But it goes further, and provides the acts which shall not be included in export trade. The first section reads in part—but the words "export trade" shall not be deemed to include the production, manufacture, or selling for consumption within the United States or any Territory thereof of such goods, wares, or merchandise, or any act in the course of such production or manufacture.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I beg to ask a question of the Senator from Ohio at this time. If we continue the consideration of this bill, I intend to discuss it at some length and with some care before we have concluded the matter; but just at this point I should like to direct the attention of the Senator from Ohio to something he said a few moments ago, or something that I understood him to say, namely, that we were not seriously interfering with the antitrust law.

We are either doing something here or we are not. We are either repealing a part of the antitrust law and the Clayton Act or we are not. If we are not, no legislation is necessary. If we are, then the inquiry is, What part of it are we repealing? And I am sure the Senator from Ohio will agree with me that what we are repealing or trying to repeal—because I am in some doubt as to what the effect of this bill will be, as I shall presently show—what we are apparently trying to do is to repeal the antitrust law and the Clayton Act so far as either of them relates to foreign trade. That is what we are trying to do, and I think it ought to be fully understood. Now, I know the Senator from Ohio, in charge of the bill, has very carefully and sedulously tried to prevent that repeal from having any effect upon trade among the States; but we must face squarely the proposition that the proposal is that both these laws shall be repealed, so far as our foreign trade is concerned.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to express myself as accurately as I can. I made the statement in the earlier part of my remarks that there was some uncertainty as to just what effect the provisions of the Sherman law had upon the so-called export trade. I think we would be expressing the situation more accurately if we were to say that we expect to make perfectly clear by this legislation the fact that the Sherman law does not extend to certain acts specifically pointed out in the bill which may be regarded as foreign trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I add another word there, so that there may be no obscurity between the Senator from Ohio and myself? There were certain things which the exporters who appeared before our committee said they wanted to do, and I am of the opinion, and I think the Senator from Ohio agrees with me, that most of the things which they said they wanted to do can be done under the law as it is now, without offense. The difficulty is that the bill, in my opinion, will authorize the exporters to do a great many things which they did not say they wanted to do when they came before the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator be more explicit and indicate what, in his judgment, may be done which they did not want to do under the bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there can be a combination among manufacturers in the United States under the bill for the production of goods which are alleged to be for export without any possibility whatever of differentiating between the things that are produced for export and the things that are produced for domestic use or consumption. That is one of the things that I think can be done under the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. May I interrupt the Senator to say that by the very terms of the bill it is expressly provided that the production and manufacture of these goods shall not be regarded as a part of the export trade?

Mr. CUMMINS. For home consumption?

Mr. POMERENE. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the way I construe the bill. I know the Senator does not agree with me about that interpretation.

Mr. POMERENE. Because of a remark which the Senator made to me yesterday with respect to this very matter, I have read the language more carefully, and I am still more firmly convinced than ever that the Senator is wrong in his construction.

Mr. REED. Where is the language?

Mr. POMERENE. On lines 7, 8, 9, and 10 on the first page. However, assuming that the Senator is right in his contention in that behalf, the language can be readily made so clear that there could be no doubt about it by a transposition of these clauses, as, for instance, if we were to say, "it shall not be deemed to include the selling for consumption within the United States or any Territory thereof of such goods, wares, or merchandise, or the production or manufacture," and so forth. So I am quite sure that, differ as the Senator from Iowa and I may as to the framing of this legislation, we ought to have no difficulty so far as that particular point is concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is another point that the Senator from Ohio might consider. The inference of one of the provisos of section 2 is that the combination is permitted if it does not artificially and unduly increase or depress the price of commodities within the United States. I think that the introduction of the word "unduly" in that connection is very unfortunate. I do not want to give anyone the opportunity to combine to either increase or decrease the prices artificially, and I think it would be very deplorable if every such inquiry must run into an investigation as to whether the increase or the depression in price has been due or undue. I think the Senator from Ohio must agree with me about that.

Mr. POMERENE. I am perfectly frank to say that, so far as the word "unduly" is concerned, there may be some room for a difference of opinion, but I desire to call the Senate's attention to the reason for this last proviso. Of course, it is the purpose of the bill to allow associations for the purpose of meeting our foreign competitors, for the purpose of advancing our foreign trade. We must all agree that, no matter how small the amount of sales abroad or how large the sales may be, to some extent they will have some effect upon conditions at home. If we were to refuse the sale of any of our surplus products abroad, necessarily that act would reflect in its effect upon the prices domestically. If we sell our entire surplus abroad, that will have some effect.

If we sell more than our real surplus abroad, that must have some effect here. It was with that thought in mind that this language was chosen.

But let me suggest this thought further to the Senator. Let us assume for the sake of the argument that the meat packers of the country should combine for the purpose of making sales in the foreign market. We recognize that to the extent that we sell abroad it is going to affect the market here somewhat. But if they should associate themselves together under the provisions of this law for that purpose and buy up a vast quantity of cured meat and place it in warehouses within the United States and then, instead of selling these products abroad, as they pretended to want to do, they should hold it for the purpose of the effect that it might have on the local market here, and perhaps depress prices to a point where it would seriously affect the financial status of some of the smaller concerns that were not engaged with them in foreign trade, and perhaps unload a part of the product thus purchased in the domestic market, thereby depressing it, artificially, as I believe, and not in accordance with the demands of the trade, to a point where they would force some of these competitors to the wall, and then begin to boost prices again—

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. POMERENE. Just pardon me for a minute. In my judgment that would be an artificial effect upon the prices or the market. It would be unduly affecting the prices in the domestic market. It is to meet such a situation as that that this language was employed. I recognize the fact that it is exceedingly difficult to employ language which may meet every particular instance that may arise.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just one minute. But I recognize the fact also that if these exporters were to engage in the conduct which I have indicated they would be subject to the provisions of the Sherman law. It was to avoid any question about it that caused us to place this limitation upon their conduct and the things which these associations might do.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator will permit me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. My idea in regard to that proviso has been to apply it to actual conditions. According to its terms any combination or conspiracy relating to the foreign trade will be valid unless it both artificially and unduly enhances the price of commodities in the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator object to the conjunction?

Mr. CUMMINS. It would help it some if it was in the disjunctive instead of the conjunctive; but still it would be objectionable, because it has seemed to me when you ask the court to enter into an inquiry as to the effect produced by artificial means we do not know what "artificial means" would comprehend or include, and when you also ask the court to enter into an inquiry as to whether the price had been enhanced unduly, I take it that means too much—whether it should be 1 cent a pound increase or 2 cents a pound in the case of meat, or any other particular sum. I believe that when the Senator reflects upon it further—and I know he has reflected upon it a good deal—he will reach the conclusion that the administration of such a provision as that would become practically impossible, and that the combination would have free range and would not be subject to any punishment whatever.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to ask the Senator from Ohio another question, which he can answer whenever it is convenient: Will the bill, if it passes in its present form, authorize a combination in the United States for the purpose of buying up all of any particular commodity for export, so that it will have in this country a complete monopoly of that commodity for export to foreign countries?

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; I do not think it would.

But let me answer the first question. I am afraid that my very able friend from Iowa is a little too extreme in his criticisms of the word "unduly." I recognize the fact that before we can give to the word "unduly" its proper legal judicial construction we must have the facts in each particular case before us. If the Senator is asking for a mathematical definition of the word "unduly," it is going to be exceedingly difficult to give it. But the Senator has been a practitioner of the law for many years, and there has never been a week in all his experience when he has not come in contact with difficulties of this kind. To illustrate, What is undue restraint of trade? Who has defined it with such a nicety that we can use it as a measuring yard for every particular matter that comes up? We know in a general way what it means.

Let us take another expression. What is a reasonable doubt? What is an unreasonable doubt? Courts define in a very general way what it means, but the question always is a question of fact for the jury, under the instruction which the court may give to the jury.

Mr. KING. A doubt for which you can give a reason.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; as my friend says, a doubt for which you can give a reason.

Mr. CUMMINS. To whose satisfaction?

Mr. POMERENE. It is a matter which addresses itself to the satisfaction of the jurors, who are the triers of the facts; and if we are going to be very critical with reference to that particular word, we would have to be likewise critical with respect to many phrases and clauses with which we come in contact every day as lawyers. It is somewhat like an attempt to define fraud.

Ever since the civil law or the common law had its origin courts have constantly had before them certain statements of fact which were believed to be fraud. Legislative bodies have attempted to define what is fraud. They have never been able to define it. Neither have the courts been able to define what is fraud so as to meet the variety of complicated facts which may constantly be brought before it.

I recognize the fact that when it comes to the question as to the effect which sales may have upon prices there is a general law of supply and demand, and when this law of supply and demand is permitted to operate we know what is the natural effect of sales or the withholding of property from sale. But when men resort to certain sorts of acts or combinations or unfair practices, these combinations or acts or unfair practices have an effect upon trade. It is not a natural effect, but it is an artificial effect. If there is any other language which is more specific, I would be glad to have it suggested.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to interrupt the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. I am very anxious to have an executive session to dispose of some nominations. Is it the purpose of the Senator to push the bill for very prolonged consideration to-day?

Mr. POMERENE. I judge from the course the debate has taken and from the disposition manifested by several of my very good friends that we probably can not get a vote on the bill within the next few minutes at least.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I think it will take some time for all of us to understand fully and completely the explanation the Senator has given us of the word "unduly."

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. I imagine it may be as hard for a court to interpret the law afterwards as it is for the Senator to define the bill before passage. It is going to take a good deal of time for some of us to digest this matter.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President, if my good friend from Missouri will simply apply his acute intellect to this bill for a very few minutes he will understand it quite completely.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will give me a very few minutes I can tell him my opinion of the bill. I will apply whatever intellect I have to it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. SWANSON. It is evident, I think, that more progress will be made if Senators are given an opportunity to examine this bill privately, to meditate upon it, and then come in later and discuss it. I do not think any progress in its consideration will be made to-day. I desire simply to make that suggestion, because at the proper time I wish to move an executive session.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am anxious to defer to the wishes of Senators in the matter.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] has given notice that he desires to make a short address on a certain subject, and after he has done so I should like, if it be agreeable to the Senator from Ohio, to move an executive session.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Virginia will not make a motion for an executive session until I can deliver a brief address, which I desire to make on the present unwarranted low price of cotton, which is one of the most important products of the farm.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator from Ohio, who is in charge of the pending bill, whatever he may decide to do in regard to proceeding with it to-day—and I am not commenting upon the immediate disposition of the matter—will not abandon his purpose of pressing the bill for a final vote and decision at this session of Congress on account of the fact that there is going to be some debate about it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment. I should like to say a word as to the disposition of the bill.

I concur in a good many of the criticisms of the form of the bill, which have been expressed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I shall not take time now to point out what seem to me to be obvious inconsistencies in the bill. For instance, the bill says that the Sherman Antitrust Act shall not apply to certain agreements, and then it says that those agreements shall not violate the Sherman Antitrust Act. That is the effect of the bill in its most vital part, and I think is utterly contradictory and inconsequential; but the purpose of the bill is a most important one.

If we are going to carry on foreign commerce our merchants must have the same opportunities and the same freedom that their competitors in foreign markets have. There ought to be some legislation upon the subject. If it is to be confused, ill-expressed, if that is the best that Congress can do, the sooner we dispose of the matter, notwithstanding that, and let the courts start out on the difficult task of construing it, the better it will be.

I hope that there may be some amendments to the bill; but I certainly also hope that the Senator from Ohio will not abandon his purpose of bringing the bill up for final disposition.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Washington that I have no intention whatever of abandoning this bill. I think I realize its importance, and I do not agree that many of the criticisms are well-founded. I hope, however, that I am not wedded to any particular form of language so long as we can attain the purpose which those who are friendly to this character of legislation may have in mind.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I make this appeal to the Senator from Ohio: The bill is important; it deserves very careful consideration. The Senator from Ohio has given much thought to it and he is entitled to a full hearing by those who are to vote upon it. It is very embarrassing for all of us, I am sure, who have given study to this subject, to conduct a discussion with a motion for an executive session or a motion to adjourn impending over our heads—it is not fair. We either ought to reach a conclusion to go on with the bill with reasonable continuity and seriously, or we ought to wait until the time comes to so consider it. So far as I am concerned, I never intend to lay one single obstruction in the way of the consideration of the bill, and I am ready to debate it now, and have been so for a long time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the suggestion that I desired to make was that under the rule when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived this matter would not remain before the Senate unless a motion was made to take it up and it was made the unfinished business. I am satisfied if such a motion were made it would disclose the lack of a quorum, which would prevent other business from being done to-day. Consequently my suggestion was made, because I thought nothing would be gained by continuing this discussion until 2 o'clock, when a motion would have to be made to make the bill the unfinished business.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have been appealing to the Senator from Ohio to recognize that situation and to take some other time for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. After 2 o'clock, if the motion were made and agreed to, the bill would become the unfinished business. That is the reason I made the suggestion to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I certainly want this matter to be kept before the Senate until such time as it may be disposed of, unless it shall appear, after full discussion, that there is some other measure of greater importance to be pressed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair state that the understanding of the Chair is that there is no other unfinished business before the Senate; so when the hour of 2 o'clock arrives this bill will be the business then before the Senate, and it would not require a motion to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, a motion would be required to take up the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. If the bill may be regarded as the unfinished business, I shall be content.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to know what is the desire or the purpose of the Senator from Ohio in reference to this bill. We are anxious to have an executive session.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it is quite apparent that Senators have decided that they do not care to consider this matter further just at this time. I have not gone into the discussion of the reasons for this legislation, because they were presented, in part at least, some time ago when the same bill was before the Senate. However, I realize that the bill ought to be fully and fairly discussed, and if, in the wisdom of the Senate, there should be some amendments made to it, well and good; but I think the matter is of such very grave importance that we ought to take up the bill for final action in the very near future.

DECLINE IN PRICE OF COTTON.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate briefly this afternoon on the present unwarranted decline in the price of cotton.

The present price of cotton is entirely too low when compared with other products of the farm, with everything the farmer has to buy, and with the general cost of producing cotton. I do not believe it wise to advocate price fixing, but deem it my duty to say with all the force there is in me that the present price of 21 to 22 cents a pound for cotton to the producer is entirely too cheap, and it should bring him a minimum of not less than 25 cents. Last week the grower was selling his cotton at 19 cents on the farm, and to-day he could realize about 22 cents. What the speculators may do to the market in the harvesting period of the next 90 days no one can predict. My discussion is based on an average farm price of 20 cents—1 cent higher than the prevailing price of cotton on the farm for several weeks prior to the rise during the past six days.

Taking the average of the price of cotton for the three years—1911, 1912, and 1913—prior to the war, the producer received 11.17 cents a pound, and for the year 1913, the last normal year prior to the outbreak of the war, his price was 12.48 cents. It is true the price dropped to an average of 7.33 cents in 1914, but everything else was completely demoralized that year owing to the war, and that price is not a fair criterion of value. The average price in 1915 was 11.22 cents, and in 1916 it was 17.28 cents.

Mr. President, at this point I ask to attach a table which I will designate as "Appendix A."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, corn and wheat, the other two really great products of the farm, have risen considerably more than 100 per cent since 1913, the rise in corn being about 133 per cent and in wheat about 180 per cent. Cattle and hogs have also gone up very much since 1913. On September 15 of that year good steers on foot were quoted on the Chicago market at 6.75 to 9.60 cents, while on the same date this year they were quoted at 7.15 to 16.40 cents. Hogs were valued at 7.90 to 8.40 cents on September 15, 1913, and 17.20 to 18.40 cents on the same date this year—an average of over 100 per cent increase. Nearly every article of human food has increased more than 100 per cent since the war began. There has been an enormous rise in the price of clothing, shoes, hats, lumber, farm implements, fertilizer, bagging, ties, seed sacks, wire, nails, wagons, work animals, and every article which the farmer is obliged to use. Moreover, there has been both scarcity of labor and increase in the wages of laborers. It will be seen from the foregoing that, while other products of the farm have increased 100 per cent and upward, cotton at 20 cents to the producer is considerably less than 100 per cent. Taking the average, 11.17 cents, of the three years prior to the war, an increase of 100 per cent would be 22.34 cents, and taking the price for the last normal year prior to the war of 12.48 cents, 100 per cent increase would be 24.96 cents—practically 25 cents per pound.

I ask at this point to annex as Appendix B a table which I have prepared.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, prices and values are relative. Money is valuable only for what it will buy, and if a bale of cotton at 20 cents per pound, or $100, will buy less now than the same bale at 12 cents per pound, or $60, of five years ago, cotton is cheaper now at 20 cents than it was then at 12 cents. Let us take a $60 bale of five years ago and compare its purchasing power of ordinary necessities with the $100 bale of today, as shown in the following table:

The $60 bale would buy—	The $100 bale will buy—
89 bushels potatoes, at 70 cents per bushel.	57 bushels potatoes, at $1.75 per bushel.
750 pounds lard, at 8 cents per pound.	312 pounds lard, at 32 cents per pound.
13 barrels flour, at $4.50 per barrel.	6½ barrels flour, at $15.50 per barrel.
375 pounds bacon, at 16 cents per pound.	250 pounds bacon, at 40 cents per pound.
6 tons hay, at $10 per ton.	5 tons hay, at $20 per ton.
30 pairs shoes, at $2 per pair.	23 pair shoes, at $4.25 per pair.
750 yards cotton cloth, at 8 cents per yard.	645 yards cotton cloth, at 15½ cents per yard.
100 bushels corn, at 60 cents per bushel.	50 bushels corn, at $2 per bushel.

From this it will be seen that the present purchasing value of cotton on a basis of 20 cents per pound is nothing like as much as it was at 12 cents; and while 20 cents may seem high, it is really much cheaper than the former price of 12 cents.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. RANSDELL. I am delighted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not know whether the Senator has incorporated further on in his remarks on this subject the suggestion I am about to make, but I think it nothing but fair to the producer of cotton, in considering the purchasing power of his product, to say that in 1915 and 1916 there was about a two-thirds crop, and the prospect for 1917 is also about two-thirds of an average crop, showing that even at 20 cents a pound the producer only has two-thirds of the volume of currency expressed in cotton that he had previous to the war. We made 11,060,000 bales in 1915, and 11,363,000 bales of lint cotton in 1916, exclusive of linters, and, according to my judgment—and I am just back from the cotton fields of South Carolina and North Carolina—cotton is as dead now as it will be in the middle of December, and I believe that the crop this year will not exceed eleven and a half million bales. Therefore, even at 20 cents a pound the basis of the producer's revenue is cut one-third, so that his purchasing power is decreased by want of the thing to get the currency as well as because of the conditions indicated by the comparison the Senator has made.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his valuable contribution to my remarks. I have adopted the figures compiled by the Agricultural Department, estimating the crop at about 12,500,000 bales, exclusive of linters. Including the linters they indicate that the crop will probably be in the neighborhood of 14,000,000 bales as the total. If the Senator, however, is correct, the situation is really very much worse than I thought it was. It is bad enough, even with a total of lint and linters of 14,000,000 bales, because the world needs a great deal more; and as I shall show later on, in spite of the fact that we had a shortage in the last two crops of 5,740,000 bales in comparison to the consumption, my estimate is that there will be a shortage in comparison with consumption this year of upward of 2,000,000 bales, so that we are very, very near the point where there is no surplus left.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think that the condition report, which will come out on the 25th, if it reflects accurately the deterioration in the South Atlantic States, will show that from the 25th day of August to the 25th day of September there has occurred the greatest deterioration in the cotton crop of the South Atlantic that has ever been known in its history. Speaking for my own farm, since I have been observing cotton production I have never seen such universal deterioration as appears. What we call rust, a disease peculiar to cotton when potash is not used as an ingredient of the fertilizer, has manifested itself over the magnificent farms throughout the entire State; and the most ideal weather conditions that could prevail from now until frost time would not add one pound to the production of cotton.

The Senator is basing his estimate correctly on the agricultural forecast on conditions of August 25. If the conditions to which I refer are prevailing elsewhere—and I understand that Texas is in worse condition than the South Atlantic States—my prediction is that we will make in the United States this year the smallest crop of cotton that has been made in the last 15 years.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I hope the prediction of the Senator from South Carolina is not correct. He is a very safe man, however, and I fear that it is. If it be correct, it emphasizes everything that I am saying and makes my argument a great deal stronger, because I am saying that there will be a shortage of at least 2,000,000 bales in what the world must have. I use the term "must have" advisedly. Now, if he is correct, there will be a shortage of between three and four million bales, and necessarily the price will go up much higher than I have indicated.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. RANDELL. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say that the observation just made by the Senator from South Carolina with reference to the condition of the cotton crop in the Atlantic States is identical with the information I have received from Mississippi. I have heard from every part of the State with reference to the condition of the crop, and the disastrous falling off since the 1st of August but substantiates what the Senator from South Carolina has said. To one who feels an interest in the material welfare of the masses of the people engaged in agriculture in the Southern States the prospects are alarming.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Mississippi, and am very sorry, indeed, to hear that the conditions in both of those States, South Carolina and Mississippi, are so much worse than indicated by the Government report. Again I will say that I was taking the last Government report, made, I believe, on the 25th of last month; and if these Senators are correct in their estimates—and I am sure they are basing what they say upon reliable information—the cotton shortage is going to be very much greater, and the price should be considerably higher than I have indicated.

Articles manufactured from cotton, such as drillings, sheetings, calicoes, and so forth, have increased in price from 104 to 133 per cent. There seems to have been some proportion between the price of raw cotton and the manufactured article in former years, but not now. Present prices were made several months ago when cotton was 25 to 27 cents per pound, and they show an abnormal profit to the manufacturer even at that price.

Wool, the principal competitor of cotton, has increased about 170 per cent over the average price of the three years prior to the war, both as to the raw and the manufactured products. The present price for raw wool, scoured, is $1.69, and the average price prior to the war was 62 cents.

I ask leave to annex, as Appendix C, to my remarks a table which I have prepared.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

* August, 1917.

Source of price quotations, United States Bureau of Labor Statistics. Wholesale prices of commodities, 1890 to 1917, obtained regularly from authoritative sources.

Mr. RANDELL. A helpful comparison in this connection is found in the cases of iron and coal. In 1913 steel billets were quoted at $25.79 per ton, while now they are selling at $95 to $100 per ton, an increase of $70 to $75 per ton, or about 400 per cent in gross cost. It is estimated that this country made last year about 40,000,000 tons of steel ingots, and as the purchasers and users now have to pay $70 to $75 per ton more for the same than in 1913 the increased cost in the price of steel will amount to the colossal sum of $2,800,000,000 for the current year. It is said that the net profits of the United States Steel Trust will be fully $750,000,000 this year, the net earnings of this one company being equal to one-half the entire gross value of the cotton crop of the South, including seed.

In 1915 bituminous coal sold at the mines at an average of $1.15 per ton. Within the past 12 months it reached about $4 per ton at the mines—an increase of 350 per cent—and so universal was the complaint that the Government intervened and fixed the price a few weeks ago at an average of $2 per ton at the mines, nearly 100 per cent advance on the price of five years ago.

Every human being in the country uses coal and iron, and the increase in price of both these absolute necessities of life was far in excess of 100 per cent until coal was reduced by the President. I do not say that these increases were right; indeed, I think they were outrageous and believe the strong hand of the Government should reach out and force steel down just as it did coal. A fair valuation should in some way be arrived at on all commodities, reducing them to not more than 100 per cent increase over the values of 1913, and cotton should bring the same proportionate price.

There is no doubt that either the prices of other things are too high or that of cotton too low. In my opinion, all need adjustment, most others down and cotton up. I think it very unfortunate that the prices of everything in this country are so highly inflated. There is bound to be a reaction, and I fear when the drop comes it will be fatal in many ways to our national peace and prosperity. It would be infinitely more fortunate if the general range of prices prevailing in the years prior to the war could hold now, but it seems this can not be, and my contention is that cotton should be treated on terms of parity with everything else. I do not advocate nor wish to see exorbitant prices for cotton, such as have prevailed for coal and steel, and to a great extent for the articles manufactured out of cotton and wool, but I must insist that it sell for a fair price when compared with the other products of the farm and other articles of everyday use.

An element to be given careful consideration in discussing the cotton situation is its great and rapidly growing use for explosives. A bulletin issued by the Census Bureau on April 25 last showed that for the three months of this year ending March 31 there were used in the manufacture of explosives 257,394 bales of cotton, including linters and hull fiber. At that rate the annual consumption will equal 1,029,576 bales; but when we consider that the United States did not declare war until the 6th of April last, and that there has been a marked increase in the production of all war materials since then, it is fair to assume that the consumption of cotton for explosives during the next calendar year will be at least double that of the current year, or fully 2,000,000 bales. Indeed, I have no doubt it will be greatly in excess of 2,000,000 bales unless the war should come to a sudden and unexpected close.

Another very important element is the following: In 1915 the total world production of cotton was 18,685,000 bales, while the world consumption the next year, 1916, equaled 22,350,000 bales, or an excess of consumption over production of 3,665,000. In 1916 the world production was 19,635,000 bales, while the consumption the following year, 1917, was 21,720,000 bales, or 2,075,000 bales in excess of the previous crop. Adding the excess of consumption over production for these two years, we have 5,740,000 bales, which means that the world actually consumed in the two years, 1916 and 1917, a total of 5,740,000 bales of cotton in excess of the amount produced in the two preceding years, 1915 and 1916. This was a terrific strain on the world's stock of cotton on hand July 31, 1915, and reduced it nearly 2,000,000 bales below its normal surplus stock. The cotton crop of the United States for the current year ending July 31, 1918, is estimated by the Department of Agriculture at 12,500,000 bales, exclusive of linters, which indicates an ultimate crop, including linters, of about 14,000,000, and the crop of the remainder of the world will be about 6,000,000, or a total of approximately 20,000,000 bales for the entire cotton output of the world. The consumption for the last two years averaged 22,035,000 bales a year. Hence if the consumption of the next year is as great as for the past two years it will exceed the production by 2,035,000 bales, making a further heavy inroad on the surplus stock and reducing it to a dangerously small amount.

I ask to annex as a part of my remarks, as Appendix D, a table which I have prepared.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RANDELL. A further element worthy of very careful thought is that there will probably be much reduction in the cotton yield next year, owing to the following causes, to wit:

First. A large number of farm laborers drafted in the Army. Second. A further shortage of labor, owing to the continued exodus of negroes from the Southern States into northern and western factories with the hope of securing higher wages.

Third. The unusually high price of corn, hogs, sheep, and cattle, which, coupled with scarcity of labor, will cause many cotton fields to be planted in corn or converted into grazing lands.

Fourth. The great shortage and abnormally high price of fertilizer, which has materially decreased the yield of the present crop and will doubtless be a potent factor in reducing that of next year.

Fifth. The present low price of cotton, which will not prove profitable when the high prices of labor and everything the farmer uses are considered.

Everything points to an increased demand for cotton next year and a decreased production. It therefore behooves those who have cotton to appreciate it at its true value and not allow their golden harvest to slip away from them without proper compensation.

The recent drop in the price was caused, in my opinion, by rush of cotton to the market and eagerness to sell on the part of the producer. I do not believe the embargo on cotton had any appreciable effect on the price. England has for more than a year enforced a practical embargo against cotton to the neutral countries adjacent to Germany, such as Holland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, and the total amount of cotton shipped to these countries during the past year was only 180,662 bales, including linters. Our embargo will have no more effect than the British embargo, and will practically be confined in its operations to the cotton destined to those four neutral nations. We must seek closer home to find a reason for the unwarranted decline in the price of cotton, and my firm conviction is that it was caused by rushing it to market and willingness on the part of the producer to accept any price offered, regardless of the real value of his product. This course is suicidal in the extreme and should be stopped at once.

The cotton grower is in command of the situation. All he needs do is to hold his cotton until the buyers come to him and beg him for it. The world is bound to have our cotton. It can not exist without the cotton of our Southern States. We are in a position to dictate our own terms and force compliance therewith. I would not under any circumstances advise asking more than the fair value of our commodity, but I again insist that we must have a reasonable price, and in fixing that price the cost of other farm commodities, of manufactured goods of all kinds, of labor, and of everything that enters into the life of the southern cotton grower must be considered so that cotton may be placed on equality with everything else.

The people of the South were never so independent and so well able to hold their cotton as now. Fortunately for them, they have been practicing intelligent diversified agriculture, and most of them have raised on the farm the bulk of things needed for home consumption. The world believes that the South depends solely upon cotton, but Government statistics show that in 1915 the value of the entire cotton crop of the South was only $750,000,000, while the corn crop of that year was $785,000,000. No one can predict what these crops will sell for this year. Cotton and cotton seed will surely bring a minimum of $1,500,000,000. The Department of Agriculture estimates that the Southern States will produce 1,227,967,000 bushels of corn, which, if figured at the low estimate of $1.25 per bushel, would give $1,534,958,750—about the same value as the cotton. The South has become a large producer of every kind of live stock, and her crops of wheat, oats, sugar, rice, potatoes, beans, soy beans, hay, etc., aggregate very large amounts. Her people are by no means dependent upon cotton. A few years ago cotton seed had small value; now it is worth $50 per ton, or $25 worth of seed for every bale of cotton—almost as much for the seed in a bale as the bale itself was worth during a part of the season of 1914. The cottonseed crop of the present year will aggregate 6,250,000 tons and be worth at least $312,500,000, which will give an average to each of the 12 principal cotton-growing States of $26,040,000 for seed alone.

My advice is for the cotton growers, the commission merchants and dealers in cotton, and the bankers in the Southern States to cooperate and work together in order to secure a fair and legitimate price for cotton. They should make up their minds that to sell cotton at the present time for less than 25 cents per pound would be an unnecessary sacrifice. They should, without excitement or flare of trumpets or unlawful combinations in restraint of trade, each and every one in his own way do his bit toward seeing that the South is not robbed of at least $25 per bale on its cotton by selling at 20 cents—a colossal sum amounting in the aggregate to $312,500,000.

The farmer can aid by storing his cotton at home when it is ginned, or in warehouses like the great storage warehouse at New Orleans, by shipping it slowly and in small quantities, and by refusing positively to sell unless a satisfactory price is offered. He should not seek buyers, but when they come to him should say, "I will take such a price for my cotton, which you can give if you wish, but I will not sell unless my price is paid." The old way was for the buyer to fix the price, but the seller should do so with this crop.

The merchant who has made advances on the cotton can assist by extending payment of the debts due him, either wholly or partially; by aiding the grower to borrow 75 per cent of the value of his cotton, estimated at 25 cents per pound; and by counseling the producers to stand firm in demanding a just price.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for just a question?

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I am very much interested in the observations of the Senator, but it occurs to me that if similar advice to that which he is giving to the cotton growers of the South were to be given to the producers of the articles and commodities required by the American people and by our country in the prosecution of the war—if the Senators and Representatives from various other States gave such directions to those who grow wheat and corn and those who produce the various commodities entering into the daily life of the people, to those who produce copper and lead and coal—the result would be a combination, or rather a series of combinations, under which prices would be raised to such towering heights that the people and the Government would experience difficulty in obtaining these commodities imperative to life and to success in the war. Unquestionably, without governmental intervention, the cost would be almost prohibitive, and in the end the burden would rest upon the consuming public. Does not the Senator think that the advice just referred to will prove harmful, and that if he gives it as his deliberate judgment to influence the cotton growers of the South other Senators would be justified in urging those who produce in their States and who manufacture articles essential for the people and the Government, to hold their products for higher prices, as a result of which ultimately we would have such staggering prices, prices so high that the consuming public would be unable to meet them, and the cost of the war would be increased so stupendously that the resources of the Government would be severely taxed if not exhausted before Prussian militarism is overthrown?

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator had listened carefully to what I have said he would have observed that I have distinctly said that I did not wish to get any unfair price for cotton. I have reiterated two or three times that I desire to have cotton placed upon an equality with everything else. I have shown that the price of other things has gone up enormously, very much higher than cotton. Cotton has increased on an average of about 77 per cent. Steel has increased over 400 per cent. Coal increased 350 per cent, until it was put down by order of the President a few days ago, and it is now in the neighborhood of 100 per cent increase over the price prior to the war. For wheat the price has been fixed by the Food Conservation Commission, or by a compromise, I do not just know how, for the present year at $2.20 per bushel. It was between 80 and 90 cents a bushel prior to the war, and it has increased in price to about 180 per cent. The price of corn has gone up to an average, as I showed, of 133 per cent. The price of everything on earth the farmer uses, that the producer of cotton uses, has gone up very much more than 100 per cent.

I decried, sir, and I do so again, the present high prices. I would glory in seeing the prices prior to the war prevail. I have introduced a table—and I ask the Senator please to read that table carefully—showing that the purchasing power of a bale of cotton prior to the war, $60, its value then at 12 cents a pound was infinitely more than its present value of 20 cents per pound; and all in the world I am doing now—and I say to the Senator I do it after the most mature consideration—is to invite my people to a consideration of what they have, to make them understand that they have a most valuable product, and to suggest to them not to sell any cheaper in proportion than other products are being sold.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. RANSDELL. I would be glad to see other things go down and to see cotton coming down likewise, but if other things are to stay up, then I wish cotton to go up in the same proportion, and if I can make my people bring up the price in the same proportion I intend to do it. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, further replying to the argument of the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], let me say that the Senator from Louisiana is not asking for an extraordinary price for the staple product of the South. He asks only for equality of price; that is all.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is all, absolutely.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Equality. When the price of cotton goes up and the prices of other things go down, of course, the cotton farmer has greatly the advantage of the producer of wheat and other farm products. It would be an injustice to raise the price of cotton under those circumstances. It would be an injustice to the wheat grower and the producers of other articles embraced in the necessities of life. We do not ask for anything of that kind. All that we desire is to give the cotton farmer an equal show with the other vocations and classes of people of this country. If the price of other products goes up a hundred per cent, let the price of cotton go up a hundred per cent—that is, if the law of supply and demand would carry it up a hundred per cent. Preserve the equality of prices and you will promote justice between all classes. I would not sacrifice one class of laborers in order to promote the interests of another class of laborers. It is not best for the Government. It is not best for all the people. Just at this time, as shown by the able argument made by the Senator from Louisiana, the cotton growers are not getting justice; and therefore it is the duty of the cotton grower—he is simply acting in obedience to the law of self-preservation—to see that the things which he has devoted his energy to produce shall bring a living price. I believe in the wisdom and sound principle involved in that character of selfishness which works primarily for the good of the individual while at the same time it promotes the well-being of all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. I know of no man in public life who has a higher reputation for fairness and integrity than the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, but I confess that the argument which he is making, and I have listened to the part to which he has just referred, seems to me to be one that is fraught with danger, and if followed by the people will lead to industrial paralysis and economic ruin, and is not calculated to bring about the results which he says he desires. By that I mean if the great desideratum is high prices and each producer and manufacturer clamors for advancing prices, our country will be brought to financial ruin.

It seems to me, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, that if he insists that the people of the South shall demand higher prices for their products, when I understand they are getting now an advance of 70 per cent upon the price of cotton over prewar prices, and they follow such advice, the result is going to be that there will be combinations in other parts of this land to increase the prices of all other products, so that everything that enters into the daily consumption of the people and into the requirements of the Government will reach such dangerous and dizzy heights that our whole business and producing system will sink beneath its own weight. Everywhere under such a policy of holding productions and commodities for higher prices, avarice and cupidity and selfishness would rule and extortion and profiteering would go on until the people of moderate means and those who are not producers—the middlemen, the clerks, the employees, the great army of labor—will be "bled white" by the producers and those following a course so sordid and deadly.

According to my view I feel that patriotic Senators will now say to the people of their States, whether they produce cotton or wheat or copper or sugar or wool or beets or manufactured products, we ask you to reduce prices in the interest of the public, in the interest of the millions of toilers of our land, in the interest of peace and domestic tranquility and general prosperity, in the interest of our brave allies who are fighting with us for liberty and for the cause of civilization, and in the interest of and for the good of our beloved country, engaged as it is in the greatest war of all time.

If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, there was a meeting a few days ago of the beet-sugar men of the West.

I had the opportunity of participating for a moment in their deliberations and of speaking to a number of them. I urged that in this crisis, even if they had the power to charge 10 or 12 cents a pound for sugar—and my State is a sugar-producing State; it produces millions of pounds—they ought to reduce the price to the lowest possible point, allowing only a margin of profit sufficient to efficiently produce the requirements of the people. I feel now is a time for patriotism and not for profit. The sugar men voluntarily abated several cents a pound and agreed to sell their product at 7½ cents per pound.

It seems to me if Senators would send out the word everywhere to the people of their States, "We think you ought to be patriotic and lower prices instead of raising prices," they would be doing a public service and making lighter the burdens of the Government in this hour of trial and sacrifice. If in Louisiana and the South the cotton producers are not getting as high a price relatively as others are getting for their products, they ought to be pointed to as patriotic people, whose example ought to be followed.

I hope the Senator will pardon me and not misjudge me, but it seems to me he ought to rise here on the floor of the Senate and point to the people of his section of the country and to their patriotism and indicate what they are doing for their country and for the world in this supreme crisis.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

Mr. RANDELL. Let me answer the Senator from Utah and then I will be glad to yield. The Senator has made a very beautiful, patriotic speech which I listened to with intense interest. The Senator's colleague [Mr. Smoot] was on the floor of the Senate a few days ago insisting that the State of Utah—and I have not a doubt the junior Senator from Utah, now present, joined him in it—should be singled out and made to pay an excise tax of half a cent a pound on sugar. I said at that time that I wished Louisiana to pay the same proportionate tax that every other part of the Union pays, but that I would fight with all the power there was in me against the imposition of a tax on a Louisiana product which was not put upon the products of other States. I said it was outrageous to single out a product of my State, sugar, and make it pay a tax of $3,000,000 per annum, and that if the Senator from Utah was so altruistic as to wish his people to pay that tax when other people were not paying it he could do it if he desired; I was not built on such lines. I say the same thing to the Senator from Utah who has just spoken. If he desires the people of Utah to sell their sugar to people cheaper in proportion than other agricultural products are sold, he can do so; I shall not give my people any such advice.

Now, I know nothing about what went on in the Food Conservation Board, but it is suspected around this Capitol and by the people of America that the price of sugar would not have been fixed at 7½ cents a pound unless it had been known that the Food Commission was going to insist upon that price. Does anyone believe that the price of coal would have been fixed at $2 per ton at the mines if we had listened to the coal barons? Oh, no, Mr. President; the price of these commodities was fixed and agreed to because there was no way to resist the price fixing.

Now, I shall not be placed in a false position by the Senator. I have insisted that I do not desire the prices of cotton and other things to go up, and have said that I would like to see them stay down. I should like to see the prices prior to the war prevail. But it seems that can not be, and what I ask is that cotton be treated like everything else.

The Senator says that my advice will bring about combinations. My reply to that is that there seems to have been combinations in practically everything else in this country except cotton, at least prices have gone up enormously. Does the Senator think that the price of manufactured articles made of cotton should be allowed to stand at 133 per cent and the price of cotton not go up; that the price of both raw and manufactured wool that come in competition with cotton should go up enormously—170 per cent—and cotton not go up? Is there any fairness in that? All I ask is fairness, and I deem it, sir, not only my privilege but my duty to call to the attention of my people the fact of the great increase in the price of all those other commodities.

Mr. President, I yield to no man in my feeling of patriotism and my State yields to none in its patriotism and its loyalty in the prosecution of this war. But when a matter of this kind comes up we desire to be treated like everyone else. That is our position. I now yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has called attention to the most interesting and important question of the time, and that is the effect of rising prices upon the cost of the war, and incidentally upon the vigor of its prosecution. It is a very natural thing for a Senator situated as is the Senator from Louisiana, who views the product of his State and realizes that that product is not rising as are the prices of other products throughout the country, to endeavor to do what he can to secure equality of conditions. But as the Senator from Utah points out, if we all engage in such activity the result will be a constantly increasing scale of prices in all the commodities that are essential to life, and we not only will have a war that will cost two or three times as much as it ought to cost, but we will also have a race between the price raising of commodities and the wage raising of labor. The wage earner who finds his dollar of to-day will only purchase one-half of the cotton or wheat or iron and steel or coal that it would a year or two years ago will insist upon an increase in his wages, and we will find that the rising scale of prices in commodities will be followed by a rising scale in the price of labor, and the end of the war will find us suspended in the air with skyrocket prices both as to commodities and wages. The prices of commodities will undoubtedly fall, but all know the resisting power of labor, for it has courage and intelligence behind it. The result will be that we shall have serious industrial conditions at the close of the war as the result of these constantly increasing prices.

So I share with the Senator from Utah the view, without reflecting upon the natural zeal of every Senator to look out after the interest of his particular section, that we should address ourselves to an effort both in the way of shaping public opinion and in the way of legislating to prevent these constantly increasing prices, and that instead of urging communities and people interested in particular vocations to join in this movement for a raise of prices all our energies should be directed in the line of a reduction of prices and of bringing every intellectual, moral, and legislative force to bear upon the country to that end.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President—

Mr. RANDELL. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I can not agree with the position taken by Senators here who ought to be advised on economic questions. It is only necessary for me to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that it is unfair and unjust to attempt to compare the profits made by a corporation which represents only a few men, who take the product of millions of producers in the country and extract from it a per cent pound for pound greater than the millions of producers get. Take the cotton producers of the South from the little five-bale man to the thousand-bale man. There are millions of them. I wish I had the statistics showing exactly the number directly engaged in cotton production.

I have here a table furnished me by a wholesale house in Charleston, S. C. I want to call the Senator's attention to the profit of the producer of this universally necessary article and the profits made by the little handful of cotton manufacturers in this country, pound for pound. I will never advocate the decrease of price to the great body of unorganized producers. That is a natural, normal, healthy distribution of wealth, which finds its way readily in all the channels of commerce and promotes industry; but when trusts and combinations take the raw material, the product of millions, and extract unholy profits, that is the domain for criticism and that is the domain for legislation.

What is the percentage of wealth among the sugar producers as compared with the staggering wealth of your sugar refiners? What is the per capita wealth of the cotton producers of the South in comparison with the staggering fortunes made in the cotton factories? When we are going to compare and find where the wealth is going, we must have some economic and statesmanlike view of the natural distribution of the wealth, educating the children, bettering the homes, putting pictures on the walls, carpets on the floors, raising the standard of living, and disseminating intelligence among millions, or have the price put so low as to have the floors bare and heads empty, while the manufacturers, even at a moderate so-called profit, are pouring all the proceeds of millions into their pockets.

If the Senator from Louisiana will allow me, let me use an illustration. One concern manufactures, let us say, 100,000 bales of cotton. There are only a thousand stockholders. They make $5 a bale, or a cent a pound. There is a half million dollars of profits to be divided among a thousand people. A thousand cotton growers, with five to seven in the family, will not produce that amount of cotton. Go and look at the homes of the farmers and the homes around the cities. Look at the domestic surroundings which characterize this Capital. Let me read some figures as to the per cent. Common bed ticking in 1915, 2 yards to a pound, sold for 10 cents a yard; in 1916 it sold for 16 cents a yard, and in 1917 for 42 cents a yard. Common bleached cotton sold in 1915 at 8½ cents a yard, in 1916 at 12 cents a yard, and in 1917 at 20 cents a yard. In 1915 drilling sold at 7½ cents a yard, in 1916 at 10 cents a yard, and in 1917 at 18 cents a yard.

The Senator from Louisiana, in using comparative figures, referred to the average price of cotton before the war. I have taken the war years and the price this wholesale house sent to me. With the Senator's permission, I will read them into the Record.

Mr. RANDELL. I would be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The price of ticking was 20 cents a pound in 1915; in 1916, 32 cents a pound; and in 1917, 84 cents a pound. Without reading the other figures, I will ask to have this table incorporated. The point I wish to make is that cotton has only advanced 37.97 per cent since 1915, while ticking has advanced 162½ per cent, and other articles in like proportion.

The matter referred to is as follows:

	Yards to pound.	Wholesale price Sept. 10, 1915.	Wholesale price Sept. 10, 1916.	Wholesale price Sept. 10, 1917.
		Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
A. C. A. ticking .....	2	10	16	42
4/4 F. of L. bleached .....	3½	8½	12	20
7/8 drilling .....	3	7½	10	18
Price middling cotton, per pound .....		9½	14½	20

Above price cotton goods per yard.

	Increase, 1917.	Per cent.
A. C. A. ticking .....	162½
4/4 bleached .....	66½
7/8 drilling .....	80
Cotton .....	37.97

Price per pound.

	1915	1916	1917
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
A. C. A. ticking .....	20	32	84
4/4 bleached .....	28	42	70
7/8 drilling .....	22½	30	54

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, according to the patriotic effusion and deliverances of the Senator from Utah, he will call on 10,000,000 cotton growers to give up a reasonable amount to educate their children and support their families and pay their debts and leave 162½ per cent to the man who gets all the bales and converts them into bed ticking.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Louisiana permit me just one observation?

Mr. RANDELL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I apologize to my friend for having broken into his excellent and illuminating address.

Mr. RANDELL. I am very glad that the Senator did so.

Mr. KING. If it were proper, I should be very glad to reply to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina and show what I conceive to be a fallacy as to one position which he takes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Louisiana will allow me—

Mr. RANDELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The great fallacy that "the Senator from South Carolina" and his colleagues from the cotton-growing States on this floor have been guilty of is to sit here and see the producers of a world-wide necessity from the time we have been in the Senate mulcted of their just rights in this matter, because it is impossible to organize them and it is possible to organize the others.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one observation, if my friend from Louisiana will yield.

Mr. RANDELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I agree with much of what the Senator says; but I think the Senator from South Carolina has no occasion to be so greatly concerned in regard to the condition of the farmers of the United States. I appreciate their hardships and their contributions to the prosperity of the Nation; but I beg of him to think of the multitude of employees with fixed salaries, so inadequate for happiness and progress, of the millions of people who inhabit cities, and the wage earners of this Republic who are bound beneath the yoke of poverty. The policy suggested by my good friend from South Carolina and my good friend from Louisiana, if that shall be the preaching of the Senate, and those views shall be accepted by the agriculturists and the producers of this Republic, will bear so heavily upon the wage earners and the multitude who inhabit our cities that we will see starvation and famine and riot and industrial depression and demoralization that will make the prosecution of this war difficult and strengthen the hands of the powerful enemy across the seas.

For months the cry has been for a reduction of the cost of living. The people demanded food control in order that starvation might not invade our industrial centers. We have legislated in order that the level of prices might be lowered. The law of supply and demand breaks down in a world war such as this, and new conditions demand new remedies. It seems to me that every Senator now should be lifting his voice in behalf of a reduction of prices. The copper men have had the price of copper reduced to 23½ cents per pound. I am advised that some miners can not produce copper at that price at a profit, but I should be glad to see in every avenue of production prices maintained at as low a level as possible to the end that the millions who are dependent upon wages for their livelihood shall not be oppressed and burdened; that the wage earner may be properly cared for; and that the Government may go forward in the prosecution of the war without having to place upon the shoulders of the people to-day and upon unborn generations billions and billions of dollars of indebtedness, the result of extortionate prices and the unjustifiable profiteering that is to-day being engaged in by some of the American producers and manufacturers. Of course, there must be a fair margin of profit in business, in the efforts of the farmer, and in all the activities of the people, but we must realize that this hour calls for sacrifice, and no man should seek to profit out of his country's needs or distress.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Louisiana will allow me just one word, and then I am done—

Mr. RANDELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will join with the Senator from Utah in a righteous campaign against the unholy pirates who raid our markets, but he should draw the distinction, when he is making his eloquent plea for the wage earner, between the real producers and those who are, par excellence, the wage earners of this country. The most helpless and hopeless wage earners in America to-day are the agricultural producers. They have nothing to say in fixing the prices of the things they sell and nothing to do with the fixing of the prices of the things which they have to buy, while the labor organizations are as powerful in this Government to-day as any political party could possibly be. I need not cite the Senator to illustrations of the power of organized labor in America. They make demands, and they have them granted because they are organized; while, just as the Senator from Louisiana stated, a few days ago cotton was 19 cents a pound, to-day it is 23 cents a pound, and it may be that next Monday or Monday week it will be again down to 19 cents a pound—

Mr. RANDELL. And possibly to 15 cents a pound.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As the result of the manipulations and cooperation of these organized pirates. Yes; I will start with the Senator from Utah to lower the cost of living, but I desire to start at the right end.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Louisiana will again permit me to trespass upon his time—

Mr. RANDELL. All right. I am delighted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. You would start at the right end; but, Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina, than whom there is no stronger debater or stronger and more forceful character upon the floor of the Senate, advocates what I conceive to be a combination upon the part of the agriculturists of the South. Of course if they combine for the purpose of maintaining—

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Just a word. I did not advocate their combination. I simply advocated the operation of the law of supply and demand. Let me say to the Senator right here and now, that upon the operation of the law of supply and demand one thing is absolutely essential, and that is equality of bargaining power between buyer and seller. The average agriculturist has a weight of debt on his back, and when he comes to the market his obligations are pressing him, while the buyer has the unrestricted resources of the finances of the country on his side. We have no equality of the bargaining power.

When the banking and currency law was up for consideration in the Senate I wrote at my desk with my own pen the amendment to section 13 of the bill, making the staple farm products the basis of the issuance of Federal reserve notes, in order that the farmer, when he went to market, might in the things which he had to sell at least have the same financial backing as the man who had to buy.

I am not advocating a rise in the price of cotton because other things have risen. Cotton on its merits to-day, regardless of the war, is worth 25 cents a pound, taking into consideration the cost of its production, the education, and the well-being of those who produce it and the world-wide demand for it, there being 900,000,000 people demanding American cotton; but when converted into the finished product the difference between 12½ and 25 cents goes into the pockets of the favored few who can organize; and yet the man who makes the cotton is at the mercy of the juggling of the market by those who sit around a table and who scarcely know a cotton stalk from a Jimson weed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is no doubt but that the Senator from South Carolina has indorsed the position of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, and the position of the latter Senator is that the cotton producers should not sell their cotton, but that they should combine and hold it for higher prices. His contention is that, inasmuch as steel has risen 300 or 400 per cent and other products are rising, the producer of cotton should receive a higher price than he is to-day receiving; but the point that I am making—it is not against cotton; it is not against the farmer—the point I am attempting to make is that the Senators here and public-spirited and patriotic men everywhere in our country to-day should be lifting their voices against profiteering, whether it be by the farmer or whether it be by the steel manufacturer. I have no sympathy with the demand of any farmer that he should receive three and four dollars per bushel for wheat; I am not in sympathy with the demand for $150 per head for beef cattle; I have no sympathy with extortionate demands of those who produce—I do not care whether they are farmers or miners or oil producers or manufacturers.

I have no sympathy with the idea that we should advocate a rise in prices in order to bring about equality in prices. I think we should bring about equality by advocating a reduction in some of the extortionate demands made by those who have products and commodities for sale. If there be men—and I concede that there are, as suggested by the Senator from South Carolina—sitting around tables in the stock markets who juggle prices, who “do not know a Jimson weed from a cotton stalk”—if there be that class of men that are rigging the market and causing fictitious prices and robbing the farmers and the consuming public, by criminal statute or otherwise they should be dragged down from their high places; and those men who are practicing extortion in the prices of the things which the Government buys, whether it be coal or steel or munitions of war, ought to be taken hold of in some proper and effective manner. They should have a fair and reasonable profit, but the Government should not be held up by the throat and the people should not be the victims of illegal combinations and extortionate demands. Once again I say this is a time for sacrifice. The patriotic people of our Nation should see to it that justice and fair dealing shall be the rule of the hour.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the trouble is that you do not put your hands on them, whereas as to that timid, helpless, defenseless poverty in the form of the farmer, the minute you talk about even a shower in Louisiana it breaks the price of the market a cent a pound. You have on the statute books, to be sure, the Sherman antitrust law and the Clayton amendment to it; yet prices have soared, and those men have laughed you to scorn. You can get hold of the poor devil on the farm simply by intimating that adverse circumstances may develop. The gamblers will take care of the balance. All you have got to do is to threaten an embargo and cotton goes down $30 a bale.

All you have got to do is to have the Weather Bureau indicate that there will be a shower in Texas in September, that would not add a pound of cotton in a thousand years, and the price breaks a cent a pound; whereas the men who rig the market laugh you to scorn and set your Federal statutes at naught.

Yes; I am ready to lower the cost of living if you can get some kind of a law and the kind of men who have the grit in their craws to go and take hold of these multimillionaires and see that they disgorge some; but I am not going to lift my voice against that vast horde of men, those millions who produce the clothing you wear, the shoes you wear, and the food you eat, and yet have got to go hungry and barefooted and naked because they are helpless. No; I will not do it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield one minute further?

Mr. RANDELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not have the opinion of the farming and agricultural classes of the United States which is suggested by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not have to have their opinion, if the Senator will allow me. I have chewed the bag myself. I have seen my mother, with her hands distorted in her hand-to-hand conflict with poverty, raising cotton at a starvation price; I have seen my brothers and sisters laboring and trying to keep belt and buckle together, while those who were manufacturing cotton were having an abundance. No; I do not have to theorize; I do not have to put my impressions on the basis of speculation. I have trodden the wine press myself.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the farmers and the agricultural classes of the United States are sturdy, virile, strong, and patriotic. They represent the best there is in this land, and in all ages they have been the foundation of the State.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If they were not, they would be dead.

Mr. KING. They are not the cringing class of people that the Senator from South Carolina would indicate they are.

Mr. KIRBY. I want to ask the Senator—

Mr. KING. Let me complete my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. KING. I am trespassing upon the time of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANDELL. I yielded to the Senator from Utah, and he has the floor.

Mr. KIRBY. Is it not a fact that the average wage of the farmer and his family is $600 or less a year?

Mr. KING. Oh, Mr. President, we have various figures that the average wage of clerks and of the laboring men in cities and in factories throughout the United States is between $600 and $700 a year. I submit that, man for man—and I am not saying a word against the farmers and the agricultural classes; indeed I would defend them against the tyranny of the manufacturers, from which they have so often suffered, because in this country, as in every other country, the agricultural classes are the bone and sinew of the Nation and those who bear upon their shoulders the great affairs of State and determine the progress and the prosperity of the Nation—they rank with any other class of our citizens. But, Mr. President, the point I am trying to emphasize is this: I am seeking to establish a formula and to promulgate a general rule, rather than an exception, and to say, not as against farmers or against any producing class, that there ought to be an effort everywhere, not alone in the Halls of Congress, but through the columns of the press and in all parts of our country, to reduce prices from their pyramided condition until it will be possible for the people of this country to live without distress and for our Government to prosecute the war without incurring indebtedness that will stagger this and succeeding generations.

I have sympathy with the farmers; I have sympathy with the wage earners; I have sympathy with those who by their toil and effort have built this great Republic; but I have no sympathy with the great corporations which have made merchandise out of the souls of men and have unduly profited by the honest toil of the laboring men of the United States. I plead now with my good friend from Louisiana and urge him to engage in a great service and to say to the people of his State and to the people of the United States, whether they be farmers or manufacturers or produce anything that enters into the consumption of the people, that there should be a concerted effort to stabilize prices, to reduce them to a proper level, to the end that there may be peace and contentment in our land and a prosperity uniform and general. We want all classes satisfied and protected. We want equality and fair dealing. We shall hold up to execration the man who seeks to profit out of the distress of the people or the need of his country.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I have said in substance exactly what the Senator says in his closing remarks. I repeat it. I have not urged the southern people to go into any unlawful combination in restraint of trade or to do anything which is unpatriotic; I have simply tried to point out the true situation in the commercial world, and, giving to my constituents a knowledge of the situation, have suggested to them that they ought to be treated like others are being treated. I have said, and I repeat, that the present high scale of prices is most unfortunate. I should like very much to see it reduced, but I see no chance to have it reduced, and I am not altruistic and unselfish enough to ask the farmers, the cotton producers of Louisiana and the other Southern States, to take very low prices for their products when all others are receiving very high prices for theirs. It is the duty, sir, of a Senator to point out the exact condition of the country. We have superior advantages here for ascertaining the facts, and we would be recreant in duty to our constituents if we did not lay all the facts before them and advise them properly.

Mr. President, I will gladly enter into an arrangement or understanding with any Senators to do what we can to reduce prices. I took an active part in the passage of the food conservation measure; I think it was a wise measure; I will gladly assist in other legislation of that kind; but until we can have general legislation fixing a level of prices I must call to the attention of the farmers of Louisiana—men who can not combine, men who can not be represented here by lobbyists, as some organizations and businesses are represented, but who can only be represented by their Senators and Members in the House—I say, sir, that I must call to their attention what, in my opinion, they should do in a great crisis like this. That is all I have done. I hope all prices may go down to the level that existed prior to the war, and no one will be more glad than I to see the price of cotton go down along with the price of all other products. Other products have gone up; cotton has gone down; and I simply ask that it be placed on terms of parity with the others.

Now, Mr. President, I will conclude in a very few words. Returning to the line of my thought, the banker can turn the scale, as he did in 1914, by lending money freely on cotton valued at a minimum of 25 cents. In 1914, when cotton was down to 6 cents, the banker insisted it was worth a minimum of 8 cents, and immediately it rose to 8 cents. Let the southern banker say now that cotton is worth a minimum of 25 cents, act accordingly, and it will go to 25 cents. When cotton was worth 10 to 12 cents in former years bankers freely loaned 7 to 8 cents per pound, or 65 to 70 per cent of its value. Let them do likewise now and lend 17 to 18 cents per pound on cotton. They would be perfectly safe, for there is no better security on earth than a loan of 17 to 18 cents a pound on cotton at the present time.

If our people will only realize how essential cotton is to the needs of mankind, what a mint of wealth they have in their cotton, and how completely they control its price, I am sure they will all stand together and secure fair value before parting with it.

CONFIRMATION OF HON. WILLIAM C. ADAMSON.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have been requested by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to report favorably for him, from the Committee on Finance, the nomination of Hon. WILLIAM C. ADAMSON, of Georgia, to be general appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York, to fill an existing vacancy.

Judge ADAMSON has served in the other House about 20 years. We all know him and are familiar with the services he has rendered the country as a Member of that body. I am about to ask the Senate to confirm his nomination in open session as in executive session. There have been several precedents for such a course. I might cite the cases of Judge Clayton and others, whose nominations were confirmed by the Senate in open session as in executive session. The nomination of Judge ADAMSON has been approved by the two Senators from Georgia and has been reported upon favorably by the committee. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Hon. WILLIAM C. ADAMSON to be general appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York be confirmed in open session as in executive session and that the President be notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none; and the Senate advises and consents to the nomination. The President will be notified.

GERMAN INTRIGUE AND PROPAGANDA.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we have from time to time heard statements made, and there have been various publications to the effect, that there has been a German propaganda in this country for the purpose of influencing not only the press and public sentiment, but for the purpose of influencing the Senate and the House of Representatives. A day or two ago the State Department gave out a publication to the effect that the former German ambassador at Washington had asked for a large sum of money for use in this country to influence public sentiment and affect congressional action. No one who is familiar with current affairs and has followed the sinister and slimy course of Germany and German diplomacy here and elsewhere was at all surprised at the revelations. I will say, and I am confident that I am within the limits of the facts, that additional revelations will soon be made public indicating more fully the intrigues, the cabals, and the criminal conspiracies of Germany and Austria in this country against the tranquillity and peace of our Nation and for the purpose of embroiling this country in war with other nations.

The Imperial German Government, both before and since the war began in 1914, has conducted its diplomatic relations with an utter disregard of the conventions and usages that obtain among civilized nations. She has betrayed the confidences and hospitality of nations with whom she was at peace, and has plotted against their domestic peace, and in some instances against their territorial integrity and national sovereignty, while professing to entertain friendly sentiments toward them. She has shown a cynical contempt for international law and for the principles of justice and honesty which should govern the conduct of nations. The same indifference manifested as to the rights of small nations she has exhibited as to large nations. Her entire conduct has conclusively demonstrated that the sacred obligations, including responsibilities arising from treaties, were "scraps of paper," to be ignored whenever supposed advantage would accrue to her. I affirm that Germany is a moral bankrupt.

Evidence which is incontrovertible has accumulated conclusively demonstrating that Germany has attempted to stir up sedition among our own people and to arouse public sentiment in this country against the execution of our laws and the carrying out of national policies. The dislocation of our industrial system and the paralysis of our business was attempted by the representatives and agents of Germany. Strikes were fomented, incendiarism was encouraged, munition plants and bridges were destroyed, and other efforts made to interrupt the industrial peace and activity of the American people. Many suspected that Germany and German gold and German spies were at the bottom of these intrigues and crimes. There is no question that Germany's hand directed many of these criminal acts and these deeds of violence.

And some of these nefarious acts were performed at a time when we were at peace with Germany and her representatives were enjoying the hospitality of our shores and the protection of our Government. Under such circumstances they were plotting against the peace of our country and attempting to embroil our Nation in war with friendly powers. When the history of this war is written and there shall be disclosed to the world the full record of the German propaganda and Germany's crimes here and in other nations it will present a case of treachery, violations of the laws of neutrality and of international obligations that obtain among civilized nations unparalleled in all the annals of the world.

It has already been revealed that Germany sought to embroil our Nation in war with Mexico. The relations between the United States and Mexico were strained and there was a strong feeling upon the part of many of the people of our country that a casus belli existed against Mexico and that our Nation should engage in war with our sister republic; but the patience and forbearance and broad statesmanship of the President of the United States led us into peaceful paths, and there is to be credited to the President and to his wise diplomacy and his Christian forbearance a great moral victory, the result of which will unite in the bonds of friendly amity this Republic and the Republic of Mexico.

It has been known for a number of years that efforts have been made to excite the hostility of the people of the United States against Japan and to provoke the anger of the Japanese against this Republic. It has not been known to all the source of the numerous publications tending to embitter the American people against our allies across the Pacific. Senators will recall that certain newspapers published in the United States have exhibited from time to time a bitterness against Japan that was wholly unjustifiable, and indicated to dispassionate observers that honest journalism did not prompt the publication. I think we will soon have conclusive evidence that German gold and German intrigues led to these publications. It is time all Americans should know the true character of the Prussian military power with which we are at war. They should understand we have a foe unscrupulous, cruel, treacherous, and possessed of a mad ambition to rule by the law of force the civilized world. To preserve our liberties and to transmit to posterity a world in which freedom and justice can survive is the stupendous task to which this Nation has consecrated itself.

Mr. President, I desire to place in the RECORD at this time some evidences of the activities of Germany corroborative of the statements which I have made. Germany has expended large sums of money in this country for the purpose of influencing the press and the American people; and there is evidence that Austria, too, has been involved in the same character of intrigues and conspiracies as those in which Germany participated.

I might say in passing that the relations between our Government and Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey are of an anomalous character. Technically we are at peace with these nations, but it is now reported that Austria is sending troops to the western front, where they will soon be employed against the armed forces of this Republic; and Turkey has soldiers with the Austrian forces fighting to turn back the valorous Italians, led by one of the greatest military geniuses of the war—Gen. Cadorna. Austria is fighting against our ally, Italy, and Italy is gallantly struggling against Germany and Austria and the forces which are arrayed against this Republic. Indirectly, if not directly, Austria, Turkey, and Bulgaria are at war with the United States; they are aiding Germany, and to that extent are opposing us. Whatever contribution they made to Germany's success is a blow against this Nation.

The German Emperor is now hastening to Bulgaria and Austria and Turkey to secure aid and support from them and bring about greater unity of effort in order that he may hurl additional forces against the western front, and to be more strongly fortified to meet the American troops when they shall join with our allies in an effort to drive the German forces from France and Belgium. Therefore Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey become our foes, and the support they give to Germany is force used against us. This peculiar situation can not long continue; and, in my opinion, the day is not far distant when we will be compelled to recognize a state of war between this country and the Imperial Kingdom of Austria and the Kingdoms of Bulgaria and Turkey. We will not be able longer to treat them as friends, but will be constrained to regard them as enemies who are aiding the powerful and implacable foe with whom we are at war.

But I did not arise, Mr. President, for the purpose of entering into a discussion of our relations with the central powers. I intended only to call attention to a number of interesting documents, photographic copies of which I have, which throw some light upon the activities of Germany and Austria in this country.

I have here a photographic copy of a check that was drawn upon the Riggs National Bank of this city for the sum of $2,000, dated April 16, 1915, and made payable to the "Printing and Publishing Co.," a company that was publishing a newspaper called "Fair Play" in the United States. Across the left margin of the check are printed the words "German Embassy, Washington," and the check is signed by Z. Schmid. It is indorsed as follows: "Printing and Publishing Co., Fair Play Printing and Publishing Co. (Inc.), J. P. Bryan." Doubtless the money was obtained upon that check, as the copy shows that the original was paid by the bank. The following is a true copy of the check with the indorsements thereon:

No. 1326. GERMAN EMBASSY, Washington, D. C., April 16, 1915.
The Riggs National Bank. Pay to the order of Printing & Publishing Co., two thousand dollars.
J. SCHMID.
(Indorsed on back:) Printing & Publishing Co. Fair Play Printing & Publishing Co. (Inc.). J. P. Bryan.

I have here a photographic copy of the receipt given by the manager of the paper, which is as follows:

Received $1,500 (one thousand five hundred dollars) from German Embassy, Washington. Washington, D. C., May 3, 1915.

MARCUS BRAUN.

I have here, Mr. President, a photographic copy of a letter acknowledging receipt of check for $1,000. It reads as follows:

MARCUS BRAUN,
EDITOR OF FAIR PLAY, N. Y.,
New York, April 20, 1915.

His Excellency COUNT VON BERNSTORFF,
German Embassy, Washington, D. C.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your kind letter of the 16th instant, together with the inclosure of check for $1,000, etc., etc.

(Signed) MARCUS BRAUN.

And as a part of the instrument or document there are a number of German words evidently written by the German consular agent at New York, and it is countersigned by him, and the imperial seal of Germany is affixed thereto.

I have a photographic copy of a letter, dated New York, April 19, 1915, which reads as follows:

FAIR PLAY,
New York, April 19, 1915.

His Excellency Count JOHANN VON BERNSTORFF,
Imperial German Embassy, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are very pleased to acknowledge receipt of your check this morning for $2,000 and to thank you for the same, together with the other subscription of $1,000 given some time ago—

Evidently not the amount referred to in the receipt for $1,500 which I have just read—

Thanking you again, we are,
Yours, very truly,

FAIR PLAY,
Per J. P. BRYAN.

Upon this document and above the English words are a number of German words, which I shall not attempt to read, and below, as a part of the document, are found additional German words, indicating that the paper was filed with the embassy at Washington. It is countersigned by Prince von Hatzfeldt, who was imperial counsellor, and, as I understand, the secretary of the embassy, and to it is attached the imperial seal of Germany.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, will the Senator state what this Fair Play publication was or is?

Mr. KING. I only know from hearsay.

Mr. STONE. Has the Senator any familiarity with it or knowledge about it?

Mr. KING. Only limited information derived from hearsay.

Mr. STONE. I do not know anything about it, and I think Senators generally do not know. I thought the Senator might put into the RECORD, in connection with his statement, some definite information as to just what the publication was, or, if it is still in existence, what it now is.

Mr. KING. My information, Mr. President, is not very full in respect to that matter, and I am, therefore, unable to state more fully concerning the paper referred to.

Mr. President, I have here a photographic copy of a letter emanating from the Austro-Hungarian secretary, which is as follows:

[Copy.]

IMPERIAL AND ROYAL AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN EMBASSY,
Washington, January 10, 1916.

No. 32/11.
Subject: Illustrovani list.
To report from January 3, 1916.
No. 20152/Confidential.

To the IMPERIAL AND ROYAL CONSULATE GENERAL,
New York City:

With regard to the motives cited in the above report—

I have not the report—for the benefit of Mr. Radočaj the imperial and royal embassy feels to be induced to subsidize the "Ill. list" for February and March with $100 for each month. Should Mr. Radočaj not be able to become self-sustaining by April 1 the embassy would be eventually willing to advise him $100 per month up to July 1 of this year. Before, however, the latter circumstance would be known to Mr. Radočaj, corresponding inquiries should be made regarding his further results and his financial condition.

A further support of the "Ill. list" from April 1 should be possible on the ground that the plan for the fusion of the Croatian papers referred to is meeting with unexpected difficulties.

The imperial and royal chargé d'affaires,

E. ZWIEDINEK.

Mr. STONE. Is that a German?

Mr. KING. An Austrian. He was the Austrian chargé d'affaires, as I am advised.

Mr. President, I have a photographic copy of another communication from the imperial and royal vice consulate, signed by Ritzweidowski:

NEW YORK, N. Y., den 5. November 1915.

Telegram Codzienny.
Subvention.

AN DIE K. UND K. BOTSCHAFT,
Washington, D. C.:

Ich beehre mich zu berichten, dass die den Eigentümer des polnischen Blattes "Telegram Codzienny," W. Mazur, seinerzeit bewilligte Subvention von $700—demselben bereits zur Ganze ausgezahlt wurde.

Der "Telegram Codzienny" hat allen auf ihn gesetzten Erwartungen entsprochen. Das Blatt erscheint bereits im Umfange von 6 Druckseiten und in einer täglichen Auflage von 12,000 Exemplaren. Nachdem auch die Annoncenzahl grösser geworden ist, hat sich die finanzielle Lage des Blattes derart gebessert, dass es derzeit bereits auf einer soliden Basis ruht.

Das Blatt wird vom Eigentümer W. Mazur mit grosser Umsicht redigiert, weshalb sein politischer Einfluss sich sehr vergrössert. Zwei Konkurrenzblätter, die seitens der Russophilen gegründet wurden, sind beide eingegangen.

Der k. und k. Vizekonsul.

I also have a photographic copy of what purports to be a translation of the document just referred to. It reads as follows:

IMPERIAL AND ROYAL EMBASSY,
Washington, D. C.

I beg to inform you that the subsidy of $700 granted some time ago to the proprietor of the Polish paper Telegram Codzienny, W. Mazur, has already been paid to him in full.

Telegram Codzienny fulfilled all that has been expected of it. The paper is being printed at present on six pages and in 12,000 copies daily. As the number of advertisements has also increased, the financial condition of the paper improved so that it already has a solid foundation.

The paper is being published by the proprietor, W. Mazur, with great care, for which reason its political influence is becoming always greater. Two competition papers established by Russophiles both ceased to exist.

(Signed) THE IMPERIAL AND ROYAL VICE CONSULATE, RITZWEIDOWSKI

I have another photographic copy here, Mr. President, of a letter written by the representative of Austria, reading as follows:

LENOX, MASS., am 26. September 1913.

Rumaenische Zeitung "Desteapate Romane."
zum Bericht Z. 14470/res. vom 16. September 1915.
Check per $400.

AN DAS K. UND K. GENERALKONSULAT,
New York, N. Y.:

Mit Bezugnahme auf obigen Bericht erhält das k. und k. Generalkonsulat in der Anlage einen Scheck per $400 (vierhundert Dollars), mit dem Ersuchen die Quittung über den nachträglich erfolgten Betrag von $200 anher in Vorlage zu bringen.

Für die k. und k. Botschaft:

(Sgd.) E. ZWIEDINEK.

No. 146. Washington, D. C., September 27, 1915.

The Riggs National Bank.
Pay to Austro-Hungarian Consulate General in New York
Four Hundred Dollars

$400.

(Sgd.) E. ZWIEDINEK.

This letter was evidently translated into English by the imperial and royal embassy and signed by the Austrian chargé d'affairs.

The following is the translation made at the embassy and is transcribed verbatim from such photographic copy:

LENOX, MASS., Sept. 26, 1915.

Roumanian newspaper
"Desteapate Romane."
To report No. 14470/confidential.
From Sept 16th, 1915.
Check for $400.

TO THE IMPERIAL AND ROYAL CONSUL GENERAL,
New York, N. Y.:

In reference to the above report, the imperial and royal consulate general will please find enclosed a check for $400 (four hundred dollars), with the request to send here a receipt for the supplementary amount of $200.

FOR THE IMPERIAL AND ROYAL EMBASSY,
E. ZWIEDINEK.

I have a photographic copy of the check, which I have just called the attention of the Senate to.

Mr. President, I have here the English translation as well as the original—that is, a photographic copy of the original—and I ask that the photographic copy of the original be printed in the Record, and likewise the English translation of the documents to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that the photographic copies can not go into the Record. The action is a little hazy now in the mind of the Chair, but there was some action taken by the Joint Committee on Printing which prevents all sorts of illustrations going into the Record. Of that the Chair is quite sure.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not sure I can throw any light on it, but it seems to me that these photographic copies ought to be printed as the Senator has requested; and I think, as I remember, that the proper procedure is to have an order from the Committee on Printing. I think there is something of that kind, but I do not believe there will be any objection to it. It has been done in the past. Illustrations have been printed. It is possible in some way; I know that these should be printed just as the Senator has offered them, and I hope that will be done.

Mr. KING. If we had the originals, there is no question, it seems to me, but that they could be printed in the Record.

Mr. NORRIS. They could be printed, of course, as they are; there is not any doubt about that; but to get the illustration in as the Senator wants, and as I think he ought to have—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair remembers very well when the question came up. Who decided it, the Chair does not know, whether it was decided by action of the Senate or by action of the Joint Committee on Printing; but it came up when "Senator TILMAN'S COW" appeared in the Record, and there was a distinct order made that from that time forward nothing should appear in the Record except in print; that I know. But may the Chair suggest that these originals be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing so that they may be inserted, if possible, in the Record?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the order the Vice President mentions, made by the Senate at that time, was that in future no illustrations should be inserted in the Record without the consent of the Committee on Printing. It would probably require their consent.

Mr. KING. I am not quite sure what the order of the Vice President is. I can readily understand that there might be objection to printing illustrations, photographic copies of buildings, or intricate and complicated drawings that would involve considerable expense in the production of the necessary plates in order to produce them in the Record, but I am only asking, and I shall limit my request accordingly, that the text of the documents be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In ordinary type?

Mr. KING. In ordinary type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no question about the right to that, and that is granted. The Chair would be glad to see them printed exactly as they appear in the document; but the Chair is quite clearly of the opinion that there has been some ruling that that can not be done, at least without the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. KING. If the Chair is of that opinion, I shall not make the request broader than I have indicated; but I shall ask that after they have served the purpose just embodied in the request, these letters and documents then be referred to the Committee on Printing for such action as they may deem advisable in the premises.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 7 minutes P. M.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, September 24, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we worship Thee. The good things of this life come to us from no other hand than Thine, and our delight is in those who keep Thy commandments and who walk in Thy ways. Thou hast committed to us the task not only of preserving our own liberties but of passing on to future generations a world in which peace and righteousness and justice are permanently established. We pray that Thou wilt smile upon our undertakings, guiding us by Thine own unerring counsel to the completion of our task to the glory of Thy name and the benefit of all Thy people. For Christ's sake. Amen.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS IN ORDINANCE DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 111).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $1,429,500 for the employment of additional clerks and other employees in the Ordnance Department, War Department, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2477) to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLARK of Florida, Mr. BURNETT, and Mr. AUSTIN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5901) to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign Governments, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have several telegrams protesting against the proposed 3 per cent tax on gross automobile sales. I understand it relates to a provision in the revenue bill, which is now in conference. There is no method by which such matters can be referred to a committee of conference, so I simply call the attention of the Senate to it. I do not ask to have the telegrams printed in the Record, but simply that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams will be so referred. Mr. JONES of Washington. I present also several telegrams urging that in the revenue bill provision be made under which quarterly or semiannual payments of excess profits taxes may be made over a period of not less than five years. I take this means of calling this matter to the attention of the conference committee. I present the telegrams for reference to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams will be so referred.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented petitions of Allentown Grange, No. 98, Patrons of Husbandry, of Allentown; of Egg Harbor Grange, No. 146, Patrons of Husbandry, of Egg Harbor City, and of Blue Anchor Lodge, No. 166, Patrons of Husbandry, of Blue Anchor, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure an adequate supply of nitrate of soda for agricultural purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Wapa, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the development of water power from the navigable streams and public lands of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

DRAINAGE IN NEW MEXICO AND TEXAS.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend funds in New Mexico and Texas for drainage purposes, reported it without amendment.

BIG SANDY RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 5335) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., authorized by an act approved January 28, 1916, and I submit a report (No. 133) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JULIA P. TURNER.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the Senate resolution 136, submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLLIER] on the 22d instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Julia P. Turner, widow of George M. Turner, late a folder in the folding room of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 2913) to prevent interstate commerce in timber products upon which labor has been permitted to work more than eight hours in any day, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

A bill (S. 2914) granting an increase of pension to Wilder Rice (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 2915) granting a pension to John Acton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A GERMAN GIRL'S LETTER.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have a brief editorial recently published in the Arkansas Gazette, embracing a letter or alleged letter from a Prussian girl to a friend, giving the viewpoint of the people of Germany concerning the superiority of Prussia over other peoples. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

THE LETTER OF A PRUSSIAN GIRL.

"Katie Hamel is a young Prussian woman, possibly still a schoolgirl, and is the daughter of the State councilor of architecture. She wrote a letter a year ago to a friend in Switzerland, and this remarkable epistle, which was first published in the Edinburgh Scotsman, is republished here:

"FRANKFORT ON ODER, July 20, 1916.

"MY DEAR LOUISE: The contents of your last letter would have hurt me had I not known that your thoughts of our glorious war resulted from sheer ignorance.

"You are in a country rendered effeminate by the influence of old-fashioned ideas of liberty, a country which is at least two centuries behind ours. You are in need of a good dose of Prussian culture.

"It is evident that you, a Swiss girl, with your French sympathies, can not understand how my heart, the heart of a young German girl, passionately desired this war. Speaking of it some years ago, my father said to us: 'Children, Germany is getting too small for us, we shall have to go to France again in order to find more room.' Is it our fault if France will not understand that more money and land are necessary for us?

"And you reproach us that our soldiers have been very cruel to the Belgian rabble, and you speak also of the destruction of Rheims, and of the burning of villages and towns. Well, that is war. As in every other undertaking, we are past masters in the making of war.

"You have a great deal to learn before you can come up to our standard, and I can assure you that what has been done so far is a mere bagatelle compared with what will follow.

"As a matter of fact, there is but one race worthy of ruling the world, and which has already attained the highest degree of civilization. That race is ours, the Prussians; for though we Germans in general are the lords of the world, the Prussian is undoubtedly the lord par excellence among the Germans.

"All other nations, and among them, unfortunately, the Swiss, are degenerate and of inferior worth. That is why I have always been so proud of being a true Prussian.

"Yesterday, again, our pastor explained to us convincingly that our first parents, Adam and Eve, were also Prussian. That is quite easy to understand, because the Bible tells us that the German God created us all after his own image. If, then, all men are descended from Adam and his wife, it follows that only Prussians, or at least Germans, ought to exist in the world, and that all who push on and prosper ought to belong to us. You must admit that that is logic, and that is why our motto is, 'God with us, Germany above everything.'

"You know now why we wished this war. Is it not shameful that other nations, who have no right to existence on the earth, wish to diminish our heritage? We are the divine fruit and the others are only weeds. That is why our great emperor has decided to put an end to all these injustices and to extirpate the weeds. Do you understand that now?

"I remain, your school friend,

"KATIE HAMEL."

"It is probable that the Swiss would not agree that their country is in need of 'a good dose of Prussian culture,' because they have before their eyes the dose that Belgium got. The heart of this Prussian girl 'passionately desired this war.' That is of interest in connection with the formula which so many Americans would fain believe, that 'we are not making war on the German people.' So Katie Hamel's father, who is a Government official, told his children some years before the war broke out that Germany was getting too small and that 'we shall have to go to France again in order to find more room.' But Emperor William continually says that 'the war was forced upon us' and this is echoed by the bureaucratic parrots. Yes, Switzerland—and other nations—have 'a great deal to learn' before they can come up to the Prussian standard. They will have to learn to torpedo passenger ships without warning and send to graves in the ocean a thousand men, women, and children. They will have to learn to destroy cathedrals, to drop bombs on women and children, and to kill wounded men in hospitals.

"We feel safe in saying that Katie Hamel is a sweet, amiable, well-mannered girl. But she has absorbed and she breathes forth the Prussian spirit of ruthlessness and frightfulness. She expresses, in the gentle words one might expect to find in a young girl's letter, the remorseless creed that Nietzsche wrote for Germany. She has come under the spell of the monomania that Germany has a divine commission to conquer and dominate the world."

LEASE OF POTASH LANDS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2156) to authorize exploration for and disposition of potassium, which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "grant" and insert "issue"; on page 1, line 9, after "right," to insert "for a period not exceeding two years"; on page 1, line 11, to strike out "San Bernardino County, Cal., for a period of not exceeding two years" and insert "and adjacent to Searles Lake, which would be described if surveyed as townships 24, 25, 26, and 27 south of ranges 42, 43, and 44 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California"; on page 2, line 2, after "one," to insert "or more"; on page 2, in lines 5 and 6, to strike out "640 acres" and insert "not to exceed one-fourth"; on page 3, line 9, to strike out "50-year" and insert "20-year"; on page 3, line 14, after "lessee," to strike out all down to and including "terms" in line 17 and insert "Provided, That the potash deposits in the public lands in and adjacent to Searles Lake in what would be if surveyed townships 24, 25, 26, and 27 south of ranges 42, 43, and 44 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, may be operated by the United States or may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior under the terms and provisions of this act: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may issue leases under the provisions of this act for deposits of potash in public lands in Sweetwater County, Wyo., also containing deposits of coal, on condition that the coal be reserved to the United States"; on page 3, line 20, to strike out "grant" and insert "issue"; on page 4, line 18, after "hereof," to insert "or otherwise"; on page 4, line 23, after "any," to insert "other"; on page 5, line 5, to strike out "any court of competent jurisdiction" and insert "the United States district court for the district in which the property or some part thereof is located"; on page 5, line 9, after "Sec. 6," to insert "That any permit, lease, occupation, or use permitted under this act shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to permit for joint or several use such easements or rights of way upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same, or of other lands containing the deposits described in this act, and the treatment and shipment of the products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees, or permittees, and for other public purposes: Provided,"; on page 6, line 1, to strike out "a court of competent jurisdiction" and insert "the United States district court for the district in which the property or some part thereof is located"; on page 6, line 3, after "lease," to insert "or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease"; on page 6, line 5, after "thereof," to strike out all down to and including "courts" in line 8; on page 6, line 9, after "shall," to insert "also"; on page 6, line 10, after "all," to insert "deposits of potassium salts in the"; on page 6, line 12, after "potassium," to insert "deposits"; on page 6, line 16, after "Sec. 10," to strike out all down to and including "act" in line 24 and insert "That all moneys received from royalties and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, but after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, 50 per cent of the amounts derived from such royalties and rentals so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools"; on page 7, line 5, after "Sec. 12," to strike out all down to and including "act" in line 15 and insert "That the deposits herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals, shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee"; on page 7, line 19, to strike out "such" and insert "all"; on page 7, lines 23 and 24, to strike out "the product" and insert "any of such products"; on page 8, line 2, to strike out "such mineral" and insert "the potassium products."

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF MINING CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution

(S. J. Res. 78) to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. POINDEXTER conferees on the part of the Senate.

TRADING WITH ENEMY—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida desire to have the report read? It has been laid on the desks of Senators.

Mr. FLETCHER. The report has been printed, and I ask it be not read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading of the report?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We could not on this side hear the request of the Senator from Florida.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is that the report be not read, it having been laid on the desk of every Senator and printed in the Record. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is, Shall the report be agreed to?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish the attention of the Senate for a very few minutes in the consideration of this conference report. In my judgment, if the conference report is agreed to it places absolutely in the hands of the Postmaster General the power to discontinue the publication of every magazine and every newspaper in the United States, not only through the mails, but prohibits the circulation of such matters as do not meet his approval in any other way by any other means or any other instrumentality.

The so-called King amendment that was adopted in the Senate on this bill provided for certain regulations in regard to German newspapers. The conferees have revamped that amendment and made it apply to newspapers in a foreign language and added to it one or two provisions that it seems to me the Senate would not agree to if they understood it, at least in the same light that it appears to me. It is Senate amendment numbered 127. As printed in the Record, it is found on page 7322, commencing near the bottom of the left-hand column. It is section 19. The amendment is quite long. I do not know that I care to read all of the amendment, but over in the next column, where the amendment is continued, I wish to read.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator the date of the Record he is reading from?

Mr. NORRIS. September 22, 1917.

Mr. FLETCHER. On page 7 of the printed report.

Mr. McKELLAR. What part is the Senator reading?

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to commence near the top of page 7322.

I wish to explain, without reading the first part of the amendment, that it is to a certain extent the same as the King amendment which was adopted in the Senate. The conferees have broadened it somewhat. It provides how the publication of newspapers making any comment on our Government or any other Government on either side of the present war, making any comment in regard to anything in relation to the war or the act of any Government, must be printed in the English language as well as in the foreign language, and then it provides as follows:

Any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this section is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same, or to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage, approved June 15, 1917: Provided further, That upon evidence satisfactory to him that any print, newspaper, or publication printed in a foreign language may be printed, published, and distributed free from the foregoing restrictions and conditions without detriment to the United States in the conduct of the present war, the President may cause to be issued to the printers or publishers of such print, newspaper, or publication, a permit to print, publish, and circulate the issue or issues of their print, newspaper, or publication free from such restrictions and requirements, such permits to be subject to revocation at his discretion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand the Senator intended to read all the paragraph beginning "any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language," and as I followed him he omitted the clause to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me read it again. I did not intend to omit anything, I will say to the Senator, but the print is fine and the light is not very good. I will read it again:

Any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this section is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same, or to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage, approved June 15, 1917:

Mr. President, you will note from language which I have just read that not only is it unlawful to send such publications through the mails but that it is unlawful to use any other means of distribution such as sending them by express or by personal delivery or in any other way. The language to which I particularly object is this clause, which is contained in the matter I have just read:

Or to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage, approved June 15, 1917.

That applies to every newspaper and to every magazine which is printed in any language, the English language included. On the face of it, Mr. President, it does not look so bad as it really is and as it will in practical application work out. It shall be unlawful to distribute or carry or otherwise publish any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the espionage act. In practice that will mean, Senators, that the Postmaster General, arbitrarily, without giving any particular reason for his action, may exclude from the mails any newspaper which, in his judgment, ought to be excluded, and he can give as his reason that the publishers have violated the espionage act. Such publications will be excluded from the mails the moment the order is made, and there will be in practice no relief; no way in which the publisher of such a newspaper will ever be able to get any hearing at any time anywhere which will save the destruction of his business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am very much interested in what the Senator from Nebraska has stated. I desire to call his attention to section 3 of the espionage act, and to inquire whether or not the Senator believes that any serious hardship, indeed, any hardship at all, would be suffered by any fair and properly conducted newspaper from the enforcement of the provisions of this proposed legislation to which the Senator is now referring? Before replying will the Senator permit me to occupy the floor for a moment, in order to call his attention to section 3 of the espionage act?

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. KING. Section 3 of the espionage act provides:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements—

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator tell me from what title he is reading? There are a half dozen sections 3 in the act.

Mr. KING. I am reading from Title I, section 3. To resume:

SEC. 3. Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements, with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies, and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service or of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

The point I was about to make was that the section to which I have just called the Senator's attention makes certain acts whether performed by the publishers of newspapers or others offenses, and prescribes punishment for the same. Another section of the espionage act makes publications of the character to which I have just referred nonmailable: First, the publication of false reports with intent to interfere with military operations, and so forth, constitutes an offense; secondly, the attempt to mail such a publication is an offense, and the paper containing the denounced matter is made nonmailable. The conference report which the Senator is discussing provides that the distribution of the offending publication by any other instrumentality than the mail is an offense. If it is an offense to publish articles of the character referred to, which are defined as offenses in section 3, I submit the inquiry if such articles are made nonmailable, is there any sufficient reason why the Government should not interdict the distribution of the publications? If it is an offense to publish a certain thing which is calculated to prevent the success of military or naval operations, or to cause insubordination or mutiny in the military or naval forces of the United States, and such a publication is made nonmailable, why should not the Government go a little further and prohibit the circulation and dissemination of the newspaper by any other instrumentality, such as express companies, that might be selected by the publisher or any other person?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. NORRIS. I should like first to answer the question of the Senator from Utah, but I will yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely want to supplement what the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has said by calling his attention to the particular title headed "Use of mails" in the espionage act—Title XII, if the Senator will turn to that—and to ask him to read section 2 of that title, and to see if his inquiry does not obtain as well to that as to the portion of the act which he has read? Let me read section 2.

Mr. NORRIS. Section 2 of Title XII?

Mr. FLETCHER. Section 2 of Title XII, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter or thing, of any kind, containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, is hereby declared to be nonmailable.

I ask the Senator if he does not agree that such publications ought to be declared nonmailable, and that the prohibition ought to be enforced against the circulation and distribution of that sort of matter?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Florida have saved me the trouble of reading extracts from the espionage act which I intended to read, and I am very much obliged to them. On the face of it, it looks very reasonable, as the two Senators have pointed out from these two sections, and there are other sections in the espionage act which make such publications unlawful, and this would apply as well as those, but those illustrate it; they go far enough. I intended to read both those sections. The acts they prohibit ought to be punished, and the espionage act does punish them by fine and imprisonment and makes such publications nonmailable.

Let us see how the nonmailability of these publications will be carried out in actual practice. If there were no punishment fixed for the crimes that these sections define, then there would be some excuse for the provision contained in the conference report; but it is already provided in the espionage act that anyone guilty of such acts shall be punished by both fine and imprisonment. What happens? What is the modus operandi when the Postmaster General wants to exclude a newspaper from the mails? He issues an order; he excludes it; there is not any trial before a court or a jury. In effect, he charges the publishers with a crime, because they must be guilty of a crime or else their publications could not be excluded from the mails; but, contrary to all jurisprudence of every civilized country, instead of trying them for the crime, which he ought to do and for which they ought to be punished if they are guilty, he takes away their business before there is a trial; the newspaper or the magazine is excluded on the ipse dixit of the Postmaster General, and there is no way for the man who is publishing a newspaper to maintain himself until he can get, if he ever can get, an adjudication of what is charged against him. He may claim that he has not violated the law; he may say, "I am innocent of any violation of the law," but his newspaper is excluded from the mails. In the meantime he resorts to other means to keep on its feet a business to which perhaps he has given his life; he uses other means of circulation, but every time he does so, no matter what means he uses, if he has committed a crime he is liable not only to pay a fine but to go to prison I think for as long a time as 10 years.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment. But the provision to which I am objecting to here does not permit him even to do that. Under it his business is gone. Every man knows that when a newspaper is put out of business for two or three months, while the publisher of that newspaper may be seeking an adjudication of his right to remain in business, he is out of business for good.

If, as I have heretofore said, his act was not made a crime and no provision was made for its punishment, there might be some reason for this desperate method of putting a newspaper out of business, but when the law provides that when he does any of the acts enumerated in the sections of the espionage act referred to—and there are also several other sections bearing on the same matter—he must go to jail or to the penitentiary and must pay a fine, it seems to me that we ought not to prohibit the man, which we do in effect if we adopt this proposition, from ever having a day in court until the day in court will do him no good. Now I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator's argument, I submit, is largely directed against the provisions of the espionage act.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it is not.

Mr. FLETCHER. That act partially covers the matter and imposes the hardships to which the Senator refers.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator must not misquote me; the Senator is wrong. I voted against the espionage act. I think there are lots of bad things in it, but it is a law now, and it is all right to enforce it, and I am not opposed to anybody honestly and fairly enforcing it; but let me submit to the Senator that when a man has violated the espionage act, then why not try him, as the law provides, before a judge and in a court, to determine whether or not he is guilty when the charge is made that he has violated that act? This provision goes further and says: "You shall not keep up your business while you are endeavoring to secure a trial, but you have got to quit now; you will have no means of maintaining your paper." If the omission of such a provision from the espionage act permitted a man to do anything contrary to the law, I would not be here contending against it, but all the time the law is in force. While he is distributing his paper by express or through delivery boys or by any other means that he may employ, expensive though it may be, all the time he has the law over him, and if in any way he violates it he must go to prison and must pay a fine. That is right; that is the law now; but this provision says he shall not even be allowed to try to maintain his business while he is making what I can conceive to be an honest attempt to secure vindication when he is not guilty of any crime against the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the espionage act endeavors to reach this evil by forbidding the use of the mails for the circulation and distribution of this kind of material, nonmailable matter, and it punishes the offender for the use of the mails in violation of the act. Now, this provision does go further. I am perfectly frank to admit that it is intended by this provision to prevent the distribution of the material denounced in that act by any other means than by the use of the mails—that is, matter printed in foreign languages without a corresponding certificate, and so forth, as required by this act and the material declared to be nonmailable by the espionage act. It is intended to stop the distribution of that sort of material in any manner, not only through the mails but in any other way. I submit to the Senator that, whereas there may be a hardship occasionally such as he suggests in enforcing the act, inasmuch as the Postmaster General can prohibit the use of the mails to newspapers under the espionage act, this does not enlarge or increase that hardship to any extent. It simply says that that same unlawful material, illegitimate material, nonmailable material, shall not be distributed by express companies or through any other agency, because it is the material itself which is harmful, its distribution and its publication, and not merely the use of the mails. Forbidding it the use of the mails is merely a means of preventing the injury which would be caused and the evil effects of distribution.

Now, this provision proposes not only to continue the operation of the espionage act forbidding the use of the mails, but also proposes to forbid any other method of distribution of that offensive, seditious, nonmailable material denounced by the law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is no dispute between the Senator and myself as to what the particular language to which I am objecting does, and there is no dispute that it does what the Senator says it is intended to do. My objection to it is that it will do that upon the simple order of the Postmaster General that a publisher has committed a crime. He may be as innocent as an unborn child of any crime, but he is put out of business. The criminal character of the act is fixed in the espionage law; we do not change that; I am not asking to change that; that is the law. This provision is directed at a man's business. It simply puts the man out of business without a hearing, whether he is guilty or whether he is innocent; that is the practical effect of it. There is no means of trial afforded, as there is under the espionage act. Under that act a man can be tried, and he ought to be tried and convicted, if he is guilty. I am not trying to shield any man who is guilty; that is not my purpose; but I am trying to protect the innocent man; I am trying to protect the press of the country from an arbitrary order of the Postmaster General, who, without reason, without evidence, without anything but his own will, can put every newspaper and every publication in the United States out of business. Heretofore, without this provision, he could go quite a long way, but the man who is put out of business could continue in his own way, expensive and hard though it might be, to keep his newspaper or his magazine in print and deliver it, through some expensive means of his own, until he could secure some judicial determination of the question.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment.

Another reason why it seems to me that this is not a proper thing to do is that the Postmaster General, as I understand, has already under the espionage act put out of business some 38 or 40 newspapers. With the exception of one or two copies that I have seen, I have no knowledge as to whether or not his action was just, but he put them out of circulation. I know that in some instances the claim is made that not a single statute or law of the United States has been violated. The Postmaster General has never in an instance, so far as I have ever heard, had one of those men arrested for the violation of the espionage act; and yet, if his order putting them out of business is based on fact, every one of them is guilty of a crime and ought to be sent to the penitentiary. The means now provided do not seem to be sufficient for the Postmaster General to carry out the purpose desired. Evidently—I can not come to any other conclusion—he fears that he can not successfully prosecute these men, and I can not resist the conclusion that in many instances he himself does not believe they have committed a crime; but the only reason he can give for putting them out of business under the espionage act is to say that they have violated its terms. If they have violated its terms, they are guilty of a crime. If the Postmaster General has always acted in these matters in the best of faith, why is it that these men are not arrested and sent to prison?

I can easily see how a man publishing a newspaper might say something that was very displeasing to the administration. He might go a good way, probably, in criticizing it, and it might be claimed by the Postmaster General that in the extent of his argument, the distance he had gone in his criticism of the administration, he had violated the law; and the man who published the paper might, on the other hand, be just as honest in his belief that he had not violated the law. Now, that is the kind of a man who ought to be protected, it seems to me. At least, he ought to have a day in court for a hearing before the business of a lifetime is thrust aside and made worthless.

But what happens? The Postmaster General puts the man's newspaper or his magazine out of business. The man says, "Well, I will get back in time. I will get into court. It will take me some time; it will cost me lots of money, and in the meantime, in order that my publication may be worth something when I get through, I must deliver the publication to my subscribers"; and he delivers it through the express to the various cities and places where he has subscribers and hires men or boys at those places to distribute it, to carry it on in the meantime. All the time during that time, if he has violated the law, he can be sent to the penitentiary just the same. He has always got that staring him in the face, as every man has. If he violates the law, he can be punished, and he ought to be punished. But now comes this amendment and says that when you have that kind of a man in that kind of a position, you will make it illegal for him to deliver his newspaper in an automobile; you will make it illegal for him to send it by express; you will make it illegal for him to have it delivered by newsboys; and every newsboy or every man who handles it is liable to be sent to jail and to pay a fine.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. RANSDELL. I want to ask the Senator what law would be violated if a man were to publish a newspaper that was declared to be nonmailable and not allowed the use of the mails and were to distribute that paper through the aid of newsboys or by the express office or by messengers of any kind other than the mail? What law would be violated? Will the Senator kindly point out the statute?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the espionage act.

Mr. RANSDELL. Where? What feature of it?

Mr. NORRIS. The section that the Senator from Utah read, and several other Senators.

Mr. RANDELL. I beg pardon; I do not so understand that. Perhaps I am wrong. The one which we were just discussing here, section 2 of Title XII, reads in this way—

Mr. NORRIS. That is the one that the Senator from Utah read.

Mr. RANDELL. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] read that. The Senator from Utah read another.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. RANDELL. Let us see.

Mr. NORRIS. It is section 3 of Title I.

Mr. RANDELL. Section 3 of paragraph 1:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service or of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

Mr. NORRIS. Now the Senator has answered his own question. He will be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for 20 years, or both fine and imprisonment. It does not make any difference how he is distributing it. Why, Mr. President, if the particular provision that we are talking about here goes into the law, it does not apply only to newspapers, it does not apply only to magazines that heretofore have circulated through the mails. It applies to a poster or a bill; it applies to the speech that the Senator from Louisiana, or any other Senator, may make on the floor of the Senate; and if this goes into effect, the Postmaster General could make it illegal for him to take a copy of that speech home and deliver it to his own wife!

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will allow me to pursue my inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. RANDELL. Section 3 of paragraph 1 relates to false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military forces of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. RANDELL. Now, the section 2 referred to in the bill under discussion is evidently section 2 of Title XII. That relates to any publication, matter, or thing of any kind containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. RANDELL. It is very different from the other. You might urge insurrection and not, as I construe the law, come under this section.

I want to ask the Senator this question: If a publication urges insurrection, treason, or forcible resistance to any law, does the Senator from Nebraska think a publication of that kind ought to be distributed in any way, shape, or form?

Mr. NORRIS. No, no; I have not said so. I do not claim so.

Mr. RANDELL. I understood that from the Senator's argument.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Senator can not get that understanding from anything I said.

Mr. RANDELL. I know that the Senator is a patriotic man, and I could not believe that he intended to convey any such impression as that.

Mr. NORRIS. No. Now let me reply to the Senator's question, that I said had been answered by reading the extract from the espionage act. He asked me this question: Suppose the publication is excluded from the mails and the publisher resorts to the express to distribute it, what law would he be violating? I said he would be violating the same law.

Mr. RANDELL. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator read section 3 of Title I of the espionage act, and, as I said, that answered his own question. It does not have to go through the mails.

Mr. RANDELL. I do not understand—

Mr. NORRIS. This applies to the same section that the Senator from Utah read. This particular amendment does not apply only to section 2 of Title XII of the espionage act.

Mr. RANDELL. I admit that.

Mr. NORRIS. It applies to the whole espionage act.

Mr. RANDELL. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. And there are other provisions in it besides those that have been read that would be violated.

Mr. RANDELL. That is absolutely true; it applies to the whole espionage act; but I do not know any provision of the espionage act that would comprehend the case which I cited to the Senator. Now, perhaps section 2 of Title I has that effect. I do not so construe it. I think it is necessary to put in the provision which we have here in order to protect the patriotic people of this country against the unlawful, or certainly wrongful, dissemination of these insurrectionary and treasonable utterances other than by the mail. Now they can be sent by express; they can be sent by newsboys; they can be sent by men hired to distribute them in big centers of population. A great deal of harm might be done by such publications, and never reach the mails, and it is that which we are seeking to avoid and to overcome in this act.

Mr. NORRIS. Still the Senator does not seem to get the idea about which he asked me a specific question, and I want to ask him now if the section that he has read does not answer his specific question? I want to ask him now if I was not right when I said that while the man was excluded from the mails with his publication, and was distributing it through the express office, he was liable under the same act as though he distributed it through the mails, and could be punished and sent to prison for 20 years and would have to pay a fine of $10,000?

Mr. RANDELL. This section applies to making or conveying false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, yes.

Mr. RANDELL. There might not be any false statement, there might not be any misrepresentation, and at the same time the article might teach treason; it might advocate treason; it might advocate insurrection. It might do all those things and yet not make any false statement or false report of any kind as set forth in section 3 of paragraph 1.

I can understand that the publication might be very vicious and yet not come under the terms of section 3. Perhaps I am obtuse, but that is my understanding of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Louisiana ought to have a joint discussion on that proposition, because the Senator from Utah, I think very properly, called my attention to the particular section to which I called the Senator's attention, and he asked me whether I did not think anybody that was guilty of that ought to be punished. I frankly said "yes," and the law itself provides for a punishment. Why should they not be punished? Why are they not punished if they are guilty of a violation of that statute? And if the sending of a newspaper through the mails is a violation of that statute—which the Senator from Utah believes, and I do, and I think the Senator from Louisiana will when he thinks about it—if that is a violation of that statute, then the sending of the same newspaper through the express will likewise be a violation of that statute.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, the Senator does not seem to draw a distinction between the spoken and the printed word. Section 3 refers to the spoken word, and, of course, it might refer also to the printed word; but when a man conveys false reports or makes false statements you do not have to print them in any shape or form to come under the provisions of section 3. You might say that in a speech which would not be printed, and yet several thousand people might hear your speech.

You might tell Tom, and he would tell Bill, and Bill would tell John, and so on, and this report would be carried around and do an immense amount of harm without ever getting it printed, and all of that would come under section 3. It is altogether a different proposition from the printed word, which is covered and intended to be covered by section 2 of Title XII. One is entirely different from the other. They answer different purposes, and are intended to answer different purposes. Now, I ask the Senator, if they were not intended to be different, why are they both put in here?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not said they were the same. The Senator is misconstruing me again. I do not claim that they are the same. I know they are not the same. Now, I want to read again section 3, which the Senator from Utah so kindly read:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies; and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service or of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

It does not make any difference whether he does it by word of mouth, whether he does it by letter, whether he does it by newspaper, whether he does it by a magazine, or whether he does it by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It does not make any difference whether it goes through the mails or whether it is distributed by express. It does not make any difference whether it is second-class matter or whether it is delivered in an automobile by the man who uttered or wrote the words. It is a crime just the same, and he can be punished for it. Those who are favoring the particular provision to which I am objecting seem to go on the theory that those things are not crimes now; that they can not be punished now; and that the only way to reach them is to give to the Postmaster General authority to say, arbitrarily, "This newspaper shall not be published; it shall not circulate through the mails," and when he does say so, that this provision says "neither shall it be distributed in any other way." If that were done in regard to a newspaper, if you handed me a copy of it you would be liable to 20 years' imprisonment in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of $10,000.

Now, Mr. President—

Mr. KING. Mr. President, whenever there is a convenient place, I should be glad if the Senator would yield to me.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; I would just as lief yield now.

Mr. KING. I want to put a concrete case to the Senator from Nebraska. To see just how far he thinks this legislation goes.

Take a case of this character: There is an act of Congress, as I recall, that prohibits the transmission through the mails of obscene, lewd, lascivious, and blasphemous publications. Some of the States have statutes making it an offense to circulate or distribute obscene literature or publications by any means whatever, so that if one should hand the publication to another, or if he should send it by express, such act would be an infraction of the statute enacted under the police power of the State. These same States, as far as I know, also have statutes making it an offense to publish or print obscene, lascivious, and blasphemous articles. They do not content themselves with denominating the printing and publication a crime, but they make it a crime to circulate or distribute it, to hand it from one person to another or to send it through an express company. Does the Senator think that because it is made a crime to print or publish the obscene matter that the States ought not to go further and that they ought not to endeavor to prevent the distribution of the same, though in so doing it is declared to be an offense to circulate or distribute the same?

Now, if that is legitimate and proper legislation—and it seems to me no one can complain about that legislation—

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would let me answer the question he has asked. He is going to ask so many that I fear I will forget his first question. Will he let me answer the one he has just asked?

Mr. KING. I am trespassing upon the Senator's time, and of course—

Mr. NORRIS. No; I am glad to have the interruption. It always enlightens, and I am not objecting at all. I should like to answer that question, however, and then I will yield again to the Senator if he wants me to.

The Senator asks whether I think the distribution ought to be made a crime, and I answer, to be sure it ought to be made a crime. He says there are many States that make it a crime. Let us see, when I offend against the law, what happens to me. I am arrested. I am tried before a court and before a jury, and I may claim to be innocent. I may be innocent. I can imagine that a man is not always guilty of a crime because he is charged with a crime, and I have my day in court. If I am found guilty, I am punished. I say, yes; I want that kind of a law; and if you came in here with a law—which would not be necessary, because we already have it—and said that if I distributed seditious or treasonable literature by the express company or by the use of an automobile or any other method I should be punished, I should say "Amen" to that. But when I do it, when you claim I have violated the law, you have to bring me before a court, and I have my day in court before I am condemned. You may charge me with a crime when I am innocent. I do not think the Senator from Utah would do that, but I would not even intrust him with the arbitrary authority to say in advance, "This man has committed a crime; therefore his business shall cease." If there were a provision here for a hearing, if there were some provision by which these men could have an opportunity to be heard in their own defense, you would not hear me objecting to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. But in effect they have that privilege taken away from them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield first to the Senator from Utah, who was not quite through.

Mr. KING. It occurs to me, if the Senator will allow me, that when he concedes that legislation of that character is proper, that men may be and should be punished for distributing a lewd, lascivious, obscene, and blasphemous article or publication, he justifies this legislation, which he is now criticizing, because it merely provides that if there shall be publications of the character denounced in the espionage act, and the publication of which is an offense, they shall not be distributed, or the act of distribution shall constitute a crime. It seems to me, if I properly interpret the Senator's position, he must admit that it would be consistent and rational legislation for Congress to go further and say, "We have made it a crime to publish certain treasonable matter and have made the same nonmailable; we will proceed further and say that if such publications are distributed we will enact laws that those who distribute them, if done with knowledge, shall be guilty of an offense."

Mr. NORRIS. Let me answer that.

Mr. KING. And by way of illustration, just as it might be an offense to publish an obscene book it might consistently and properly be made a wrong and an offense for a person to circulate the same, knowing it to be obscene, whether among his friends or among his enemies.

Mr. NORRIS. Taking the Senator's own words, he will not be in dispute with me. He says it is not wrong to make it a crime. My dear sir, it is now a crime to do that very thing. It is already a crime. If you want to enact it over again and make it a crime again, I will not object to that; but the particular clause I am objecting to does try a man in advance. It does not add to the criminal part of it; that is left as it is now; but it simply says you shall not do business when the charge is made. It does not wait to see whether he is guilty or innocent. The case the Senator puts is already in the law. To distribute these things among your friends or your enemies that contains treasonable matter is a violation of law now, for which anyone guilty of it after he has been found guilty in the legal tribunals of the country would be sent to the penitentiary for 20 years. That is all right, but this does not add a criminal provision. It does not make a thing a crime that is not already a crime. It simply interferes with a man's right to have a trial, and although he may never be tried, as soon as he is charged by the Postmaster General, he has, in effect, to cease business; that is all.

Mr. KING. Let me see if I understand the Senator from Nebraska. As I understand the Senator's last statement it is to this effect. He does not object to the Government of the United States or Congress making certain acts referred to in the espionage law crimes. He does not object to Congress passing a law stating that if a man shall publish something that is treasonable he shall be guilty of an offense. He does not object to Congress enacting a law that the treasonable publication shall be nonmailable. But he does object, as I understand him, to Congress going further and saying that while the publication of such matter is an offense, and it is therefore not mailable and that legislation is proper, he does not think Congress should prohibit the distribution by other instrumentalities than the mail of those publications which are treasonable, and the publishing of which is made a crime.

Mr. NORRIS. No; that is not the point I make at all. The facts are that everything that the Senator propounds as being illegal is illegal now. I am objecting to an ipse dixit of the Postmaster General that shall put a man out of business without a trial.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. NORRIS. Let me go along further on that point. As I have said twice already, so that the answer may not be misunderstood let me say again, when the publisher has been denied the mails and the man resorts to any other means to distribute his paper he is liable to the same law absolutely and to the same punishment if he violates the law. In every one of the cases the Senator has put he presupposes that a man has been guilty of a crime and that he has violated the law. Whenever that is true I have no objection to almost any punishment that you have a mind to provide by statute. But I do claim and I do think that it is a fundamental principle of common, ordinary justice, much more a fundamental principle of American jurisprudence, that before any man should be ruined, put out of business, he should have a trial. If this provision had in it anything that would give the man a trial, I would not object to it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Washington tried to interrupt me a while ago, and I yield first to him.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand the Senator from Nebraska contends that this objectionable matter can not now be circulated by private means without violating the law; in other words, this objectionable matter may be declared nonmailable by the Postmaster General and excluded from the mails under the present law. Also the Senator from Nebraska says it may be kept from circulation by the prosecution of anyone trying to circulate it, through messengers or otherwise.

I should like to know from the Senator from Nebraska what this conference report adds to that situation if his construction of the existing law is correct. I add this to my question, that the conference report he objects to does not provide that matter declared nonmailable by the Postmaster General shall not be circulated by other means. That is not what the conference report says, but it says that matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage shall not be circulated by other means. So it is not the ipse dixit of the Postmaster General, as I understand it, but the question is to be determined by a court.

Mr. NORRIS. Who is to decide it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The court before whom it is presented. Mr. NORRIS. If that was correct, I would not be objecting to this language; but the Senator can not possibly, as I understand it, put that construction on it. This is the language:

or to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage, approved June 15, 1917.

In that act "every letter, writing, circular, post card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind" in violation of any of the provisions of the act is declared to be nonmailable.

Now, let us take a case. Who is going to say it is nonmailable except the Postmaster General? That is what he has already said in the newspaper he has put out of business. He said, "You have violated the espionage act. You can not be admitted to the United States mails." That is the decree of the Postmaster General.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If I may interrupt the Senator just at that point—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will agree with the Senator if the conference report said any matter excluded from the mail by the Postmaster General should not be circulated in any other way. Then the man's guilt would be established by the ipse dixit of the Postmaster General. But it does not say that. Every criminal act has to be strictly construed. No court can convict a man unless upon the strictest construction of the criminal statutes he is found to be guilty. When the law says that the offense consists in circulating matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the espionage act, then the court is compelled to establish, and there is no court in the United States that would not, before it finds a man guilty, establish beyond reasonable doubt that the matter was nonmailable by the provisions of the espionage act.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. An express company to which was tendered a publication to be carried to a distant point that the Postmaster General had held to be nonmailable would not be bound by the decision of the official named, and must receive it or fail to receive it at its own risk, and if it should refuse to receive it for transmission, when it should do so under the law, it is quite likely an action for damages could be maintained against it by the person tendering the publication.

Mr. NORRIS. You can rest assured the express company will not receive it if the Postmaster General has excluded it from the mails. In that case you can rest assured that you will not get anybody else to distribute it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I suggest that that situation exists now. The reluctance of the express company or agent of any kind to distribute matter would not be increased by this act, because the Postmaster General already has power to exclude the matter from the mails. If his exclusion of it prevents an express company from accepting it for transportation, or an agent or messenger from distributing it, that is the result of the espionage act, the act of June 15, 1917, and not the result of the pending act.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the result of this legislation will be to practically coerce every newspaper publisher in the United States who can be coerced. It will mean that the Postmaster General will say to a newspaper publisher, "You have violated the espionage act; your paper is excluded from the mails." He will see that he can not get into the mails to distribute his paper and he will find he can not distribute it anywhere else. As I understand it, the very object of this language is to do that very thing. As has been argued by the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Florida, that ought to be sufficient. If you assume to begin with that the man is guilty, then that is right, and there is no answer to that argument, and I am not trying to answer it as to a guilty man. But what would be the effect to say to one man you shall have the power to practically exclude from the mails and to exclude from circulation any magazine, any newspaper, any bill, anything that the man to whom is given the power says is a violation of the espionage act?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will permit an interruption, I wish to say that I am very much in sympathy with what he has said regarding the subject matter of the pending question. Amendment 1 of the Constitution of the United States is as follows:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

I thought we were going a long ways toward the abridgment of free speech and interfering to an almost unconstitutional degree, with the freedom of the press when the espionage bill was passed. I spoke against the section of the bill under consideration and I voted against it. It ought to have been defeated. But the Senate passed it by an overwhelming vote. It is now the law of the land, and I always endeavor to obey the law.

The Postmaster General under the terms of the espionage law is made practically the censor of the press. He is vested with the almost absolute power of excluding from the mail, or denying certain publications the privileges of the mail, if he believes they are not under the terms of the said law fit for publication. And he has not hesitated to exercise that power to the fullest extent. I think that some papers have been excluded from the mail that ought not to have been excluded. More harm will result from the exercise of such autocratic authority than could possibly result from the circulation of the censored periodical. A good deal has been said about the necessity of protecting the people against the pernicious effect of seditious publications or the unpatriotic utterances of certain newspapers. I do not in any way share the anxiety which honorable Senators manifest for the helpless people. I still have faith in the wisdom and the patriotism of the masses. I believe they are amply able to take care of themselves if permitted to do so. Really I think the people need protection against Congress quite as much as the Congress seems to think it is necessary to protect the Government against the lack of wisdom on the part of the people. Lack of confidence in the ability of the people to govern themselves is the foundation upon which autocracies are built. With all my heart I believe with Thomas Jefferson that a lie is impotent and harmless so long as truth is free to combat it. Those ripe old truths are well understood by Senators but I am sorry to say that they are not practiced very much in these abnormal times.

But coming back to the point the Senator is discussing. The provision to which the Senator objects in this report does not give the Postmaster General the power to exclude from the mail anything he has not already the power to exclude. It does not make anything unlawful that is not already unlawful. It simply prohibits the use of the express company, the freight, or any of the other instrumentalities of commerce for the distribution of something which the Postmaster General has declared ought not to be distributed or what the law provides should not be distributed through the mails.

The thing which the law seeks to deal with is seditious matter; to prevent the circulation or distribution of a newspaper whose columns were used for an unlawful purpose. The purpose of this legislation was not to protect the mail but, rather, to prevent the use of the mail to the injury of the man. Now, if the matter prohibited from passing through the mail was of such a nature that it should not go to the people through the medium of the Post Office Department it is equally dangerous to send it by the express company. I am not apprehensive myself about the bad effect of such publications upon the people, but the law has been written, and it becomes the duty of every patriotic citizen to obey the law. If it is a bad law, and I think it is, the best and quickest way to get rid of it is to enforce it.

I know the hardship it is going to work, and I do not approve the principle or the policy of such legislation and, in my judgment, nothing but harm will result from it. But Congress has declared it to be the law, the courts have upheld it, the Postmaster General, as I have said, has been given the power to judge whether a thing is right or wrong and whether it ought to be withheld from the people, and when he shall do that I do not see any reason why if he determines that it should not go through the Post Office Department it should be permitted to go by other means of transportation. I expressed opposition to this amendment in committee, but since I realize that it does not give to the Postmaster General or the censor, whoever he may be, any power that he did not already have, nor does it add anything to the present law except with reference to transmitting the newspapers through the mail I can not see why any special harm can result from it. Therefore I signed the report of the conference committee. If I could have my way about it I would not have any legislation of this character at all on the statute books. I do not think it correct in principle or safe in policy. If it does not violate the letter of the Constitution it most assuredly does violate the genius and the spirit of American institutions.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will allow me to proceed.

Mr. HUSTING. I merely wish to clear up something that the Senator from Mississippi said. I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator from Mississippi said—at least I understood him to say—that the purpose of this act was to make nonshippable that which the Postmaster General declared nonmailable. I do not understand it that way. If the Senator please, it seems to me it declares nonshippable, if I may use that term, not the things declared nonmailable by the Postmaster General, but the things declared nonmailable by the statute; and there is nothing in the enactment which makes the Postmaster General censor of the express company.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the statute makes the Postmaster General the officer who declares whether it is nonmailable or not.

Mr. HUSTING. Is not that only for the purpose of mail matter?

Mr. VARDAMAN. This refers to the statute. It is made nonmailable by order of the Postmaster General, and it is not nonmailable until the Postmaster General holds it so. The Postmaster General is the court that passes on the question first.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope I may be allowed to conclude. I would have concluded long ago had it not been for the interruptions.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought I was answering the Senator from Wisconsin with his permission.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's remarks are very illuminating, but I should like to finish. It will take me only a few moments. I want to refer to what the Senator from Mississippi has said. It seems to me he makes the same mistake that other Senators do in assuming always that the man charged is guilty. It is said that if a man is circulating through the mails newspapers containing treasonable utterances he ought to be punished, and he ought to be denied the use of the mails. I say amen. Then it is said such a man ought not to be allowed to distribute such utterances through any other means; and I am willing to agree to that; but we do disagree when it comes to the method of the ascertainment of that fact. If we are going to leave that to the Postmaster General, and the publisher is not to have the right to be heard anywhere in his own defense until it is too late to do his business any good, then, I say it is wrong; it is striking at the fundamental principle of a free press and of free speech—something that our forefathers thought so much of that they put a provision for its protection in the fundamental law of the land, in the first amendment, I believe, to the Constitution of the United States.

As the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] says, the people need protection, and we ought to give them protection by rejecting this conference report, for the reasons that I have pointed out. Never yet, Mr. President, in any great war where it was necessary to place in one man's hands an enormous power have rights thus taken away from the people and placed in the hands of one man, when the controversy was all over been restored to the people intact.

It seems to me it is something we want to guard with jealous care; it seems to me that the very fundamental principle of our Government is to a certain extent at issue here and now. Those who favor this proposition ask, if a man is printing treasonable matter should he not be punished just the same if he sends such matter through the express companies as though he sends it through the mail? Again I answer, yes; he should; and there is a law now on the statute books which thus punishes him; but he must be tried by a jury and in the court where he has an opportunity to be heard in his own defense. Whenever you place in an executive officer the right to decide in advance, the right to interfere with my speech or with your speech, and with this magazine and that magazine, you are striking at the very liberties of the people, something that our fathers and all of us have always contended we ought to keep inviolate.

What would it mean if one man had this wonderful power? What would be the condition of the newspapers and of the magazines of the country? Would not they all be more or less in a continual state of turmoil lest, even innocently, they might offend the censor, whose will was law, and whose dictum, in effect, gave the publishers no appeal and no right to be heard?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word or two with reference to some of the views which have been expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and others. The complaint of the Senator from Nebraska is to the effect that in the exercise of power on the part of the Postmaster General in excluding certain matter from the mails there is no chance on the part of the publisher to be heard; but this is a present evil, and there must be a remedy for it at once. Somewhere there must be the power to repress and prevent the evil. The evil is the sending through the mails of such publications, and they may be sent from day to day, from week to week, doing injury meanwhile, while the individual publisher waits six months or a year before he is heard and before it is determined whether or not he is guilty. So in a case of this kind there must be the power, which may be immediately exercised, to exclude from the mails.

Mr. President, in statute and in court decisions we have precedents and authority for a law like the one which is now proposed in the conference report. In the case of the sale of lottery tickets and of literature promoting lotteries we have an example of a law of this kind. The Postmaster General may exclude from the mails obscene literature. In both instances the Postmaster General is authorized to exclude from the mails, and there is no trial in advance in either case, but there may be a trial thereafter upon a charge duly made. So, with regard to matter intended to defraud, the mails can not be used for the promotion of schemes meant to defraud the public. The power, as I have said already, must reside somewhere to exclude from the mails such matter as will work injury to the morals or general welfare of the people.

There has been some confusion, I think, in regard to section 3 of Title I of the espionage act. First, however, before proceeding to that, I desire to call attention to section 2 of Title XII of that act, which provides:

SEC. 2. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States is hereby declared to be nonmailable.

The power must reside somewhere, as I said a while ago, and necessarily, in this case, in regard to whether matter is mailable or nonmailable, it must be with the Postmaster General. Should we allow treasonable matter, matter promoting insurrection, matter advising forcible resistance to law, to be still carried in the mails while we wait six months for the trial of the publisher to determine whether or not he is guilty, and that, too, when a war is on, the most desperate and dreadful that ever afflicted mankind? It seems to me that the contention is preposterous that there must be had a hearing and a trial before the Postmaster General shall have power to exclude such matter from the mails.

How does the conference report amendment read in this regard? I want to show now just what the relation is to section 3 of Title I of the espionage act. Remember, the Senator from Nebraska and others say, at the instance and suggestion, in the first place, of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], that there might be a prosecution under section 3 of Title I of the espionage act. The conference report amendment is as follows:

Any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this section is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association, to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same—

Now, note this language—

or to transport, carry or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage, approved June 15, 1917.

If the publisher has not complied with the provisions of the act with regard to the translation of the matter which is in a foreign language and made his affidavit accordingly, he has failed to comply with the act, and the publication is nonmailable. The only question, then, is as to whether or not its distribution by any other means than through the mails is prevented. I turn to the espionage act, and I find there, when you properly construe section 3 of Title I, that if the nonmailable matter is of a certain type and character, then and then only will it come within the provisions of section 3 of Title I of the espionage law. I read that title, as follows:

SEC. 3. Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service or of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

If he has violated that section he ought to suffer that penalty. He may violate that section when he attempts to distribute the matter contained in his publication by express, by freight, or by any other means of conveyance. If so, he is then liable, because of the particular nature of the matter published, to prosecution under section 3, of Title I, of the espionage law. Whatever the means, if he has disobeyed that law, if he has not made the affidavit required, and sends forth in his publication seditious matter for the purpose of causing disloyalty or mutiny in the military or naval forces of the Government, to prevent which is the object of section 3 and of this part of the conference report, I do not care what the means, whether it be express, whether it be freight, or whether it be by delivery boy, he ought to suffer the penalty, severe as it is.

Mr. President, we are in a great war and under peculiar conditions, with newspaper publications, many of them printed in foreign languages—some in the language of the enemy, seeking to interfere with the efforts of the United States to bring the war to a successful conclusion. Examples, indeed, have already been furnished, as I am informed and believe, to the effect that sedition has been advised, that resistance to law has been advised through publications of this kind. What is the difficulty? When there is no translation the editorial advising such action may go to a foreign-language speaking community. The English-speaking residents of that community, not accustomed to reading papers in a foreign language, never note it and never know what mischief is done; or, knowing that mischief has been done, are unable to trace it to its source or know how it has been accomplished. So, Mr. President, I think in a time like this and under conditions such as we are now living in this is a wholesome, safeguarding provision, and should become the law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I want to say merely a word or two. I have in mind a publication called the "American Weekly." It is un-American, and ought not to be called the American Weekly; it ought to be called the German Weekly; but it is printed in the English language. It has been excluded from the mails, and yet it is being circulated all throughout the United States. The entire burden of the matter which it contains is discouragement and attack upon the efforts of the United States in the conduct of this war for the preservation of the country. It is perfectly obvious that it is inconsistent and illogical for us merely to declare such matter nonmailable and keep it out of the mails and yet make it lawful for it to be distributed wholesale in any other way. I have no doubt at all that the funds to meet the expense of distributing this paper—and I refer to it only in illustration of a general situation—through the express companies, to newsboys, and at news stands come from German sources, and very likely from the German Government. I think that this conference report strengthening the law for the purpose of suppressing matter of that kind and meeting on our own soil these insidious and sinister attacks, which we have dealt with in a flabby sort of a way, ought to be enacted, and it is very important that it should be enacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HUSTING and Mr. CURTIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I wish merely to clear up the question that I propounded to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] a little while ago. I will say that I have in my hand the act of June 15, 1917. Section 1 of Title XII of that act declares what is unmailable. I will read it. It is as follows:

USE OF MAILS.

SECTION 1. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter or thing, of any kind, in violation of any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employee of the Dead Letter Office, duly authorized thereto, or other person upon a search warrant authorized by law, to open any letter not addressed to himself.

Section 2 of Title XII provides:

SEC. 2. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter or thing, of any kind, containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, is hereby declared to be nonmailable.

Section 3 of Title XII reads:

SEC. 3. Whoever shall use or attempt to use the mails or Postal Service of the United States for the transmission of any matter declared by this title to be nonmailable, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. Any person violating any provision of this title may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed.

That is all that I can find in that law in regard to declaring what is nonmailable. The point I want to make is that the particular section under discussion provides against—

Any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this section is hereby declared to be nonmailable—

And to this portion that I am now coming to I want to refer particularly—and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same, or to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage approved June 15, 1917.

The act approved June 15, 1917, does not give the Postmaster General any right to declare what is unmailable or unshippable. Of course, as applied to the United States mails, the Postmaster General, being at the head of the department, necessarily passes on the matter and declares it to be nonmailable, so that the department is forbidden to carry it; but in extending this to express companies there is nothing in the proposed provision which gives the Postmaster General any right to censor what the express company, for instance, shall carry. It depends upon the construction of the law, and the express company or any other carrier touched by this provision is not bound by what the Postmaster General says, but must construe the law himself, and refuse to carry the matter only when it is contrary to the provisions of the law. Now, being contrary to a finding by the Postmaster General is not enough. It has got to be a finding that it is contrary to the provisions of the law. So that the effect of the provision is not to declare unshippable by express, for instance, what the Postmaster General says is nonmailable, but to declare that it shall not be shipped by the express company when it is contrary to the provisions of the law.

So there is a vast difference between this provision and forbidding express companies to carry those things which the Postmaster General says are unmailable. This prohibition or inhibition goes to the extent of prohibiting the express company from carrying anything which the law says is nonmailable. So that whatever the practice may be—and we are not talking about that now; we are talking about what the effect of the law is—this is merely to prohibit express companies and other carriers from carrying those things which, by the facts and circumstances surrounding them, are in themselves nonmailable. That does not put it within the jurisdiction of the Postmaster General, however. That just defines the offense; and the offense is defined by the provisions of the law, not by what the Postmaster General says.

So this is merely carrying the law a little further, and prohibiting men who are publishing nonmailable stuff from evading the law and being able to distribute their treasonable stuff or illegal and unlawful matter through the express companies instead of the mails. It is not extending the offense any further. It is not giving any wider discretion to anybody. It merely closes one more avenue to those who are violating the law. It is just one more protection to the Government of the United States in this war in the way of stopping stuff which Congress has declared to be unlawful—not which the Postmaster General declares to be unlawful, but which Congress declares to be unlawful.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I feel sure that no one condemns more severely than I do the utterances of various men and the publication of matter which tends to interfere with the successful prosecution of the war; but I believe that we ought to preserve, if we can, some little part of the right of free speech and a free press. There is certainly a little of it to which we can hold fast without injuring the country or impairing our efficiency and strength in the war. There is some point between absolute silence on the part of every human being, and absolute license, at which we can safely rest. I believe we will do this country more harm in an unreasonable attempt to suppress the right of speech and the right of publication than we will in permitting the publication of many things which seem to us unwise.

I do not agree with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] with respect to his construction of this report, although I am opposed to the insertion of this particular paragraph in the law. I do not understand what jurisdiction the conference committee had over the subject, anyhow. I think it is a pure and unjustifiable assumption of authority on the part of the conference committee to make any report upon this subject. It is one that was not considered either by the Senate or by the House. There was nothing in the House bill upon the matter; there was nothing in the Senate bill upon the matter; and how the conference committee—which is, I assume, charged with the duty of reconciling the differences between the House and the Senate—could venture upon legislation of this kind, I am unable to understand.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Section 19 was added to the bill in the Senate. It was entirely a new section. It had relation to publications in foreign languages—in the German language, in fact. That placed the whole matter of the section, the whole of that new matter, in conference.

Mr. CUMMINS. It did, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. The House disagreed to it. Then an arrangement was reached between the conferees whereby not the precise language of the amendment as it passed the Senate, but that language, together with this, should constitute the real amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. Section 19—which was added, as I understand, upon the motion of the Senator from Utah—relates to the publication of matter in a foreign language. The amendment itself was confined to publications in the German language, and I agree that it was within the jurisdiction of the conference committee to enlarge the legislation so that it would include publications in any foreign language. In so far, I have no objection whatever to it, because I think it is better as reported by the conference committee than as it was passed by the Senate. But when the committee attempted to go further and to declare that it should be a crime to circulate in any manner whatsoever matter that might be in violation of the espionage law, it assumed the jurisdiction of a subject which was not connected in any way, either directly or indirectly, proximately or remotely, with the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah; and if we had any rule on the subject which was entitled to respect—we have none, I agree, or, if we have any, nobody respects it—if we had any rule on the subject that was capable of enforcement, this part of the report could be excluded, and it ought to be excluded, upon a point of order. But, as I have observed in times past, we are substantially lawless with regard to the action of conference committees, and we are gradually permitting these committees to organize new legislation upon new subjects, and it is brought before the Senate without any opportunity for amendment or change.

I make that complaint against the action of the conference committee. I am entirely in sympathy with the general object sought to be accomplished by the committee; but the Senate ought not to enact legislation that it has no chance to consider, no chance to change, no opportunity to amend; and I hope that at some time the Senate will be sufficiently jealous of its prerogatives, and have sufficient discernment with regard to the proper function of a conference committee and its own privileges to condemn the introduction into a report of matter entirely foreign to the subjects which were committed to its care.

Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] with regard to his interpretation of this proposed new legislation, rather than the interpretation of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. We have made certain things criminal in the espionage law. I do not intend to review that statute. There are a great many things in it to which I gave my assent with great reluctance, and there are some things in it to which I could not give my assent at all. But it has become the law. It creates many additional offenses against the United States. Section 3, to which reference has been had, is simply a part of its general supervision. It defines certain crimes against the United States; but the whole act is full of definitions of new crimes, and when we came to section 1 of Title XII we said that any publication, newspaper, print, and so forth, in violation of any of the provisions of the espionage law, should not be carried by the United States in its mail. It is a very comprehensive, far-reaching statute, and I make no objection to it. My complaint against that statute—and I simply repeat what I said when the law was upon its passage—is that it gives no fair opportunity for those responsible for a publication, the character of which is brought into question, to have an impartial trial before a tribunal appointed for the purpose.

But that is neither here nor there. The law is a part of our new regulations, and I have no disposition to challenge it at this time. It covers the whole of the espionage act and excludes from the mails everything that is in violation of the act; and, while it is not entirely clear, if a person is violating, for instance, section 3 of Title I through the instrumentality of a newspaper or a magazine, it possibly may be said that the newspaper or magazine is in violation of that section. That is not very clear to my mind, but I do not pause to discuss it at this time. It is sufficient to say that we gave ample, full authority to the Postmaster General to exclude from the mail everything that was or is in violation of the provisions of the espionage law.

Let us see what remedy one has who is charged with a violation of the law through the publication of a newspaper or a magazine.

The Postmaster General rules that a given publication is in violation of the law, and therefore excludes it from the mail. There is a qualified, limited, imperfect appeal to the courts. The person interested may bring his suit to enjoin the postmaster or the Postmaster General from the execution of the order. That is to say, he may apply for what is termed a mandatory injunction in order to compel the admission of the newspaper or the magazine to the mail. What is open to inquiry in a suit of that character? Not the broad, general merits of the publication; not the question of whether its publisher is or is not guilty of an offense under the espionage law. The court has practically the same jurisdiction in such a case as it has when it comes to review an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other body that is created for the purpose of applying to the particular case the law that we announce. The court must find that the Postmaster General acted without evidence, acted arbitrarily, which is but a synonym for saying that he acted without authority of the law. It is a very unsatisfactory review so far as the court is concerned; but I am stating what the law is, rather than criticizing it.

We now come to the present statute; that is, the one that is sought to be added through this conference report. What is it? It says that it shall be unlawful to carry, circulate, or transport any matter which is made nonmailable by the espionage act. I do not think that the espionage act covers the offenses that are named in this particular provision. I do not think that an express company or any other transportation company would be criminally liable under the espionage act for carrying literature that might be conclusive evidence of wrongdoing on the part of the publisher.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside pending the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is true, as said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], that the publisher or author of the statements or sentiments which are denounced and condemned by the espionage act still remains liable to criminal prosecution and can be prosecuted, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska, and heavily fined and imprisoned; but I know what was in the minds, I think, of the conferees. They desired to punish the instrumentalities through which the matter reached the public ear or the public eye. They wanted to make it a crime for an express company or any other transportation company to transport this material, even though it might be entirely ignorant of its character. They wanted to make it impossible for a publisher whose publication had been condemned by the Postmaster General to resort to any other channel through which to reach the public, and they have done it effectually in this provision.

Let us see what the effect would be in a given case. Suppose the Postmaster General were to examine a publication, magazine, or newspaper and declare it was nonmailable. The law does not provide for any trial whatever, and even if the publisher desires to challenge the correctness of the Postmaster General's decision, as I have pointed out, his rights of review is so limited that it is a practical denial of justice.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment until I finish this thought. Then I will be glad to yield. The publisher resorts, we will assume, to the express company. Not at all admitting that the decision of the Postmaster General is correct, but as an alternative he resorts to the express company or to the railroad company or whatever other instrument of transportation he may select, and puts his publication in its hands for circulation. He is, I assume, endeavoring to get the decision or the view of an impartial court upon the character of his publication. He is trying to find out whether he has violated the law or whether he is an innocent citizen. What will the express company do, or the railroad company, or any other general instrument of distribution or carriage do? It will say to the publisher: "I will not accept your publication. I do not intend to incur the hazard of becoming a criminal. I refuse to distribute the paper. The Postmaster General has said it was nonmailable, and if it was nonmailable it is in violation of the espionage law and there is not sufficient compensation or sufficient inducement for this company to accept the paper or the magazine." In that way a publisher who is in good faith entirely innocent is absolutely precluded from any opportunity to secure the judgment of any tribunal upon the character of his publication, except the Postmaster General.

I am appealing to the distinguished Senators who have spoken for this conference report and who are, I understand, largely responsible for it. Do you believe that that is in harmony with free institutions? Do you believe that it secures by proper guaranties the safety of the citizen according to the traditions of the forefathers?

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator. But I ought to yield first to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. RANDELL. Does the Senator contend that the courts are not open to this man whose material is declared nonmailable by the Postmaster General?

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator heard what I said a few moments ago—

Mr. RANDELL. I have listened with great attention.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then the Senator knows my view on that question.

Mr. RANDELL. I certainly think you believe that the courts are open, and yet you have just said there was absolutely no appeal, that there was nothing for this man to do when the Postmaster General declared against him. It differs entirely from what the Senator said a few moments ago.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no difference at all. I said there was no practical or efficient remedy. I said a few moments ago what I say now, and if the Senator from Louisiana differs from me with regard to the law on the subject I hope he will make it perfectly clear. I am not suggesting that the decision of the Postmaster General with regard to the nonmailability of a particular publication could have under this law any weight as evidence in a prosecution against a person who was alleged to have violated the provision you have reported. I am saying, however, that when the Postmaster General holds that a given publication is not mailable and those who are injured by his ruling appeal to the court there is just one way in which they can appeal, and that is by instituting a bill in equity for an injunction against the department or some officer of the department, and that the inquiry there is not as to the merits of the ruling but as to the transgression of authority upon the part of the Postmaster General. If the court finds that the Postmaster General had some evidence upon which to found his judgment, and did not act in an arbitrary way, it will refuse to interfere with the order of the department, no matter what its judgment might be with regard to the essential fundamental merits of the proposition itself.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask the Senator what would be the remedy for the publisher if he should not go to the Post Office Department, but offered his paper to the express company, and the express company should decline to carry it, without reference to any action on the part of the Postmaster General?

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as this particular provision is concerned, it does not depend upon any action or order of the Postmaster General; but if the publisher goes to the common carrier and tenders the paper for transportation and the carrier refuses to transport it, the person who offers it has no remedy, except possibly an action in mandamus to compel the carrier to accept it. But if the carrier does accept it in the ordinary course of its business, and then it was afterwards found that the matter was nonmailable under the espionage act, the carrier becomes liable criminally for the transportation, and that without regard to knowledge upon its part or participation upon its part other than the mere acceptance of the commodity itself.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course the Senator does not question but that the ordinary rules of procedure in criminal cases would attach in that case as in the other. The question of intent would be involved, and the question of reasonable doubt would also be involved.

Mr. CUMMINS. Entirely; I think that is true; but what is intended here, through a rather devious and ingenious method, is to prevent the publisher from having any opportunity to try his case in the regular and the ordinary way.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Under Title XII of the espionage law, section 2, publications "urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance" to the law are "declared to be nonmailable," and the next section makes it an offense to attempt to use the mails for such a purpose. I should like the opinion of the Senator as to whether there ought not to be some law that would prohibit circulars or publications urging treason from being circulated among the people in any other way.

Mr. CUMMINS. There certainly should be.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is not that what this provision accomplishes?

Mr. CUMMINS. Who is to determine whether the circulars are of that character? That is the whole question here.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator asks who is to determine it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The effort is to prevent a trial. The effort is to give to a departmental officer the right to pass upon the character of all sayings and all writings concerning public affairs. The Senator has quoted one sentence of the espionage law. There are 20 other provisions under which the Postmaster General can act. He has quoted the one which is the plainest. I suppose there could not be much difference of opinion with regard to the publications that would come under section 3 of Title I of the espionage act, but there are a score of others upon which there is the widest difference of opinion and opportunity for the widest difference of opinion.

Mr. KELLOGG. Under sections 2 and 3 of Title XII of the espionage act the same question would arise, if a man is tried for attempting to mail a letter urging treason, that would arise under this provision of the trading-with-the-enemy act.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; so far as punishment of the individual is concerned, and we need no additional law for the punishment of individuals. The Lord knows we have enough penalties now to prevent the commission of these crimes, if penalties will prevent them. But this is not intended to impose penalties. It is not intended under it to accuse express companies and railroad companies and other public instrumentalities of the commission of a crime. It is intended that they shall refuse to carry these things because they are afraid of the action of the Postmaster General or the ex parte conclusion or decision of a purely administrative officer.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield now to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I asked a similar question of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORMAN] to the one I am about to propound to the Senator from Iowa. In practically every State of the Union there are statutes making it an offense to transmit or to distribute or to carry or to circulate any obscene or lascivious matter. If I tender to an express company in a State having a statute of that character a book which is obscene and lascivious, and the express company knows it and transmits it, it would commit an offense. If it did not know the character of the publication it would not be guilty of an offense in receiving and transmitting it.

Now, what is the difference in principle between the case which I have just suggested and the question which the Senator is now discussing? The Government of the United States declares that it is an offense to publish certain matter that is treasonable, and as I understand the Senator from Iowa he concedes that such legislation is proper. That is the matter which is referred to in section 3 and in the other section of the espionage law which has been referred to by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORMAN]. The law declares that it is an offense, as the Senator from Minnesota just stated, to attempt to mail matter of that character. Now, what is there wrong or improper in Congress declaring the publication of that matter to be an offense? We prohibit its transmission through the mails, and if individuals or express companies knowingly—and that is the intent and meaning of this statute—transmit or distribute this matter, the publication of which has been made an offense, they shall be guilty of an offense. What is the difference in principle between this legislation of Congress and a State statute of the character to which I have just referred?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have been trying to point it out, and I will try again. In the first place, I differ from the view of the Senator from Utah with regard to the interpolation of the word "knowingly" in the criminal provision of this report. I do not believe that word would be a part of the statute if we adopt the conference report. We have a great many offenses against the United States in which the intent is not a part. We have, I suppose, hundreds of crimes which are committed without an intent to violate the statute at all, and this would be one of them in my judgment.

However, that is not really a part of the question asked by the Senator from Utah, and I desire to answer his question in perfect candor and good faith. There is just the same difference between imposing penalties of this kind upon publications by reason of their character that is illustrated in these two extremes. Suppose we pass a statute making it an offense to transmit through the mails, or through any other channel of distribution, pictures of nude women. Everybody can understand that; there is no opportunity for variety of opinion; and if that be the sentiment of the community which has enacted the law it is perfectly proper to punish not only the one who deposits the forbidden print in the mail or the express office or with the railway company but the carrier of such a print as well. Suppose, however, we were to say that any publication which tends to make democracy unsafe throughout the world should not be circulated or transported by either the Post Office Department or an express company or a railway company. I am not saying that we will not come to a time when it will be perfectly proper to declare that anyone is a criminal who does attempt to make democracy unsafe throughout the world. We may reach that point; but I am saying that there is a vast deal of difference between the opinions of men concerning the subject matter. What makes democracy unsafe throughout the world? What argument? What illustration? The Senators from Florida and Louisiana may think one thing will insure the safety of free institutions throughout the world. I may think that an entirely different course of argument is necessary to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question there. He is now urging that a certain character of publications ought not to be prohibited; that is, at least in such general language as that which he describes, publications which some administrative officer might, in his opinion, tend to make democracy unsafe with the world. I assume we will all agree with him upon that proposition, but does the Senator argue that the publications which are described in this bill ought not to be prohibited from circulation?

Mr. CUMMINS. As I interpret the bill, all of them should be prohibited; but if the Senator from Washington should interpret the bill as I gather his general views there are a great many of them that he would prohibit that I would not. Such is the general character of the language used.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would be a matter of interpretation of the language. I understand, however, that the Senator is not urging that the publications described in the bill should not be prohibited from circulation either by the mail or otherwise, as he construes it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would make the penalty quite as severe for circulating through other channels as through the mails. I do not think there is any difference in that respect at all. If the thing is wrong it ought not to be circulated.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then, may I ask the Senator to state briefly what is his objection to it?

Mr. CUMMINS. I want somebody to determine whether it is wrong or not before the penalty of $10,000 or 20 years in the penitentiary is incurred.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator believe that anybody could incur such a penalty under this act unless a court of competent jurisdiction determined it after a trial?

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the Senator heard the argument I have made?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have been trying to make perfectly clear the great variety of opinion with regard to some of the provisions of the espionage law. I was very much opposed to some of those provisions; I am not taking any new attitude; but we have enacted the law and there is a widespread difference of judgment with regard to what the law embraces. I do not want to make a disinterested man or company a criminal until there is opportunity to investigate and determine the subject. That is all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In what way does the Senator argue that the bill would make a man a criminal before there was an opportunity for a trial?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have stated that, but I will state it again. The newspaper or magazine goes to the Post Office Department and the publisher finds that the paper has been excluded from the mails.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is what I thought—

Mr. CUMMINS. Just wait until I finish. I think I can make my own view anyhow perfectly clear. It is excluded from the mails on the ground that it is in violation of some of the many provisions of the espionage law. There is no appeal from the decision of the Postmaster General. There is, however, under the common law a right to attack the order of the Postmaster General, not upon the ground that the evidence fairly considered would lead to another conclusion, but upon the ground that the Postmaster General exceeded his authority under the law and decided the case without any evidence or in a way so arbitrary that it was clear he gave no heed to the evidence. There is no trial upon the merits, broadly speaking. But the publisher must accept that inadequate remedy. He comes to the conclusion that he will circulate his paper through the express company.

All the time, mark you, he is claiming that there is no violation of the statute; that he does not contravene any provision of the espionage law. He goes to an express company and tenders his paper for circulation or for transportation. The express company says to him, "For the meager compensation that we receive for transporting these papers we can not incur the hazard of becoming a criminal under the law and being prosecuted and fined under the statute. Therefore we refuse to distribute and to circulate your paper." What remedy has the publisher then? Where does he secure his opportunity to have an impartial tribunal to pass upon the quality and character of the things he has been saying or writing?

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the Senator does he argue that an express company or the agencies used in the distribution of publications ought not to be prohibited by law from distributing them?

Mr. CUMMINS. What I was about to say is that the publisher, the person who is responsible for the utterance or the writing, whatever it may be, must take his chance, and I am not appealing for him. If he is convicted he must suffer the penalty that the law prescribes. But before we create a system that will prevent him from circulating his magazine or newspaper through the refusal of the ordinary instrumentalities of distribution to accept the paper, the Government ought to be required to institute a suit for an injunction to restrain those instrumentalities from taking and circulating his paper, and there the question as to whether it was in violation of the espionage law or not could be fairly and fully determined. In that way we would not find it necessary to condemn the accused before he had the privilege of a trial.

I give you an illustration; and I, of course, largely accept what the newspapers, the general press, have given to the public about it. Here is a magazine published in New York called The Masses. I never read a copy of it in my life. If it is what it is generally reputed to be, I have probably less sympathy with it than has any Senator upon this floor. It was excluded from the mails on the ground that it was in violation of the espionage law. Its publisher sought a mandatory injunction before a very eminent judge of the district court of the United States in New York. After full hearing the judge indicated, through his opinion, that he was about to issue, and he did issue, a mandatory injunction, which forbade the postmaster of the city of New York refusing to receive the publication to the mails. I judge from the reports that it was solely upon the ground that in the view of the judicial department of the Government the publication was not in violation of the espionage law.

What happened? Representatives of the Post Office Department of the United States or the postmaster in New York—I do not know who or which—appeared before a judge of the circuit court of appeals and secured in a formal way, without any trial, as I understand, an order staying the issuance or execution of the mandatory injunction. Mark you, the judge of the circuit court of appeals did not attempt to pass on the propriety of issuing the injunction, but in the ordinary course of affairs issued a stay. That left the order of the Postmaster General in full force and effect; and the case is now in the circuit court of appeals.

I do not know what the result will be; whether the judgment of the district court will be affirmed or reversed; I do not know whether the Supreme Court of the United States will finally affirm or reverse the judgment; nobody can tell; but what happens in the meanwhile? The newspaper or magazine, deprived of the use of the mails, goes to the express companies as a channel of distribution; the express companies distribute it. Then comes this statute, and I have reason to believe, I do believe, that this proposed new provision of the law has come into the conference report simply to meet that individual case, so that the express companies or other transportation companies will refuse to transport the magazine, being in fear of the law, in fear of the consequences, for nothing can make it sure to them what the outcome will be. Thus, although the only judge who has ever passed upon the matter has decided that the material complained of was not in violation of law, this publication is absolutely put out of business. What has occurred in this instance may happen in a score of others.

I do not believe that any such drastic law is either necessary or that it will promote the public good. I think that any such legislation will have a much greater tendency to create sedition and to sow discord than it will have to bring about harmony and unity among the people of this country. I have hoped that a fair discussion of the subject might lead to its amelioration in some way; that it might induce those who are responsible for it to reconsider what they have done. Joining them and all other Senators in the belief that we ought by prompt and decisive enactment to punish those who are disloyal, I repeat the sentiment with which I began, that there must be left in this country some room for difference of opinion. It can not be that the Senator from Florida believes that the successful prosecution of this war depends upon suppressing all controversies with regard to every subject which pertains to the war; it can not be that we have reached a point in which it is necessary to padlock the lips of the people; it can not be that we are in that position which makes it necessary to appoint one spokesman for all the people of the country and to declare that any dissent from the views uttered by that censor shall be condemned as treason. Those who take that position, those who are moving along those lines, will, in my judgment, do much more to weaken the United States in the great struggle in which it has engaged even than those who inadvisedly and indiscreetly and improperly criticize the conduct of the war or criticize the character of our legislation.

I think that the overwhelming majority of the people of this country are of one mind. No matter what they may have believed a few months ago, they now know that we are involved in the mightiest struggle of all time; they know that we have undertaken to do what no other nation ever tried to do and what no other nation save our own could do. They intend to do this vast thing, and they intend to do it successfully; they intend to carry forward this war to a victorious end; there is no dissent among the people with regard to that general determination; but if, through provisions of the kind I am now considering, the Congress of the United States, little by little, insidiously grasps and carries away the last remnants of free speech and of a free press, they will finally awaken such indignation on the part of a free people that the object which they seek to accomplish will not only not be attained, but our last condition will be worse than our first.

I conclude by saying that, in so far as I am personally concerned, I condemn in the most emphatic way every utterance and every publication that tends to weaken our country in this titanic conflict. There is just one thing that the people of this country will not tolerate or forgive; it is the addition of a single unnecessary peril to those already confronting the gallant boys whom we have sent across the sea. No one feels more keenly than do I that phase of the great problem before us, for—although it may be a mere personal matter and probably it is not appropriate for me to speak of it, but as it is on my lips I may give it utterance—every near male relative I have in the world between the ages of 21 and 31 is in this war and each one of them gave his service to his country without any compulsion of the law. To me the thought, the statement, the publication of anything that will add to the danger of these boys, some of whom have gone and all of whom are about to go to foreign shores, is so abhorrent to me that I am utterly unable to give it adequate expression; but I hope that those who feel as I do about it will not destroy their own high object by imposing upon the people of this country so unreasonable a provision as the clause to which I have referred.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate in giving reasons or offering excuses for getting after people who are throwing obstacles in the way of their own Government and who are directly and indirectly offering aid and comfort to its enemies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has just said that he has relatives across the ocean, I understand, or who may cross the ocean. What we want to say to our boys who are in France and to our boys who are going to France is "We are not going to leave you in the lurch; every man and every dollar in this country is behind you and will be behind you to the bitter end of this mighty contest." Yet there are people in this country who are stirring up adverse sentiment, who are publishing stuff which they are distributing throughout the country which shows they are not of that spirit, who are throwing obstacles in the way, who are discouraging that patriotic spirit and patriotic enthusiasm and that loyalty which ought to obtain in this country. That has been made perfectly plain to the conference committee, and I shall not go into details about it.

This amendment, I will say to the Senator from Iowa, was in nowise intended to meet some particular or individual case. I never heard of the case the Senator mentioned until he called attention to it here on the floor. This is a general provision which is intended to meet a situation which the present espionage act does not meet. I have before me here, to which I may refer briefly for the purpose of indicating the need of such legislation, two very notable addresses, one delivered by Mr. Root to the American Bar Association at Saratoga this month. Let me read just an extract from Mr. Root's speech. He said:

I beg you to remember what Europe thought of the condition in America in those long dark years of civil war, when it was believed that the American experiment had failed at last. I beg you to consider, if a true statement were made and communicated by cable to Russia, of all that has been happening in these United States during the last four months, of the riots, of the pacifists' meetings, of the seditious press, of the unblushing effrontery of treason throughout this land, consider what effect that would have upon Russia.

Mr. Root went on further to say:

We need not talk about the whys and wherefores of the war. It is here, and the issue is drawn so clearly that a child could see.

I may mention that there can be no difference between us in regard to the importance of preserving the freedom of the press as properly understood; there can be no question that legitimate, fair, proper publications and discussion and argument ought to be permitted and ought to continue; but, as Mr. Root has said, the issue here is so plain that a child can see it. It is perfectly plain what is seditious and what is not seditious in these circumstances and under the conditions as they obtain. I quote further from Mr. Root:

It is for the American people to determine whether they have the manhood to maintain the liberty that their fathers gained for them through sacrifice, the manhood to maintain the justice upon which we have prided ourselves, the manhood to defend those institutions of liberty and justice which we would hand down to our children, or whether we shall submit and abandon them all.

The issue is clear and distinct between the maintenance of the American Republic, free and independent, American justice to the rich and poor alike, American opportunity for the boy and the girl—whether we are so craven that we will leave our children to be subjected to the power of evil that ravished Belgium and Serbia; whether falsehood and faithlessness and cynical contempt for morals, and cold-blooded disregard of humanity, and utter absence of mercy and compassion, and denial of human right shall be the portion of our children, or whether the liberty which our fathers won shall be handed down to them by the manhood of our fathers' sons and the love of our children's fathers.

And it is a fortunate thing, when we have to deal with people who have the record that our enemies have in Belgium and in France, that we are able to make that battle line 3,000 miles away from our home. We must maintain our boys there and let them know that we are going to stand behind them.

I desire now to read a brief extract from an address delivered by Hon. William J. Bryan at Fort Benjamin Harrison on August 3, 1917, in which he said:

We live in the best country on earth, under the best form of government that man's mind ever conceived—a government which rests upon great fundamental principles, principles which are essential to a government like ours. One of these principles is freedom of speech; but every man should know that discussion ends when the country renders its decision and the people announce their will. "Acquiescence in the will of the people," as Jefferson declared, "is the vital principle of a Republic, from which there is no appeal except to force."

So, to-day, our Nation is one. If there is a discordant voice in this Nation to-day it must come from one who either does not understand the genius of our institutions or whose heart is not with his country. I think I know the American people; I believe I am as well acquainted with them as any other citizen. I have been among them now for a generation and I know that the American people will stand back of the President and Congress and furnish the Government whatever it needs, in men and money, to win this war.

People ask me every day how long this war will last. My answer is that I do not know; and I do not know anybody who does know. When anybody tells me he thinks he knows I lose confidence in his judgment. I know of nothing upon which any human being is able to predicate a guess that is of any value as to the length of this war. But I can state a fact that is worth more than any guess, prediction, or prophecy, and that is that no matter whether the war be long or short, the shortest road to peace is the road straight ahead, with no division among our people. We can not afford to allow anybody in this world to think for one minute that there is any division among the American people when once our Nation has decided to enter a war. The more earnestly one desires peace, the more loyally he should support the Government as the only way to hasten peace.

It is to meet conditions like these, to accomplish what is indicated here as important to accomplish that this legislation is proposed.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a question.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator for the purpose of interrogating the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I can illustrate the question by reference to history. Of course, I agree entirely with all that has been said by the distinguished citizen of New York, Mr. Root, as well as his great fellow citizen, Mr. Bryan, of Nebraska, in their generalizations; but now I ask the Senator this question: Suppose this statute had been in force in 1864, would the platform of a great political party that met that year and issued its declaration have been a violation of the espionage act?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think, Mr. President, in all fairness and candor, it should be said that if a person is charged with a violation of this proposed law as it has been framed in this conference report—an express company, if you please, or any other agency—that person would have his day in court under this law, and the question would be presented upon his arrest for punishment whether or not as a matter of fact—or, it may be said, as a matter of mixed law and fact, if you like—the material which he was transporting or distributing was in violation of the espionage act or in violation of the provisions of this bill. That question would be determined at a regular trial legally, properly, and regularly conducted, and to be decided by the jury upon proper instructions from the court. So we need not theorize as to what would or would not be a violation of the espionage act. It would be a question which the defendant charged with the violation of it would have a right to have determined by the tribunal before which his trial takes place.

That is all we can accomplish in any statute, it seem to me. There is nothing arbitrary, nothing to be settled by any individual in connection with this proposed statute. The whole of the proposition is that any defendant charged with a violation of the law has his trial in court, precisely as an individual charged with a violation of any other statute of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, as I have been informed that there is a desire on the part of certain Senators who oppose the provisions of the conference report that there shall be no vote until 4 o'clock, in order that some Senators who are now absent may be present, I will take the liberty to suggest at this time some views which I might have added earlier or would have added subsequently.

Mr. President, in the first place, I should like to express for myself my understanding of this proposed law. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] apprehends that it would permit the conviction of a person without any hearing beforehand; the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] apprehends that it would take his property and render it useless without a hearing. The junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] propounded a query that I thought met the situation, and that was, "Is there not some one to determine when there is a violation?" The Senators, from my viewpoint, take the position that you must convict a man before you arrest him; that you shall have a judgment affirming as a judicial act the facts before you shall ever act upon them. In that event I am clearly of the opinion we could never arrest anybody; the one sought would fly before he was arrested. There would be no way in the world that a justice of the peace could ever decide whether a warrant should ever be issued upon the mere complaint of a complainant. I do think, however, that if there is an absence in this proposed law—and the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has attracted my attention to that feature of the provision—of any method by which a person may have a hearing upon his demand, that should be promptly remedied. Senators, however, may find great relief in all their observations on this law if they will find it convenient to read the case of School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, in One hundred and eighty-seventh United States, beginning at page 106. Nearly everything presented by distinguished Senators seems to have been answered by counsel in that cause, and the court makes such reply as, I think, would be very interesting to Senators, if not convincing, that it is within the power of the Government to do the very thing which is now contemplated by the pending measure.

Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] tells me that he thinks we could have a vote now on the conference report. I should not like, however, to lose the floor. If it can be arranged that the vote may be had and that at its conclusion I may still hold the floor, I will be very glad to accommodate the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). The present occupant of the chair will state to the Senator from Illinois that he will be glad to recognize the Senator immediately after the vote is taken, if he still occupies the chair.

Mr. NORRIS entered the Chamber.

Mr. LEWIS. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that the Senator from Florida is of the opinion that if I should yield at this time we could have a vote at once on the conference report, and when that is out of the way, then I could continue.

Mr. NORRIS. I am willing to vote, I will say to the Senator, but I desire a roll call on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. LEWIS. But the Senator does not wish to debate it further?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I am ready to vote.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, with the understanding that the Senator desires a roll call, and that I may continue the floor immediately following the roll call, I am willing to yield the floor, with the understanding that I will not be taken from my feet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he can not give the Senator any assurance that he will be recognized, except that the present occupant of the chair will be glad to recognize the Senator if he still occupies the chair after the vote is taken.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Florida to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Page	Shields
Brandeggee	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Kellogg	Phelan	Smoot
Cummins	Kendrick	Pittman	Underwood
Curtis	Kenyon	Poin Dexter	Vardaman
Fall	King	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Lewis	Ransdell	Watson
France	McKellar	Reed	Williams
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Robinson	Wolcott
Gerry	New	Saulsbury
Hale	Norris	Shafroth
Husting	Overman	Sheppard

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], is detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] on account of illness in his family. I desire also to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I will let this announcement stand for the present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of sickness, and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] on official business.

Mr. LEWIS. In this connection, I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KIRBY, Mr. MARTIN, and Mr. SWANSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. LODGE, Mr. STONE, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. As I understand that he would vote as I am about to vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is necessarily absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I see that he is not in the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. SAULSBURY (after having voted in the affirmative). I neglected to announce that my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] does not apply to this vote. It does not apply to any votes on war measures during the war. This announcement may stand for the session.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I will let this announcement stand for the afternoon. He is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted without announcing my pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I have a general pair with that Senator; but I am advised that he would vote as I do, and therefore I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. VARDAMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM].

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 6, as follows:

YEAS—48.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me to make a report.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the senior Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I desire to report from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 5949) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses and other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 134) thereon. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, after the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I did not understand the announcement made by the Senator from Virginia in reference to taking up this bill. Do I understand that he desires to take it up to-morrow?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes; I shall ask that the deficiency bill be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. CURTIS. The first thing after the morning hour?

Mr. MARTIN. The first thing after the morning business.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the junior Senator from Virginia, with the understanding that he has a matter which will occupy only a moment, and that if it calls forth any debate or discussion he will withdraw it, so as not to take me from the floor.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2477) to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department, which was, on page 2, to strike out lines 1 and 2.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate. It was temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks to have the unfinished business laid before the Senate. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

PRUSSIAN PEACE HYPOCRISY.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have yielded to different Senators to bring forth their measures, because some things that I purpose saying are a little extraneous to either of the bills under discussion, and I did not desire to obstruct the vote on the one or interfere with the program with regard to the other. I desire to continue my observations as they were begun under the report of the trading-with-the-enemy act.

At this point I wish to present some views to the Senate under the subject matter of "Prussian peace hypocrisy." I present, sir, for the consideration of the Senate that does me the compliment to hear this discussion what I deem to be the affront to our President and the insult to the United States of America in the announcements from the Emperor of all the Germans in what purports to be his response to the petition for peace of His Holiness the Pope of Rome. I refer to that particular petition addressed to all the warring nations concerning the availability of peace terms and asking for a cooperation to this noble object of peace on earth.

Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that the proposition that came from the Pope was a suggestion to the warring nations, first, that they should state upon what terms peace could be had; second, in what way those terms could be enforced; and, third, to suggest a basis upon which a peace with justice might be permanent. Upon this the Pope asked a full and frank response. The President of the United States, in behalf of America, made reply pointing out the way, setting forth in detail how this commendable result could be achieved, and in what manner and upon what conditions the United States of America would cooperate to that end. Notable in the presentation by the President of the United States was the statement that past experiences of the United States with the Imperial Princes of Germany had clearly established to America that it could not accept the assurances of the ruling powers of Prussia. The United States had been deceived and trapped by indulging in the belief that these Prussian agencies could be truthful or intended to be fair. The President of the United States, for America, stated, however, that when the German people found it agreeable, through any arrangement they cared to make, to take up the subject by themselves, for themselves, their assurances would be received, their promises confided in. The President expressed his wish that this hope could be consummated.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, did the President of the United States speak for America or for the United States of America?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the eminent Senator from North Carolina invites my attention to the difference in the terms America and the United States of America. I say to the Senator that literally the President of the United States, of course, speaks only for the United States of America; but it has been the custom for a long time now to designate the United States as America and the other half of our continent as South America. Such is why I indulged that technical, syntactical error. Nevertheless, my eminent friend from North Carolina is ever welcome to call to my attention even an error such as that, because at this particular time it is well to be accurate in the least of things.

Mr. President, after the reply of the United States, everyone who hoped for peace and would have avoided this necessary war was literally upon the tiptoe of expectancy as to what would be the reply of the principal actor in the drama, Prussia. It was believed that Prussia, which had previously by expressions indicated to the world a desire for peace, would avail itself of such opportunity as was tendered. That Prussia would embrace the chance to set forth clearly and frankly the terms upon which this peace could be had, and would cooperate with whatever Government agencies had been set afoot to bring about this result. Sir, by all just people it was dreamed that Prussia's reply would disclose a spirit that would express some willingness for immediate just peace and would suggest terms as to herself concerning which the nations involved could at least negotiate. For myself, sir, I was one of those who harbored the belief that there was a real sincerity on the part of the Prussian princes when they pretended for peace. I was one of those anxious that we should have peace if it could be secured consistently with the high purposes for which we entered this war. I had indulged the hope that the dream of the German people for peace and quiet, their needs for food and comfort, their distresses in their dead and dying might appeal to the Prussian Emperor—the Emperor of the Germans—and through such influence some expressions might come that would show a sincere desire to cooperate in this Godly enterprise—the peace of nations. But, sir, we are compelled now to note, if we do justice to the record, that notwithstanding the pretenses which had come to us from official sources in Germany but a few weeks past professing of a desire for peace; that when the opportunity came for Prussia to express definitely the terms upon which peace might be had, Prussia was the only nation involved—the German Emperor, for Prussia, the only official addressed, who declined to make a statement of any terms upon which any peace, under any circumstances of the present war, could be had. I call the attention of the Senate to the revelation with the object that the hypocrisy of past pretensions should be now unclonked; the mask should be torn aside, and the real character of things should be betrayed as they stand in official Prussia. I demand that the real falsity and established perfidy be exposed. I do this that no Senator occupying a seat on this floor hereafter, however well disposed his heart, however noble his nature, who in the past having felt that the Prussians were fair according to their own ideas, sought to give them a just hearing and presumptions of honesty; will not now see that the contribution of friendship he made has been abused, that the encouragement to Prussian contentions he gave has been abused, and all friendship he extended betrayed. The time has now come when, from this response of the Prussian Caesar—as I shall unfold it—every Senator, without regard to any former position he had taken; every American, without reference to any past declaration—indeed every citizen of the United States of every station must behold that this reply had for its deliberate object, first, ignoring the United States as though it had no existence; second, an affront to the President for his presumption, as they would term it, in assuming that the German people were an entity at variance from the German princes. Lastly, a deliberate declination to suggest a single concrete thing upon which any peace whatever would be accepted and a flouting of all propositions of President Wilson for the United States and a contemptuous ignoring of all conditions laid down by the Pope.

Mr. President, there has gone through the press the idea that the Emperor of the Germans has told the world that peace could be accepted upon a plan of disarmament, and that open seas would also at once be afforded as a basis of peace. Sir, I am compelled to bring to your attention that never was that concession even intimated as a concrete yield as a basis for peace. To the contrary, no terms were accepted, none stated. All were avoided with trickery of words. Sir, I prefer to read. Says the Emperor of Germany, replying to the Pope:

Appreciating the importance of his holiness's declaration, the Imperial Government has not failed to submit the suggestion contained therein to earnest and scrupulous examination. Special measures, which the Government has taken in closest contact with representatives of the German people for discussing and answering the questions raised prove how earnestly it desires, in accordance with his holiness's desires and the peace resolution of the Reichstag on July 19, to find a practical basis for a just and lasting peace.

We now, sir, would expect a statement of something as the basis for that "just and lasting peace."

Then proceeds the Emperor, saying:

We share his holiness's view that definite rules and a certain safeguard for a simultaneous and reciprocal limitation of armaments on land, on sea, and in the air, as well as for the true freedom of the community and high seas, are the things in treating which—the new spirit that in the future should prevail in international relations—should find first hopeful expression. * * *

The Imperial Government will in this respect support every proposal compatible with the vital interest of the German Empire and people.

Noticeable indeed; a more skillful paper has seldom gone out from the hands of a literary alienist. The suggestion of disarmament, made by the Pope—open seas, suggested by the Pope—these the Emperor of Germany only exclaims should find a "hopeful expression in the future period of international relations." But how carefully do we see avoided any expression that it should find any spirit now in the present conflict, no promise for now or the future offered by the Emperor for open seas or disarmament now as a condition of peace. No guaranty of any kind whatever made to any issue now involved. No suggestion to the world that Prussia is ready with any present tender to enter into any understanding upon any of the propositions presented by the Pope or suggested by the President or named by the allies. It suffices for the Emperor of Germany to dismiss the Pope with coquettish diplomacy, saying that these things are to be "considered in the international relations of the future, measured by the spirit suggested." Indeed—how bewilderingly abstract, how delusively indefinite. How bowing to the future—it laughs its intangible, nebulous, and deceiving mixture of confusing phraseology—yet under no circumstances a promise to yield open seas, disarmament of army and navy, aerial warfare, or on the land, or cease one assault upon human rights. Nor, Mr. President, is there in any respect whatever any promise suggested for the future as a stated thing, even upon a condition.

Mr. President, I bring to the attention of the United States of America in my humble place this deception practiced upon the American heart, this delusion of the mind. We all recall that time and time again Prussia gave to the world her assurance that she was ready for disarmament at present and for the freeing of the high seas at present. But Senators will now note that when the opportunity was given to do these, nowhere is there stated any such promise, any such suggestion, or any such hope.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator what nation on the face of the earth has ever denied the freedom of the seas or ever assumed to control any part of the seas except during a period of war in defense of itself or in asserting its rights to keep goods out of an enemy's hands? Is there anything in the proposition of the freedom of the seas except some nebulous idea that casts a doubt upon whether the seas heretofore have been free?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator, where would there be any freedom of the seas if it is to be conceded that whenever it is to the advantage of any one contestant they can close the seas? Must freedom of the seas mean freedom only up to the time when it becomes to the interest of any one of the parties to shut that freedom off from its enjoyment? I answer the Senator that when Prussia threw its zone around the sea and said to the United States of America, "Thus far and no farther shall you go," and made it impossible that we should enjoy the seas, there was no freedom. I say to the able Senator that even though there be war between nations in Europe it does not license those nations to say to us, "You shall not enter here and enjoy the freedom which previously was yours, even though you are not in the war." We were not at war at that hour when we were barred out on penalty of death. Therefore, it is perfectly plain in this assurance of statement made by the Emperor of Germany that no intent is disclosed that during the war any form of freedom of the seas is to be permitted contrary to the barrier that has been created against the United States of America, and from this document of defiance we may expect the sea to be barred by submarines against us after the war—

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

Mr. LEWIS. I again yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. In other words, the only time the freedom of the seas has been denied has been when a death zone was fixed by our enemy and a declaration that any ship with any kind of goods going to any section of the world traveling through that zone would be sunk without notice. Has there been any other time when any nation in the world has assumed to so control the seas?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator well states the proposition, and I am content in that to accept his definition, that such is the only condition of that kind which our present civilization has confronted.

Therefore, I ask you, sir, and ask the Senate to note what this reply had for its real object. First, Mr. President, the real purpose of the reply was to flout the United States. Its main object was to cast an affront upon the President of the United States. It was to ignore his every suggestion touching needed freedom of the German people and respect to their cry for peace—made to the world. It was to ignore, sir, the demand for the freedom of the seas in so far as our rights to such were established, but more, sir, it was for the purpose of certifying to the world that it did not recognize the distinction set forth by the President of the United States to his holiness the Pope, stating the rights of the German people as against the assumptions of the German princes. In the reply sent from the Emperor we behold two principal objects: First, it was to inform the contesting forces in the conflict, as well as the whole earth, that Germany felt no reason for yielding to anything upon the demands of any nation. Second, it would not concede that the German people had any right which the President of the United States had any privilege to speak for. Nor would it admit the right to the German people as a people to enjoy liberties apart from that granted as a privilege or favor by the Prussian princes. On this reply the Kaiser says he will submit himself to history. The Germans have a saying, "Die Weltgeschichte ist das Weltgericht." So say we now to the Kaiser, "World history is the world tribunal."

Therefore, Mr. President, it was the complete ignoring of anything the United States had said of any nature whatsoever upon any basis stated by the United States as condition of world peace. The Kaiser boldly asserts that only such propositions would be considered as basis for peace as were consistent with the interests of the German Empire. Sir, behold that no interest of the world for peace, no interest of the rights of the Republic of America for justice, if you please, no interest whatever of humanity, no interest of civilization was to be considered. Only, sir, "the interests of the German Empire" as seen by the Kaiser. Only that would he suggest to His Holiness as worthy of any consideration as a basis of peace to the world. What mockery, what confession of falseness to professions of world welfare.

Here, sir, we have the spectacle of a statement broadly and brazenly made that the terms whether suggested by the Pope of Rome, from the President of the United States, from the allies, or from any other source in the world must be wholly consistent with the object of the German Empire. That only such would be the ones that would be received, or, if you please, even to be the basis of consideration for a convention of world peace by this imperial Czar of the Germans. "My will or his life" was the declaration of the first William as to his political opponent. Prussia to dictate or civilization to die, is the edict of the successor of William, the now Kaiser of the Germans.

Clearly it must be, Senators and Mr. President, that the real object of that reply, as is apparent to many of us who, being lawyers, can analyze the actions of men and the declarations of papers, and clear to all of us, being public men, is that if here had been the object on the part of the Kaiser to aid peace for humanity it would have found expression when the time came and opportunity was offered. These expressions would have been in terms that all men could read. There would not have been the brazen defiance, the audacious ignoring and confusing qualification in this reply to the proposals of the Pope. All said, all expressed, is but to convey the final bold demand that only terms that would serve the interests of the German Empire would be basis upon which peace could be had. Let there be no further delusion.

Mr. President, I am strongly moved to call the attention of the Senate to this disclosure of truth from the record, because I fear that up to this time many of us have indulged a dream that these master murderers in warfare were sincere in their plea for intervention for peace. Many of us believed that we could have cooperation from them in an undertaking that was honorable and laudable to this end. Many of us gave voice on this floor and in other places seeking such a cooperation as we felt would not be inconsistent with the welfare of the United States. Yet, sir, when the President of the United States gave his expression pointing a way to success in response to the plea of the Christian Pontiff, sceptered in the authority of his holy church; let the world understand the reply of the German Kaiser was that which denied to mankind consideration, refused to civilization a hearing, and flouted with contempt the pleas of state and church, while it announced to the world that, so far as it is concerned, it will not consider even from the head of a church of God a proposition that is not wholly consistent with the objects of the German Empire.

Surely hereafter American citizens need not be blind to the peril of their land. They need never let the dream of peace dull their ardor for conflict. It is only conflict that is now left them, or ignominious surrender to the interests of the German Empire. Then, Senators, we will not be indifferent to the fact that for four weeks this reply of the Kaiser has been in preparation. We who are accustomed to public documents of this kind recognize a composite hand of many contributors in this proclamation. It was not sudden nor single in its creation. It is the voice of the Prussian military dynasty. Mr. President, we pause then to ask ourselves what does this document mean in its final effect. Sir, it means that a new element has seized Prussia; that is, the element of merciless power. It is that element that proposes to ignore the German people and defeat the cause of humanity in Germany as well as in America. It is that new element that demands that the power of Prussia shall oppress and overcome the world.

Mr. President, I stood on this floor after the speech of Michaelis, the chancellor, was addressed to the German Parliament and assumed to translate that German address and gave it an interpretation, pointing out that from it was seen a bid for peace. I said it was an expression of anxiety and one of hope that the United States would take up the issue, and upon such fundamental basis as it deemed just, tender measures upon which peace could be had consistent with our doctrine of humanity and liberty. Eminent Senators around me—I see now the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], Mr. LODGE, of Massachusetts, Mr. BORAH, of Idaho—called attention to its specious language. They could not even agree that its words were sincere. I differed from these Senators. I felt, sir, that an opportunity should be had to try the sincerity.

I had two objects. One was, I would not have my Government charged before the world with carrying on a war that would mean the decimation of her children, the destruction of families, and the desolation of the land as long as there was an opportunity to avoid it by any honorable peace and just arbitration. Nor should any other civilization have justification ever to indict this body by having disclosed our denial of an honorable peace consistent with the purpose for which we entered the war where such could have been secured.

It was because of that that I would allow no opportunity to pass without calling the plea for peace to the attention and consideration of the eminent men who occupy the floor. But, sir, I find now that I must concede that, however Michaelis, the chancellor, was sincere and anxious in his desire for immediate peace, he has been overcome by Prussian war mania. All the peace spirit he represented is beaten down. That other power of Prussia, which holds as the only policy of state, blood and iron, has again attempted to subjugate the world against which it has drawn its sword. Mr. President, Herodotus, the ancient historian, tells us that the Scythians worshiped as their god the naked sword. It now seems as though that is now to be the deity to be installed in the temples of Prussia.

Mr. President, the imperial house of Germany took its origin from the first William and from his creed of conquer by power. From that on until the time that Bismarck laid down the doctrine as one of statecraft for its rulers, such creed ruled Prussia, and now is to dominate the world if Prussia can conquer mankind. This policy is described in Germany as the traufschlagen—the beating down. If opposition arises, beat it down; let no time be lost with reasoning. Mr. President, when this movement for peace came to the German rulers from their people, and the demand arose calling to reconcile differences of nations by concessions; there appeared from the voice of German rulers the expressed desire for peace and the purpose to yield to those things which were just, whether to America or any other element in the world. But, sirs, new happenings occurred in Europe, and upon these there promptly arose in the Prussian mind a new possibility. It was the feeling that if they yielded to the demand of peace from their people or from the Pope it would be taken by the world as a concession to the German people as against the military power. That such would be construed as a surrender to the German people and a yielding to their desire for peace. It was feared that this would lead to further demands from the German people for justice as opposed to the military oppression of the military rulers in civil as well as in martial government. This might mean an abdication by the Kaiser, or a civil revolution for reform of German government.

The Prussian princes then proceeded at once to carry out to the fullest extent of their power the doctrine of beating down that opposition, and with such power at their hands they proceeded to first intimidate their own people, then suppress their press and jail any editors who sought by expression even-handed justice for the German people. This was ever done under the imperial charge of sedition or treason against German masters.

Now, sir, I must arouse the attention of the Senate to the true spirit that was behind the proposals of peace. I must awaken the Senate to the falsity of the pious pretense. Senators, when these proposals of peace came to us we had a right to assume they spoke for peace and humanity, but, sirs, now let the civilization of man know that if the valorous people of the United States can not see the virtue in the professed cry of peace coming from well-known Prussian powers it is because that on the very day when President Wilson was beseeching the contending nations to state the terms in detail for which they were fighting, that it may be possible for the United States to serve as mediator to obtain peace on a just compromise, Prussia deliberately resumed her submarine assaults on American commerce and the murder of American citizens.

Let it be remembered that even after this diabolical ingratitude was condoned by us, and the President again came to his people with the proposal of "peace without victory," that Germany might not be a vanquished nation and her people suffer the degradation of defeat, these mad Prussian murderers, in the very week while our efforts in her behalf were pending with the allies, turned in ferocity upon three American ships, each bearing the Stars and Stripes, blazoning to the world that they were not enemies but friends, and these harmless American vessels were splintered by the submarine shot in the night, stolen upon as the midnight assassin steals upon his unguarded victim, and without word of hailing, that reply might show their innocence in all things of enmity; without warning to the humble lives on board, that they might take to their lifeboats, these American ships were shot to pieces, their freight of lives sent to the death as the submarine murderers scurried off in the darkness, leaving their victims dying in the blood-reddeened seas.

Yes; how can we who would love to trust, forget that again, when Michaelis, the German chancellor—but a short while past delivered his speech of proposed peace to the Berlin Parliament—and following it, when the Senator from Illinois—myself—had brought its professed purpose to the attention of the United States Senate for its judgment, in order that no man could say we ignored any just opportunity for a just peace, these Prussian marauders of murder and sea assassins, as reward for our generosity, turned upon a helpless little American bark then in Mediterranean waters, shot it to shatters, and with its poor, helpless sailors sinking to the sea, seized the lifeboats and broke them into splinters, that the floating American seamen should be helpless for life and die the saddest of slow deaths, where wife and children, helpless and homeless, would haunt their dying eyes. Was there ever such invention of cruelty in civilization's annals? Who asks that such as these America shall trust again? And, sirs, this all when Michaelis was confessing to the world that his speech was meant as a bid for peace; when the Austrian foreign minister was telling the world that he aided in the speech, and that it was meant for peace, and Copenhagen, Denmark; and Amsterdam, Holland, told us they had the assurances that peace was the purpose.

And now we call to Europe, to Asia, to the earth, to behold the latest proof of the refusal of Prussia to withhold the hand of murder upon America. But a few weeks since there came from the heart of the Christian director of the world's Roman Catholic Church the proposal to all the warring nations to consider what terms of peace could be entered upon. In response to this benign source, America, as a Christian people, through her Commander, the President of the United States, responded, pointing out where there was a way. Prussia saw—Prussia understood. These Prussian military masters read, re-read, and then from them came the response in misrepresentation of our aims and slander of our purposes. Men, who are Christians of America, I appeal to you now that you hear, and to you who are for a just peace, and you who are for your country, I call upon you to mark that though this pontiff came to the world with his efforts sceptered in the authority of his holy church these Prussian military masters have never to this day commissioned this agency of peace, this Pope of Rome, to assure the United States that Prussia was willing even to cease her submarine warfare on American commerce or would end her murder of American men and women. Prussia refuses now, even through this head of a church of God, promise as condition of peace the end of her attacks on America or the rights of her children. No word of promise to restore to us our rights on the sea and ending the attacks on our people in the ocean. To the contrary, not only no promise through the Prussians, nor any assurance of ceasing their efforts for our destruction, but while the President of the United States and the Pope of Rome and the Governments of the allies and the true people of Germany were taking heed of the prospect of peace on some honorable basis, the Prussian military murderers, to show their defiance of the President of the United States, and to the Pope of Rome and of the heads of the allied Governments, set their engines of death upon the American ships carrying our American soldiers to France that they might be shot to death in the waters of the sea, hoping that they may die, all with each other, "without leaving a trace." And this while the world was pausing to present some possible relief from the continuance of this necessary war. Was there ever such brutal disregard and barbarous treatment of a Christlike proposal as the Prussian princes have given to the Pope of Rome for Europe and to the President of the United States for America? In the face of this history of degrading insult to America, to the President, to a Christian church, what man calling himself an American will now confess himself a Prussian puppet to persuade his people to endure further ignominy without resentment? Surely judgment has not flown to brutish beasts and men have not lost their reason.

Then, Senators, it is not difficult for you now to understand that this paper has now come forth as the deliberate result of the study, of results and consequences, that it might flout the United States and show disdain to our undertaking, while it now betrays the real character it represents of one who desires warfare carried to every point of murder and destruction until the object of the German Empire shall be attained and its interests to the full extent of its oppressive policies be entrenched.

What are these interests? Clearly, now, we see that they are those opposed to all interests of peace, those against all interests of civilization and in violation to all interests of humanity. This exhibition of indifference to the needs of mankind and to the cry of misery in this hour must startle the soul of America. If there are those in the United States who have heretofore felt it was their duty to stand against the United States and to lend by their voice encouragement to oppose their country's action, let them behold this document and ask whether they can now continue their opposition lest they bring themselves to be considered as deliberate cooperators with this conspiracy of the Prussian master not only against America, but against civilization of the world and the Christianity of earth.

Mr. President, what do you think, sir, is the real motive of this change of heart of Prussia from beseeching peace to defiant war? Sir, it is that some form of victory lately had in Russia, combined with the discordances as are seen in the United States have encouraged the Prussian Emperor to believe that at last the hour is really upon them when they may realize the dream long cherished—a world conquest. Sir, may I call to your attention that in the record of Admiral Dewey we find a statement of startling information. We find that Admiral von Goetzen, in 1898, during the Spanish-American War, at a time when we were not without certain difficulties with a certain element of the German Navy, and while Officer von Goetzen was a guest of the United States as a military observer for Germany of our war with Spain in Cuba—he boldly proclaimed to the officers of our Government, saying:

About 15 years from now my country will start her great war. She will be in Paris about two months after the commencement of hostilities. Her move on Paris will be but a step to her real object—the crushing of England. * * * Some months after we finish our work in Europe we will take New York, and probably Washington, and hold them for some time. We will put your country in its place, with reference to Germany. We do not propose to take any of your territory (?), but we do intend to take a billion or so of your dollars from New York and other places. The Monroe doctrine will be taken charge of by us, as we will then have to put you in your place, and we will take charge of South America, as far as we wish to. * * * Don't forget this, and about 15 years from now remember it, and it will interest you. (Naval and Military Record, No. 33, Vol. LII, p. 578.)

This is a part of the communication which Admiral Dewey thought so ominous as to have it submitted to this country. It is to be found in the Naval and Military Records, No. 33, volume 52, page 578. I am at loss to understand why my Government has never allowed this to be published. I now marvel why it was never sent broadcast to our countrymen, that they who heretofore had been in doubt as to their duty might now know the certainty of their sure future course.

Let us not misunderstand the real object of this Prussian war. It was begun to subjugate the world powers wherever possible. In the seas we were found ever in the path of this Behemoth. Then it was that the shock of murder and death was put upon us. These assaults on our lives, our property, and our Nation were on the assumption that we were not prepared to oppose them. Many of us recognized the deplorable condition we were in for national defense. This state of ease was because we were a land of peace; we had not been educated as a people to war. Then there was the other assumption indulged by Prussia, which was that if we were prepared to resent the assault they were powerful enough to overcome our opposition and subjugate us to the full extent of this threat, now produced from their military representative.

Mr. President, therefore it is because Prussia has become of late renewed in its audacity that we have this reply of the Kaiser in the specious and brazen words uttered to one who is an apostle of peace and a spokesman of Christ. This reply, be it remembered, is from one who ever speaks in the name of God when he speaks for his country and for his crown. Yet when he responded to the one who as a preacher represented the peace on earth and good will to men; this that I bring to you is the manner in which the Kaiser flouts the object, and this reply is the method by which he tricks the purpose.

Sir, after this I want to see the face of an American who, now confronting this confession, whether he is here in the Senate or elsewhere, who will hereafter lend himself, directly or indirectly, to the purposes which the Kaiser has set forth to serve only the interests of the German Emperor and crush the noble objects of America. I know that to the contrary will be the resolve of any Senator. It will ring with the cry—

No parleying now—in America is one breath;
We are all with you now, from shore to shore;
Ye men of the Republic, 'tis victory or death.

Then, sirs, let us revive to mind the cause of this war—this just resentment of the United States against nameless wrongs. Hear it, sirs. It is that your America, while in peace with all the world, wronging no nation, injuring no man, has been set upon by Prussia and by Prussian military murderers, your ships shattered in mid-ocean, their commerce drowned, your innocent men blown to fragments, your helpless women shot to death, and your little children cast into the sea, to be crunched and eaten by the animals of the deep.

And all this for no cause but that your United States dared to be a part of the world and in fulfillment of Heaven's law to enjoy the earth and the sea and the fruits thereof, as ordained of God. What other reason is offered anywhere from anyone as justification for the drowning of our property, the pillage of our ships, and the butchery of our people? What wrong is charged to America as done to any man or nation as an excuse for the heinous conspiracy of Prussia to dismember our Republic—to give Nevada, New Mexico, and Arizona to Old Mexico and California to Japan?

What offense has ever been charged to America as the excuse for setting our people against each other in conspiracy to burn their business houses, tear down their homes, and murder in darkness their families? What act of wrong has ever been charged against us, committed against any people on earth, as justification for the world conspiracy set afoot against us in Argentina and Brazil of South America; Sweden, Norway, Holland, and Denmark in Europe? What wrong have we ever done Prussia? What kindness have we ever withheld from her? We have taken Prussia's children to our arms, educated her little ones, welcomed her men to our gates, received her saddened women to our souls. We have given liberty to her oppressed, homes and happiness to their people, nor asked aught in return. We made their people our people, their children our children; where they lived, we lived; where their children were buried, there, too, were ours buried and mourned also. And for all this we are rewarded by the vow to kill our people and destroy our Nation.

Where is the American who will not answer this ingratitude and barbarity with his vow to the world that so long as breath shall be his, love shall be his, and life be his, Prussia shall not prevail? Yes; where is he that shall not swear by the spirit of loved ones gone by, by the hope he has for the boy on his way to duty, by the religion of his Christ and by his faith in Heaven, will he not swear that never, never until Prussia surrenders American rights, makes just restitution for her cruel wrongs, and gives inviolable guaranties of peace and justice for all the future will America ever lay down her arms? Prussia forced America to draw her sword against Germany. America shall now force Prussia to sheathe her sword that is drawn against the world.

And now again I turn to this ancient Senate—yea, to its noble Members—and I say to that Senator who occupies a seat on this floor, wherever he is, that so long as that reply of the Kaiser remains, as it is now, with that daring to America and the audacity to civilization, the man who now raises his voice in America in any assemblage of any kind condemning any measure of his own country, criticizing the undertaking of the United States in its own defense, lends himself deliberately to the interest of the German Empire. Nor can he hide, sir, behind the privileges of prated free speech. Let there be no misunderstanding. This country guarantees free speech. Its patriots inscribed with their very blood the guaranty of that bulwark of liberty. Yet, sir, who are they in America that demand the right to argue against this war of America? Who are those who ask to debate the righteousness of their own country; to dispute the honor of their own men and question the virtue of their own women? Who are those who demand to denounce their country's cause while they praise the purpose of her destroyers? Who are these who cry for constitutional free speech to befool their own land, betray their own citizens, and surrender their own country?

Let us now reply to all these, saying, "Yes; your country guarantees free speech to every American, but that man who uses free speech against America is not the American to whom free speech is guaranteed. In this land there can be no free speech to any man to destroy the freedom of his fellow man. There can never be liberty of speech to an American citizen to destroy the liberty of the American Nation. Let this meaning of our Constitution be now proclaimed as fixed to all mankind." Any other meaning would be—

The scorn of every patriot's name,
Thy country's ruin, and her council's shame.

Mr. President, while the fact that the German Emperor and his advisers exaggerated the differences in the United States and fancied them so great in their chasm and so broad in their widening as to justify the belief that there were elements in the United States that encouraged the war of Germany and discouraged the war of the United States, and while such has done a great deal to revive the belligerent spirit of Prussia since the address for peace of Chancellor Michaelis on the 19th day of July and contributed to the new expression of the Kaiser of bravado and audacity, yet, sir, it is not the only thing that has inspired this new resolve of death to men—destruction to country.

The meek and humble position which Germany took when Michaelis addressed his speech to the Reichstag compared to the insolence and self-glorification that comes from the Kaiser now in the reply to opportunity for peace must have a sinister meaning to every reflective man. We ask what is the other significance than the one disclosing encouragement from divisions and opposition in the United States of certain citizens of the United States? It is, sir, that something had happened in Europe, something transpired in German spheres; it is well for us to consider it now. Prussia assumed, as did the Prussian military princes, that the defeat of the Russians in Riga, along the Rigan Bay and along the Dvina border, meant a success to them and one that strengthened their arms everywhere—one that strengthened their people at home and gave their Prussia a new source of supply to carry them through the conflict. The Prussians dreamed that Russian victories would make up whatever loss might have been suffered by Prussia in any other territory, barricaded by the armies of the allies.

Mr. President, no one more than the Members of the Senate, I am sure, deploras the unhappy situation of Russia, and no one more than ourselves more wholly appreciates what the situation of Russia really means to herself and warns to us. Sir, I fear we in America do not understand what we have to contend with in Russia. There are many distinct Russias in the Russian land of Russia. It fell to my lot upon two occasions, if I may be pardoned a personal reference, in traveling through Russia to spend some time in different portions of that country. There is what is called Bessarabia. That country is an ancient biblical country. It is a land referred to in the Holy Bible. It was afterwards settled by a people called Zamos, and then an ancient people went up of a Latin origin called Bessi. After that there was the converging of those who were part Israelite, part Judean, and part Arabian. They established a country for themselves, which took the name when it was captured by the armies of Russia—or the Cossacks—of Bessarabia, after the words Bessi and Arabia. These people, sir, feel little interest and have felt little interest in what was the general rule of central Russia.

If I may be pardoned, I think I can offer an illustration that will aptly define what I mean. They were as indifferent to central Russia as were the people of Ireland to the welfare of the Crown of England. They felt they were held by the subjugating power of arms from the time of Peter.

Mr. President, there is another part of Russia which we speak of as Crimea, the southern part of Russia, which is as California is to the United States, or, as we may say, as is Italy to Europe; it is the tropical portion of Russia. I recall, which will be of some little interest to Senators who probably have not had time or occasion to consider these distinctions, that in the month of December the lemons, oranges, bananas, pineapples, and other tropical fruits were growing in that land—as beautiful and to the perfection as you find them in California or Florida—in the same month. Those people, therefore, have no interest in central Russia. They feel strangers to the Frigid Zone, along the River Neva, where sits Petrograd, once the St. Petersburg of the Czars. Riga is another border. On that border are Germans, and that we in the Senate may not misunderstand the history of Riga, fancy, if you please, Virginia or Maryland having an opportunity to surrender in a conflict to the District of Columbia as against a yielding to Ohio and Pennsylvania, if you please. You can readily understand that the spirit of those who came from Virginia and Maryland who live here in the District of Columbia in thousands would readily yield more quickly and gladly to the call of Virginia and Maryland than to that of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, or Illinois. So this part of Riga was inhabited by the Germans. When it fell to my lot to have to write something upon this subject matter, this much I was compelled to record, that I saw both at St. Petersburg and afterwards at Moscow that people of that section of Riga were in constant internal conflict, and that conflict was to retake the business from the Germans. Their complaint was that Germany had come into their land and had practically monopolized and appropriated all their business opportunities. So strongly intrenched were the Germans in Riga that through that whole territory there were elected at every election, such as they had, in their municipalities—their zemstvos—only German officials, while the business houses and banking establishments of Riga were all officered by German officers. When the Duma was created one could go as a member from Riga to the Duma only when he was a German by birth or offspring, though professing Russian interests, as an amalgamated Russian. Riga was a German city, Riga Bay a German water, and it was Germany surrendering to Germany, with no Russia to oppose Prussia in all Riga.

So let it be understood that when Riga was captured it was not Russia that was conquered; it was a country that made no fight against the German advance. It was a land that had no interest in Petrograd. It had no hope of welfare from Moscow. It had neither sympathy for the Russian in his fight for liberty nor the hope for a new Russia in the coming Republic. These, sir, were, after all, but the Germans who had gone from Germany yielding to their own Prussia.

Sir, I think you see, as do we all, this new inflated Prussia, however it cried for peace when in distress and when Michaelis sent out his declaration for peace now fancied because of this victory in Riga that it had become strengthened for complete power to crush. Then the once cry of humanity faded upon its lips. The interest of civilization melted as the vapors before the sun. New power having been drawn to it by which it could subjugate humanity and subvert the principles of justice, all the prayers to God which had been sent up before in the voice of the Kaiser were now as an echo that is dead. All the past professions of peace, love, and justice were now shown to be hypocrisy, pretense, and falsehood before the world—all this new presumption of daring and destruction on the assumption of having gathered new strength and reinforcements, giving full power. Then the cry arises, shouting to the world, "Beat down." This was their text in the beginning. It is to slay. It was their purpose at the outset, and to murder opposing mankind. Hear their call to their army. It is a command that Prussian soldiery ravage mankind and decimate civilization. Therefore, sir, I do beseech my comrades in this body that they hereafter shall look to this record, and from this record behold the real truth.

Sir, I have no desolation as to the future of Russia; I have no pessimism as to it. Once a people become fired with the desire of freedom, once they become inspired with the dream of liberty, once they become conscious of these blessings, while they may have many setbacks and repulses, they are never defeated. Time and time again they will return to the conflict, till victory be theirs. They are as those who have touched Paradise; they will never remain in the darker sphere.

Russia may meet obstacles in attaining the acme of mankind—liberty—but freedom will soon be hers. I feel, sir, that the advance on Riga and the capture of that locality was one of the most advantageous circumstances that have transpired in the Prussian war. Do you ask me how I can so reason? Germany had always professed up to that time that she was but beating back Russian armies of the Czar. That she, under no circumstances, sought to take any territory. She moved upon Riga in violation of her pledges; she seized Riga and announced, through the imperial master of the house, "Riga eternally ours." Russia awakened, and then recognized that the enemy's foot was upon her soil and that out of his lips there came flaming a threat to appropriate her land, and thereafter that which was Russian Russia, was to be Prussian Russia, perhaps forever.

To my thinking, sir, there is not a moujik upon his humble little farm, living upon black bread and sleeping upon a bed of straw, but what will be aroused now to a new meaning of that which before no teaching could impart to him and no education inspire. This example of invasion and scene of desolation of the land where his children were born and where his fathers are sleeping, all before his eyes, tell him that the invaders have come for his hearthstone, for his home, for his children, for his sacred places where are buried his dead. I feel, sir, that this will mean a rejuvenation of spirit, the infusing of courage. Sir, it will give life to Russia and bring new Russia before the world conscious of the peril that confronts her. It will bring her armies together, every woman in oath to protect her children, the men in common vow to rescue their land, and the new Republic to march in common step to the music of unity with the Republic of the United States, all in a glorious and victorious fight for liberty of man and freedom of country. Therefore, sir, that which appeared in the beginning a darkness to some men to my reasoning, sir, means the brightness of the future. Sir, such experience was our own. The advance upon us toward Trenton of the forces of the King brought our people in their dark day to a realization of what it all meant, and then came Washington with the new spirit of America, and the result was victory and the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

Sir, there is France. When she came to her birth as a republic she severed in parts on her doorway; she sundered herself on prejudice and in distraction despaired; but as Austria moved upon her border and she realized that Austria was really advancing upon her soil to possess France, differences were laid down, disputes forgotten, France came together, the true Republic was reborn, and the tricolor floated against heaven as her standard. There it is to-day, waving over her new-born free land, the ensign of a won liberty. I contemplate these scenes, sir, not in despair; I behold them with encouragement. Yet I am not blind to the fact that it is this evidence which Prussia has taken to herself as a new license of power, a new encouragement of authority and despotism.

Sir, the effect in Russia, I feel, will be continued for the good of that nation, as the new developments which have been brought to the attention of our people must redound to the good of the United States. This revelation at Riga will act on new Russia as the Zeppelins sent by Germany to England acted on England, as the revealed corruption of Bernstorff in the United States and the Prussian conspiracy against the United States in Scandinavia and South America has acted upon the citizens of the United States—to awaken every man to the presence of the foe, unite every man against the enemy, and call up in Russia what Prussia has now called up in America—union and unity.

Sir, I have adverted to the attempts by Prussia to corrupt the avenues of truth in America to serve Prussian vengeance on us. Sir, I do not understand this. You scholars of the classics recall that Cato of the Roman Senate was wont every morning to behold the stars as he saw them glittering in the early morn after the night, and watch the sun to rise, then exclaim: "The gods are with us," and then proclaim his curse on Carthage, crying out that Carthage, for its sins against the stranger within its gates—Carthage must go—Delenda est Carthago. But, sir, I do not know what we have done for which Prussia should register her vow in hell that America must be destroyed! Surely, Mr. President, I need not dwell longer to point out that never again need there be any fear of any citizen of America failing now to see what all this means, nor, sir, failing to understand this reply and appreciate its defiance to us. Each American will stand amazed as he sees it in its breathing of destruction to all we love and all we have lived for.

Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] in his address proclaimed that our soldiers had gone forth to France to fight. Truly, sir, such is the sublime event. Our children from all our land moved out but yesterday to the command of their country. Many are now and more to be in foreign lands. Our boys stand in thousands upon the battle ridge of murdering Prussia. From their souls stretch invisible the threads woven from the hearts of American mothers. From every fireside and field of our dear land these chords throb with the love of man and the prayers of women. From these cometh the voice crying unto Heaven, "Oh, God, they are ours; give victory to their arms and give them back to the arms of their country."

Who is there among us that pleads for destruction of our children and would have death to our sons and dishonor to our land? If such craven can be, may his head never be seen to blacken the light or his guilty face be known to American civilization. For it is of such as he that it is written:

They shall be cast into outer darkness, where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Mr. President, Chatham, standing in the English Parliament, contemplating the persecution of America by the Hanoverian King of England, cried out, "If I were an American, I never would lay down my arms—never, never." So, sir, in the spirit of the soul of freedom, crying to us for justice—for humanity—we this day send our greeting to the world, and unto it proclaim that when lying and deceit of kings and emperors has ceased, and when through the efforts of a liberty-loving German people justice shall again be restored to America, American rights on land and sea secured before all the world, and the holy cause for which America has entered this war has been established, peace—God's peace with righteousness—shall be welcomed by America, welcomed for herself and for the earth. But until these guaranties for the future justice and right to America are established, the sons and daughters of this sacred land, recalling the sacrifices of their patriotic dead to found here on this continent a land of freedom, a country of justice, a people of righteousness, and remembering their children who this night rest on arms, awaiting the call of the to-morrow, these, our Americans in all America and all over America, have but one course, one purpose, one cry—our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country!

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). House bill 2316 is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] indicated that he would like to be present during the further consideration of this bill. He is not able to be present to-day. If no other Senator cares to address the Senate upon the measure, I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be laid aside.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 25, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, in whose sacred presence we dwell, come now in all the fullness of Thy power and possess our minds and hearts.

Open Thou the crystal fountain
Whence the living waters flow;
Let the fiery, cloudy pillar
Lead us all the journey through;
Strong Deliverer,
Be Thou still our strength and shield—

That we may worship Thee in spirit and in truth, by the thoughts that we think, the words that we speak, and the deeds that we do, and thus exalt ourselves and glorify Thy Holy Name in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, September 21, 1917, was read and approved.

AMERICAN PATRIOTISM.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, those of us who had the pleasure of serving in this House with the Hon. Nathan Kendall, of Iowa, remember well what a forceful and eloquent orator he is. On Labor Day he delivered a patriotic address at Boone, Iowa, and I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a short extract from that speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an excerpt from a speech made by Mr. Kendall, at one time a prominent Member of the House, at Boone, Iowa, on Labor Day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extract referred to is as follows:

EXTRACT FROM AN ADDRESS ON "AMERICAN PATRIOTISM," DELIVERED BY N. E. KENDALL, AT BOONE, IOWA, ON LABOR DAY, 1917.

What an inheritance for all of us, the patriotism of '76, of '61, of '98! Do we fully and thoroughly appreciate it—all the unmatched sacrifices it has sustained, and all the unbounded blessings it has secured? Are we ready to emulate the unflinching devotion which our predecessors always have evinced for the weal of our own country and to exemplify that wider humanitarianism which shall comprehend the welfare of all the countries of mankind? Have we hearts enkindled by that almost divine benevolence which commiserates the afflictions of all peoples everywhere, and whose unselfish ministry shall glorify beyond comparison the international philanthropy of 1917? As I speak to you to-day the world is on fire with the fierce flames of war, and the red sparks of ruin are falling in every direction. We prudently avoided all entanglement in the mad debauchery, even while grievance accumulated upon grievance to affront an ingenious but self-respecting people; and we patiently restrained our just intervention until it became obvious to the dullest discernment that every bright prospect of free institutions was in imminent jeopardy. When that overwhelming disaster was threatened we could not continue at the same time unallied and unashamed. We had to be courageous or craven; and since our fathers in their weakness marched erect, breast forward, against a British King, their sons in their strength could not crawl supinely, necks bowed, before a German Kaiser. And so we fight again—fight that the maxims of the Magna Charta may not be relaxed; fight that the Declaration of Independence may not be rescinded; fight that the guaranties of the Constitution may not be repealed; fight that the indefeasible rights of men may not be revoked; fight that the Sermon on the Mount may not be reviled!

"In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in His bosom that transfigures you and me;
As He died to make men holy, let us die to make men free!"

The cause is worthy of us; God help us to be worthy of the cause. Heretofore we spoke softly but without avail; hereafter we strike sternly and without reserve. And now that we are in the deplorable business, it must be understood in every chancellery under the sun that we will not withhold our heavy hand until the monstrous menace of Prussian militarism is utterly obliterated from the earth. That consummation so devoutly desired will not be easy, but it will not be impossible, for

"Thrice armed is he who hath his quarrel just!"

And our quarrel is just. For atrocities innumerable we arraign the Emperor Wilhelm before the quickened conscience of this Christian age. The ravishment of Belgium! The spoliation of Serbia! The dismemberment of Poland! The devastation of France! The coalition with the unspeakable Turk! The conspiracy with the treacherous Carranza! The brutal murder of Edith Cavell! The relentless massacre of neutral noncombatants on the open ocean! And all for the wicked aggrandizement of one man, with mailed fist uplifted everywhere, intoxicated with ambition for unbridled power. This carnival of outlawry must stop, and we intend to stop it! The undertaking which must engross our unremitting energies is no holiday escapade, but we shall conclude it nobly, because every American at home and abroad and aloft and afield will acquit himself in this urgency as becomes a patriot. Perhaps I ought not to advert to the critical difficulty of our over-seas situation, but I think I may properly say this: For 25 years we have tolerated the visionary enthusiast in his romantic dream of an ideal day when the brotherhood of man shall be as real as the fatherhood of God; when every mortal shall love his fellow mortal better than he loves himself; and when the artillery of modern warfare shall be displayed as curiosities in the antiquity museums of the universe. Fascinated by that agreeable hallucination we have serenely pursued the even tenor of our way, beating our swords into plowshares and our spears into pruning hooks, while the most implacable antagonist of popular government in recorded history has been steadily preparing to subjugate the Caucasian race. And now that the frightful cataclysm is upon us we suddenly recover our sanity to perceive two things: First, that the millennial dawn of our fanciful dreamer has not only not arrived, but is not yet within sensible prophecy; and second, that we forthwith need for our own immunity the best ships and the best guns that can be contrived by the ingenuity of man. We awake at last from the demoralizing delusion which so long enthralled us, and while we still reprobate violence and advocate conciliation, we know now that the temporal salvation of any State of first consequence is contingent upon an ample army supplemented by an adequate navy; never for the prosecution of aggressive or unwarranted war, but always as a prerequisite to uninterrupted and abiding peace. Men, money, munitions—Congress must provide them all abundantly and without delay. And every man of us must help to the uttermost, no matter where he happened to be born, nor how he has hitherto voted. This is no time for internal indecision, much less domestic discord. If we are to make any substantial contribution toward overthrowing the merciless Moloch who is now deluging the elder hemisphere with blood, it is incumbent upon us immediately to interpose an unbroken array of bayonets against his satanic activities. We must rally to the world's rescue at once and unanimously; not as partisans, but as Americans! I apprehend everybody knows, who is familiar with newspaper comment, that in the balloting which occurred in November I was not an adherent of Woodrow Wilson, and that in three States I exerted myself with unwearied diligence to prevent his reelection. If it shall be intimated that my labors were not particularly effective it will likewise be conceded that I cried aloud and spared not infirmities which appeared to me incurable. I think I love my party, and I was against the Democratic leader in the last campaign as candidate for President; but I know I love my country, and I am with the present Executive in the pending emergency as Commander in Chief of the Armies of the United States! American rights have been invaded, American blood has been spilled, American lives have been extinguished, and we are at war—not with the proletariat of Germany, but with the autocracy of Germany. It is the age-old conflict between right and justice and liberty on the one hand, and wrong and oppression and absolutism on the other. To remain isolated and aloof when these fundamental forces are in a death grapple would be too base, too cowardly, too infamous to be contemplated. And so we unfurl again the flag which always symbolizes rectitude, and unsheathe again the sword which always enforces freedom. We battle now, as in the past, for the extirpation of despotisms and the establishment of democracies; for the expulsion of monarchs and the enfranchisement of men. And at this vital juncture I say to you to-day, as Otis said to his Massachusetts neighbors after Bunker Hill: "No man can be passive while right is on the scaffold and wrong is on the throne!" And as Douglass said to his Springfield constituents after Sumter: "Whoever is not for the Government is against it, and whoever is against the Government is a traitor!" Oh, my dear friends, in the great tribulation which is before us may we recall every sacred battle field and every patriot grave, and may that memory keep us true and steadfast to the end.

"Lord God of hosts, be with us yet;
Lest we forget, lest we forget!"

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5901. An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign Governments and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 5901. An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign Governments and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2156) to authorize the exploration for and disposition of potassium.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5335) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., authorized by an act approved January 28, 1916.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. SHAFBOTH, and Mr. POINDEXTER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. NORTON rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will suspend for a moment. The Chair will recognize him in a short time. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is recognized.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege, upon which I desire to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the question of privilege.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, on Friday of last week, September 21, 1917, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] addressed the House in reference to a note that had been sent by former Ambassador Bernstorff from this country to his Government in Germany. This note as it is reported is in the following terms:

I request authority to pay up to $50,000 in order as on former occasions to influence Congress through the organization you know of, which can perhaps prevent war.

I am beginning in the meantime to act accordingly.

In the above circumstances a public official German declaration in favor of Ireland is highly desirable, in order to gain the support of Irish influence here.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] in the course of his remarks said in reference to this, among other things, as appears on pages 7305 and 7306 of the RECORD:

If I were permitted to express my opinion, I could name 13 or 14 men in the two bodies who, in my judgment, have acted in a suspicious manner.

On Saturday morning the Washington Post of this city reported Mr. HEFLIN as making this statement:

The Alabama Member demanded an immediate investigation late yesterday of the Von Bernstorff matter, using the phrase above, and continued:

"I demand that this matter be investigated and that the guilty Members be expelled from Congress in disgrace.

"I believe some of this money has reached some Members of Congress I know. Bernstorff's telegram was an insult to Congress and to the country." He continued:

"I have heard a story that there is a gambling room in Washington where pro-German and peace-at-any-price Members of Congress get their pay by being extraordinarily lucky at cards."

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Dakota yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. NORTON. Just a moment. The gentleman from Alabama, the paper says, continued:

I could name 13 or 14 Members of this House and the Senate who have acted in a very suspicious fashion, and I feel that this matter should be very fully investigated.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Not now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. NORTON. I desire to say—

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, in order that we may have a full House to hear this matter discussed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-two Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question of on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Fairchild, G. W.	Kreider	Rouse
Anthony	Fairfield	La Follette	Rowe
Baer	Fitzgerald	La Guardia	Rowland

Edmonds	Kless, Pa.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 283 Members, a quorum, answered to their names.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. Now, this is likely to be a rather exciting day for more reasons than one, and the Chair announces that he is going to keep order here to-day, and if any gentleman disturbs the proceedings he will harness him up by the Sergeant at Arms. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the statement reported in the Record and in the newspapers as having been made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], charging the membership of this House with being corrupt, I maintain involves a question of the highest privilege of the House, and I desire to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have an opportunity to reply.

The SPEAKER. Now, that is this way. The gentleman will wait a minute. The gentleman has a right to raise the question of the privilege of the House and if the gentleman from Alabama has any question of privilege when the gentleman from North Dakota concludes his statement the Chair will recognize him, and if he has not a question of privilege he will not. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, this House of Representatives is the greatest legislative body in the world. It is in this country the one legislative branch of the Government that is most representative of all the people. Anything that tends to destroy the confidence of the American people in the House of Representatives or in its membership tends to break down and destroy our form of government. [Applause.] It is very evident to any student of history that in this country during the past few years there has been a clear purpose and studied attempt by certain selfish interests and by certain newspaper publications to destroy in the minds of the people of this country confidence in the House of Representatives and the membership thereof. [Applause.]

Few, if any, accusations of dishonesty have been made against any individual Member of the House by these interests and these publications, but from one end of the country to the other general incompetency, dishonesty, and corruption has been insinuated against the entire Congress. I have never seen where any Member, or any particular number of Members, have been specifically singled out by any of these publications or any of these interests. The insinuations and charges made have always been indefinite but none the less effective in spreading the poison of distrust. The people throughout this country for several years, due to this sort of propaganda, have had some doubts as to the integrity and honesty of the membership of this body. But now, gentlemen of the House, what will the people henceforth think and what will they say since on last Saturday morning there was heralded all over this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, in every newspaper of importance, the statement that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], a Member of this great body, said that he could point out 13 or 14 Members of this Congress who have acted suspiciously and, inferentially, who have received part of this $50,000 reported to have been asked from the German Imperial Government by Count von Bernstorff.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. No; I can not yield now. Gentlemen, we may talk of disloyalty, we may talk of men who are traitors to this country, and we may talk of pacifists, but I do not know of any greater crime that can be committed against this country and its people; I do not know of any greater injury that can be done our form of representative government than for a Member of this body, of this great legislative body, to charge against his fellow Members falsely that they have been corrupt, and that they have been taking money to influence them in their actions in this House. [Applause.] Gentlemen, if that charge is true—and I can say for myself, having been in this House now for nearly five years, that I do not believe there is a scintilla of truth in it—but if it be true there is no punishment severe enough to deal out to such a man or such men if they can be found. [Applause.]

On the other hand, gentlemen, if it is false, apologies on the part of the Member of this body who made that statement will not undo the evil that has been done. [Applause.] Having willfully made that false statement and having given it out to the press of this country, having caused it to be heralded from ocean to ocean, and having caused it to sink down deep into the minds and the hearts of the people of this country, if he knelt down on his marrowbones in humblest apology before this House, he could not undo the evil he has done. No sentence and no punishment severe enough can be dealt out to that kind of a character. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, the best friend the American people have in this country, the greatest safeguard the American people have in this Nation to-day, is the American House of Representatives. [Applause.] There should not be permitted to exist a condition where even the faintest suspicion of dishonesty can lie against any Member of this House. If I had a suspicion against the honesty or integrity of any man in this House, I would not insinuate it, but I would be man enough to investigate it and find out if it were true, and if it were true, then I would present the facts to this House. [Applause.]

The Washington Post says that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] said:

I believe some of this money has reached some Members of Congress I know. I could name 13 or 14 Members of the House and the Senate who have acted in a very suspicious fashion, and I feel that this matter should be very fully investigated.

I, too, now feel that it should be very fully investigated, and that the gentleman from Alabama should be obliged, should be required, to prove his statement to this House and to the country or accept the punishment, in so far as it can be given, that a false statement of that kind richly deserves. [Applause.]

Gentlemen of the House, in fairness to the American people, in fairness to our splendid form of government, this body can not permit such accusations as this to go unchallenged and unpunished.

Further, gentlemen, I wish to call attention to a reported statement in the Washington Post of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]. This is reported in the Washington Post of Saturday, September 22, 1917. The Post in its write-up of the House of Representatives says:

Representative HOWARD of Georgia, said that "he could point to the men in this House who, he believed, received money. Their actions certainly indicate it, and they are certainly more prosperous now than they ever have been before."

Then, in reported interviews on page 11 of the Washington Post of Saturday, September 22, 1917, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] is quoted as follows:

Mr. HOWARD. This money was not all used for telegrams. Some was used directly, and I think I can pick out the men who got it. They look a whole lot more prosperous than they ever did before.

Gentlemen, I shall offer a resolution later to-day requiring these two Members to appear before a committee of the House and substantiate the truth of these statements or submit themselves to the punishment that they well deserve for making these statements if they can not substantiate them to be true. [Applause.] I desire to say further, gentlemen, that it clearly devolves on the membership of this body to maintain before the country its self-respect, its honor, its integrity, and its good character. It seriously devolves upon it to maintain its character and reputation for the highest honor and the highest integrity, so that it may have the fullest confidence of every good man and every good citizen of this great Republic.

I have been grievously surprised, I have been deeply shocked, to think that there could be any man in this body so small, so mean, so thoughtless, on account of high ambition or otherwise, as to make the false charges that were made last Friday in the House against the membership of this House. No love or aspiration that any man may have for publicity over this country, no desire that he may have to reach the United States Senate or some other position [applause] would warrant him to make such a false and infamous charge against this House. [Applause.] And no apology that he can make now or from now until his dying day will ever atone for the wrong that he has done the membership of this House and the country. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from North Dakota has read remarks attributed to me from the Washington Post which I did not make. I desire to discuss that question and to reply to the remarks made against me by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

The SPEAKER. The Chair is rather inclined to think it is a question of privilege. It is a very close shave. Still the gentleman is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is not a pleasant thing to me to have to criticize the men with whom I serve. It is very unpleasant. I regret that things have happened to cause me to have the views that I have expressed on one or two former occasions about the conduct of certain men who sit with me in this body. But, gentlemen, the soldiers are going off to fight; they are going to do unpleasant things—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. A point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman is not discussing a question of personal privilege or privilege of the House, nor laying the foundation to do so, nor stating a question of personal privilege or privilege of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] will confine himself entirely to the matter on which he claims he has a question of privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. I had hoped that the gentleman from Kansas would be willing to permit me, after the charges that have been made against me, to speak fully and freely anything that I feel is pertinent on this occasion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to his question of privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON], reading from the Post, attributes to me a statement saying that I had expressed the opinion that this money had reached certain Members of Congress. I made no such statement. I stated in my speech on this floor that I did not know of any Member who had been influenced by the fund that Bernstorff is said to have used in his efforts to influence Congress. I tried to interrupt the gentleman [Mr. NORTON] when he first started his speech to tell him that, but he would not permit me to do so. I did not know then why so many Republicans had been assembled on that side so early in the day. It seems now that he wanted to take snap judgment upon me in this matter. And I recall, Mr. Speaker, that I had a controversy with him on one occasion when he referred to the allies as our "so-called allies."

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will confine himself to the question of privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am trying to do that.

The SPEAKER. Well, the gentleman is digressing.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have not said that any Member has been influenced by German money. I have made no such charge. But I did say that I could mention some Members whose conduct, according to my judgment, had been suspicious.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will you name them? [Applause and cries of "Name them!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend until I get order. I announced that the first man I caught disturbing these proceedings I will have the Sergeant at Arms get him. I propose to keep order here to-day. [Applause.] The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. HEFLIN. I said, Mr. Speaker, that if I were called upon or permitted I could name some gentlemen whose conduct, according to my way of thinking, had not been loyal to our country since the war with Germany commenced. I remember a former occasion here when remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Gardner, were up for consideration by the House, and I voted to let his remarks remain in the Record because I thought that they were true. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to bear my part of the burden of this war, and I am willing to do my duty, although it be unpleasant, in order to serve my country in this critical time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order.

The SPEAKER. What point of order?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That the gentleman is not proceeding to state a question of personal privilege or the privileges of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker passed on that; that he did have a question of privilege, and that it was a very close shave whether it was or not. If the gentleman rises to the point that the gentleman from Alabama is not sticking to his question of privilege, the Chair will—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the point I am insisting on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair admonished the gentleman to stick to his question of privilege without these digressions.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to discuss the question of privilege, and I would like to do it in my own way.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Did you have an interview with the reporter of the Washington Post?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not know that I was being interviewed by a reporter of the Washington Post.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. That was last Friday. Did or did you not say what was reported to have been said by you in the issue of the Washington Post last Saturday, wherein you are reported to have stated that there was a gambling house down town where Members of Congress go and earn easy money if they were on the German side of the controversy? Did you or did you not?

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, I do not yield any further.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. That was a part of the charges.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say anything of the sort. I made no such statement on the floor of the House or elsewhere. I was talking out in the lobby about rumors of spies being here in Washington. They are here now. They are doubtless in the gallery right now. They have been here all the winter.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the words of the gentleman be taken down, in that he has just stated that there are spies here.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not on the floor. I did not say that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman denies the statement, and I demand that that part of his remarks be taken down in which he said, "They are here now."

Mr. HEFLIN. I had no reference to the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the words of the gentleman from Alabama be taken down.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman denies it, and denies it openly. I withdraw my demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed with his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not mean on the floor of the House. If I thought that there were spies in here, I could not prove it, and I would not make a statement of that sort. But my opinion is that every day there are German spies in the gallery of this House. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Alabama is not addressing himself to the question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains that part of the point of order so far as the last remarks of the gentleman are concerned.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may be allowed to proceed in order to explain his position.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair recognized him to do.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to have the opportunity to explain in my own way.

The SPEAKER. But the rules about personal privilege are so stiff that—

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed in his own way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. HEFLIN] be allowed to proceed in his own way. Is there objection?

Mr. MEEKER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I rise to inquire just what the question of personal privilege is to which the gentleman from Alabama has risen to address himself?

The SPEAKER. The question of personal privilege, as the Chair understood it, is based on statements in the Washington Post as to what the gentleman from Alabama said. That is what he based his request on.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, then does not any legitimate discussion of that question of personal privilege involve this, and this only: Is the statement of the Washington Post, as reported in that paper and which purports to have been made by the gentleman from Alabama to a reporter or somebody else, true or false? The gentleman's question of privilege then can be settled by his rising before this body and denying the statement in the Washington Post. It does not involve his going into the fact that the boys are going into the trenches, or 40 other things calculated to start the tears in a miscellaneous audience.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled on that.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have no question of personal privilege with the gentleman from Alabama. I am not called upon to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Nobody interrupted the gentleman [Mr. NORRIS] who was speaking against me. He was permitted to say anything that he wished to say. Now, you want to prevent me from replying as I want to reply.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman's statement when he asked me to yield, I will say that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORRIS] addressed himself to the question of personal privilege, and only to that. He read what the gentleman from Alabama said on the floor of this House.

He read what the gentleman is reported to have said as his statements were printed in the Washington Post of this city. He characterized those statements as unjust to the membership individually and as a whole. He said nothing else, and the gentleman should confine himself to proving whether the statements against him were true or false.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is doing his everlasting best to confine the gentleman from Alabama to his question of privilege and will continue to do so, and every time he strays off the reservation he will call him to order. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Florida rise?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield to me just a moment? I just want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is a matter of very great importance, and I think gentlemen are pursuing the wrong course right now. I wanted to suggest that the gentleman from Alabama be allowed in his own way to make his defense to this charge.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama—

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If we shut him off, the American people are going to say we do not want the facts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] not five minutes ago made that same request, and it was objected to.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I objected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] be allowed to proceed in his own way. Is there objection?

Mr. MEEKER. I object.

Mr. MONDELL. The regular order is the question of privilege.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to offer a suggestion. The question seems to be not only what the gentleman said to newspaper men but what he actually said on the floor. If there is a question as to what the gentleman said on the floor, why not read the stenographer's notes and see what he said—the original notes—and that would expedite that part of the controversy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that some gentlemen on the Republican side do not want me to have my say in response to the speech made against me by the gentleman from North Dakota. They talk of how fair I ought to be in my expressed views of certain Members of this House, but they show their spirit of fair dealing in their unfair treatment of me this morning, in denying me the opportunity to answer the charges and the speech made against me by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purposes does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. LITTLE. I rise to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed out of order for 10 minutes, providing he answers first the question of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama be allowed to proceed in his own way for 10 minutes, provided he answers the question of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. MEEKER. Reserving the right to object—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

Mr. MEEKER. I have made, and will make, my objections on the ground that once in a while the gentleman from Alabama should obey the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the charge made against me—

Mr. LITTLE. The consent was on condition that he answer Mr. CARAWAY first.

The SPEAKER. He has not answered the question of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in reply to that—

Mr. RUCKER. I understood the gentleman over there objected to that request.

The SPEAKER. He did not. Nobody objected. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have my opinion as to whether men have been loyal or not, and I will not accept the 10 minutes under those circumstances. Probably gentlemen would move to strike my words from the RECORD if I should name them. I have in my mind Members—a few—who, in my judgment, have not been loyal to our flag.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding to answer the question of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], and that he is not confining himself to the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama does not have to answer the question of the gentleman from Arkansas unless he wants to.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And he is not proceeding to confine himself to the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. He has the floor on the question of personal privilege.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He is not addressing himself to the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has listened very closely, and whenever the gentleman from Alabama has strayed from the question of privilege the Chair has been trying to get him back to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that it appears to me that some gentlemen on the Republican side do not intend to permit me to say what I would like to say on the question of personal privilege. They must have had an understanding that certain ones would rise and continue to make points of order to keep me from saying what I wanted to say.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is not addressing himself to the question of personal privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said in the beginning, I have not said that I thought any Member got money from the Bernstorff fund. I have not made that statement anywhere, in private conversation or upon the floor of this House. I would like to be permitted to proceed as the Chair permitted the gentleman from North Dakota to proceed, without interruption. And again, I said nothing about knowing of a place where gambling was going on in the city, but I will tell you what I did say about that. It has been rumored around here for months that there was a gambling place in Washington run by a German, where pacifists and slackers played cards, and where those favorable to the German Government won money easily.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman is not confining himself to the question of privilege, but to repeating false charges already made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama rose to a question of privilege on what was accredited to him in the Washington Post as being said by him. The gentleman from Alabama raises the question of privilege on what was printed in the Washington Post outside of what he said on the floor of the House. It is the Chair's recollection that a part of the statement in the Washington Post accredited to the gentleman from Alabama was that he said there was a gambling house somewhere in this city frequented by pro-Germans—

A MEMBER. And Members.

The SPEAKER. And Members, may be, where it was easy for them to win money.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say Members.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I decline to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am kindly disposed toward the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. I decline to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman has shown a disposition to be unfair to me, and I decline to yield to him.

Mr. Speaker, this is a serious charge made against me by the gentleman from North Dakota, and he was permitted to speak as long as he wanted to and say anything that he desired to say. Nobody interfered with him or interrupted him, but when I ask the opportunity to make reply to the charges against me half a dozen or a dozen Republicans rise and make points of order to interrupt me and keep me from making reply.

But, Mr. Speaker, what I said is printed in the Record; action by the House can not take from me impressions that men make upon my mind by their conduct. Why not say that a Member's conduct is suspicious if it is suspicious? I could recite the things that some have done, but you would not permit me to do it; you would strike it out of the Record. I never said that any of the Members had been corrupted by money. I do not know what influenced them, but I do know that some have not, according to my way of thinking, been loyal to this Government since the war began.

Mr. GORDON. Name them.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not yield to the gentleman from Ohio for any purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HEFLIN. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I will not. I know what the gentleman is driving at. Mr. Speaker, if this House shall decide that a committee shall be appointed to make some investigation, and if it is the judgment of this House that I express my opinion of the men who have not been loyal, and who are not loyally supporting the Government and standing by the Commander in Chief, I will name them. [Applause.] Of course I can not prove anything. [Applause.] No; I can not prove anything, because the mysterious workings of the Bernstorff organization can not be found out very easily, but the Bible tells us that "the tree is known by its fruits," and I judge these men by what they do and say. That is the way to judge whether they are loyal or disloyal. A man can not be for and against his Government at one and the same time.

If I know my own heart, I am trying to serve my country. I deny the insinuation of the gentleman from North Dakota. I do not want any publicity. I have no ambition that I desire to serve by doing these unpleasant things. I am doing my duty as God gives me the light to see it. It is unpleasant, gentlemen, it is unpleasant for the boys who are fighting, but I promised the Ohio and Alabama troops in a speech in the capital of my State that I would do all that I could to keep anybody from shooting them in the back.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will confine himself to the question of privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, if I were permitted to continue my remarks as I would like to, and if I could speak to the American people on this subject, I might make some disclosures that would lead to something interesting to every loyal American citizen. But some gentlemen do not want me to speak thus freely and frankly. They want to confine me to a question that they consider is the privileged question and nothing else. They let one man proceed and say all that he wants to say about every phase of the question, but they refuse to allow me to say what I would like to say.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order; that he is not discussing the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that he is sticking very close to it.

Mr. MONDELL. And that he is repeatedly violating the rules.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Alabama grossly offends the rules about privilege the Chair will stop him, but he was not doing it then.

Mr. HEFLIN. No, Mr. Speaker; and I do not want to grossly offend against the rules, nor to offend against them in the slightest way. I owe a duty to this House and I owe a duty to my country, and I am trying to perform those duties as best I can, and I have judged Members here by what they have done and said, and that is what I meant when I said the conduct of some had been suspicious. I did not say that they had received money. I made no such statement. I said in my speech here Friday that I did not know of any Member who had been influenced in that way.

As to the gambling house, that was something that was said outside in the lobby, and in this way: We were talking about women spies who had been in the city and men spies who had been here—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I rise for two purposes. The gentleman is talking about women spies in this city, and is not addressing himself to any question of personal privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was stating what occurred in that conversation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I call attention to this language in Jefferson's Manual:

The arraignment of the motives of Members is not permitted, and the speakers have intervened to prevent it in the early practice, preventing even the mildest imputations.

The gentleman is arraigning the motives of the membership of 13 or 14 by practically insinuating that they are traitors to their country. He is called upon to name them, and does not do it, but digresses and talks about female spies.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit, the Chair is familiar with that rule—that one Member must not reflect upon the motives of another—but frequently it is done so quickly that no one, the Speaker nor anyone else, can intervene and stop it, and sometimes there is a little of it that the Speaker can not stop; but no one, of course, ought to reflect upon the motives of anyone else, although in the heat of debate it is frequently done. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I was referring to one of the things that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Norton] read from the Washington Post, a statement attributed to me. I was telling what occurred, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] made a point of order against me. That is a part of the thing that was read. What I said in that conversation was, when this talk about rumors of spies and the activities of German spies in Washington, and so on, was under discussion, that it had been rumored that there was a gambling house run by a German where slackers and pacifists played, and that those who were friendly to Germany won easily at the game. That is all that I said. I do not know where such a gambling house is, if it exists. I was talking about what the rumor was, and so on.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Did the gentleman also say in that connection that there was a gambling house in Washington—where pro-German and peace-at-any-price Members of Congress get their pay by being extraordinarily lucky at cards?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not. I said nothing of the kind—where peace-at-any-price Members got their pay. I used no such expression.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. That is the way the Washington Post has it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I stated what I said, and I do not know that I have committed any crime by stating that. There may be such a place, and I may believe that there is such a place, and if I knew where it was I would say so. If this House requires that I name the men who have, according to my judgment, done disloyal acts I will name them. Gentlemen, I am willing to take the test in any way that you want to put it. I have consecrated myself to my country and its cause and so help me God I am going to serve her as faithfully as I know how. I am going to stand by the Commander in Chief. I am going to be faithful to the boys who are going off to fight and to die for our rights and liberties, and I do not propose that any Member shall carry on a propaganda which appears to me to be against my country without denouncing it and branding it as I think it ought to be denounced and branded. I am going to do that, gentlemen. I think that the House ought to encourage me in doing that. I owe it to the House and I owe it to the country to do that. Let us stand together, gentlemen, in this trying hour, and if there are 13 or 14 men who are acting in a suspicious manner let the light of publicity fall upon them. They have already been talked about in the newspapers. I have referred to some of them in a speech on the floor of this House. They know who they are. Let us be fair and honest with one another and faithful to the country; let us have the courage to do our duty.

I did say in my speech that there were 13 or 14 in Congress whose conduct, according to my judgment, had been suspicious. It has, gentlemen of the House, and you can not take that impression out of my mind. They made that impression upon me by their own conduct and I am not going to get up here and tell you now that I have no such opinion on this matter, because I have it. They have not been loyal according to my way of thinking. You can not take that impression out of my mind. They know who I am talking about. But if this House wants me to name them I will do so. That is all that I can say. Mr. Speaker, I wish that you had given me an opportunity to discuss this matter fully and fairly. I never thought that the time would come when a Member of this House could not speak fully and freely under a charge like this, but that opportunity has been denied me to-day.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes on a business matter. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have been greatly honored, as you have been honored, by the good people of this country in representing an intelligent Christian people on the floor of this House. The people of the eighth congressional district of Michigan have honored me now for nearly 20 years in that manner; but after reading in the Record and after obtaining a copy at my request of the original notes taken down by the stenographer of the gentleman's speech on last Friday, if I am one of the 13 or 14 men that he mentions I am entirely unfit to represent an honorable people on the floor of this House.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of order.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from Michigan, whom I am very fond of, is undertaking to discuss this matter, when I understood that he got the 10 minutes to discuss a business proposition.

The SPEAKER. Maybe the Chair was mistaken in putting that in.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will not permit anybody here or there to speak if I can help when I can not get the opportunity to speak myself against the charge.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak on the question of personal privilege and will confine my remarks to the question of personal privilege, if I am in order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has a question of personal privilege, he will state it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the gentleman's remarks on Friday reflect upon my honor as a Member of this House.

The SPEAKER. How?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's basis of whether or not it is a question of privilege?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As I understood it, the original question of privilege raised by the gentleman from North Dakota reflects on the whole membership of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota rose to the question of the highest privilege, not a question of personal privilege.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly.

Mr. HEFLIN. If I can aid the gentleman from Michigan any I will tell him he is not one.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of the privilege of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please state it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to read from the gentleman's remarks?

The SPEAKER. That is just exactly what the Chair wants the gentleman to do.

Mr. FORDNEY. I read from the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama as furnished me by the stenographer at my request. He said:

If I were permitted to express my opinion, I could name 13 or 14 in the two bodies who, in my judgment, have acted in a suspicious manner.

Further on the gentleman said:

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the German Government carries out that part of his suggestion. Now, then, Count von Bernstorff said he was proceeding—to do what?—to use that $50,000. For what purpose? To influence the Congress of the United States. Now, then, has that been done? Where was that money spent? Whose pocket did it reach? I must admit that the conduct of some that I know has been suspicious.

Am I one of those whom the gentleman says have acted suspiciously? That is a direct reflection upon every Member of this House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth].

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Those words do not appear in the reported speech in the Record.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; but there are many remarks in the original that do not appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HEFLIN. The phraseology is just straightened out; that is all. The subject matter is the same.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do, for that. Let me give one point of that phraseology. At the conclusion of the remarks the stenographer's record shows "Applause." As it appears in the Record, "Loud applause." Now, that is—

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. It did not show enough. There was applause in the galleries.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama, and everybody else, when they want to interrupt the man who has the floor must first address the Chair.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask him if he would yield.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, but he is not the Chair.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HEFLIN. The stenographer's notes did not contain the applause in the gallery, which were all around in the gallery, so that the people indorsed what I said. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen standing will take their seats, and everybody will refrain from laughter.

Mr. FORDNEY. Then, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I take it that the gentleman from Alabama did not address the House, but the galleries, as he usually does. [Laughter.]

I hold the gentleman in high esteem. He has been my friend. I regret exceedingly that in a great burst of eloquence he should impugn the motives of Members of both Houses of Congress. It is an exceedingly serious matter. It is very easy for any man to impugn the motives of another, but it is another question when you come to prove your assertions. I will, before I conclude, offer and have the Clerk read from the desk a resolution that I have prepared, calling upon those gentlemen who made those scathing remarks about those Members of Congress to prove the correctness of their assertions. [Applause.] I do not want the people of this country to believe that the Members of Congress are a pack of gamblers. The statements published in the newspapers, that have been heralded from one end of this country to the other, and as shown in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, would lead the good people of this country to believe that Members of Congress are dealing with German spies. The gentleman from Alabama speaks of lady spies—women spies. I never saw a woman spy. [Laughter.] I hope I never will. I never have, knowingly, met a German spy, man or woman. I hope to God there are none in this country, although much is being said about them. I have both my eyes open and one ear, being a little deaf in the other, but I am listening all the time for what I hear in the papers to come true, that there are spies on every corner. We are engaged in a great world war. I would not impugn the motives of a single man, a Member of Congress, to say that he is not loyal to the Stars and Stripes when this country is at war with any nation in the world, no matter what his nationality may be. [Applause.] The gentleman, in copying or correcting in the RECORD his speech—

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEFLIN. After the Congress has declared war and the President has issued his proclamation and a Member of Congress goes out speaking against the act of Congress and the proclamation of the President and saying that it is unconstitutional and that we had no business in the war, and things like that—would you say that was loyal conduct?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, my friend, your interpretation of a situation you gave a moment ago, as between the House and the gallery, so bedimmed me that I can not correctly answer this question as to just what your purpose was and what your purpose is. [Laughter.] I think now you regret exceedingly making those remarks, and I am heartily sorry for you, my friend. But I do believe that this thing should be investigated from beginning to end, so that if there are 13 or 14 men of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States that are disloyal and who have been gambling and accepting German money and dealing with the blood of the boys of this Nation—oh, I tell you you can not deal out too severe justice to men of that kind.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from Michigan should bear in mind that I did not make such a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama must not interrupt.

Mr. FORDNEY. You said in the RECORD that there are 13 or 14 men that you could point out that acted suspiciously to you, in your judgment.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The statement that 13 or 14 were acting suspiciously was in connection with the slush fund of $50,000, was it not?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir; and if 435 Members of the lower House of Congress can be purchased with $50,000 to sell out our Government to a foreign foe, I want to know it right now. [Applause.]

We are fighting Germany. We have many German-born citizens in this country, and there are no better citizens in any country in the world—those that are loyal, and I believe most of them are, if not all, and just as good citizens as any other nationality—and it is a slur upon them to say that this country is full of German spies who are trying to overthrow our Government. We are at war with them, and it is customary at all times that nations at war have spies in the enemy's camp, if they can land them there, and get valuable information by which to take advantage of the enemy, but if we have them on the floor of this House or on the floor of the Senate, I want you, my good friend, to name them. And I now introduce this resolution and ask the Clerk to read it. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. HOWARD. Before the resolution of the gentleman from Michigan has been read I desire to rise to a question of personal privilege, if I may.

The SPEAKER. With the distinct understanding that the resolution is assumed to be privileged.

Mr. HOWARD. All right.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, Mr. Speaker, we do not know whether the resolution that the gentleman wishes to offer is privileged. We do not want to waive any point of order on its being privileged.

The SPEAKER. No. You do not want to waive any point of order. We assume simply that it is privileged, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] agrees to postpone its reading until the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] has been heard. The gentleman from Georgia will state his question of personal privilege to begin with, if he has any.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I think I understand the rule of personal privilege, and I think that I can and will stay within it. So far as the article read from the desk by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is concerned, as having been printed in the Washington Post, that was the first time that the matter in its entirety had been called to my attention. On Saturday last the House was not in session, and I was sick in my home the major portion of the day.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. FORDNEY. Is it proper for me to ask the Speaker to have something printed in connection with my resolution?

Mr. HOWARD. That will be all right. That interruption will not disturb me at all.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in connection with the resolution that I offer a copy of the exact words of the gentleman from Alabama as taken down by the stenographer and given to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks leave to print, in connection with the resolution which he offered but which has not been considered, a copy of the notes of the stenographer of the speech of the gentleman from Alabama as the stenographer delivered it to him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the bill reported by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], but I want to speak to the House just a few minutes about a telegram sent by Count von Bernstorff on the 23d of January of this year to the German Government, asking for permission to spend $50,000 more to influence Congress. He wanted to use this money as money had been used on former occasions.

Gentlemen of the House, I was forced to the conclusion that Germany thought that we were a cowardly people and afraid to fight, but I did not know that they had reached the conclusion that we were a corrupt people and would betray our own country for German money. The President in his message upon the war mentioned alien influences, sinister influences, at work in our Government, and the telegram sent by Count von Bernstorff is an admission of the fact that Germany had a corrupt fund in the United States for the purpose of carrying on the German propaganda. The telegram that he sent is a reflection upon and an insult to the Congress of the United States and the country. The representative of the German Government admits that he has used of a fund prior to this time to influence Congress. I do not know what he refers to, Mr. Speaker, but I know that this is a serious charge made against the Congress. I know that it is a serious reflection upon the Congress.

We gentlemen are honored with places in the greatest lawmaking body in the world, and the Constitution confers upon us the power to act when war threatens or when war is forced upon the country. We have exercised that power, and before we were called upon by the President to exercise that power, to do what was best for this country in that hour, the representative of the German Government, sitting here in the Capital, was carrying on a corrupt propaganda to influence the lawmaking body of this Nation against the best interest of this Nation and in the interest of the German Government.

I do not know what Members of Congress have been influenced. If I were permitted to express my opinion I could name thirteen or fourteen in the two bodies who in my judgment have acted in suspicious fashion. But I would not do that. I think, however, that this much ought not to go unnoticed. I believe that it ought to be investigated by this Congress. If Members have acted in suspicious fashion by the introduction of resolutions or bills or by speeches in the Congress or out of Congress that lead to the conviction that they are not loyal to this Government at this time, they ought to be investigated, and, if found guilty, they ought to be expelled from the floor of this House and from the floor of the Senate of the United States. If there is a man in either body who is not giving whole-hearted support to the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, he is not entitled to a seat in either branch.

Gentlemen, we are at war with the most desperate brute that ever appeared upon the earth and we must act like we are in war. We must not permit Members of Congress to do things that are not in keeping with the highest and best interests of our country when we are in war. Count von Bernstorff suggested that they express friendship for Ireland.

He said it would aid them in getting certain influences over here. I do not know to what he refers. But the paper says shortly after that telegram was sent Germany did express friendship for Ireland, for home rule, and for home rule in India. So it seems the German Government carried out—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Give me two more minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the German Government carried out that part of his suggestion. Now, then, Count von Bernstorff said he was proceeding—to do what? To use that $50,000. For what purpose? To influence the Congress of the United States.

Now, then, has that been done? Where was that money spent? Whose pocket did it reach? I must admit that the conduct of some that I know has been suspicious. And I want to say in conclusion, as a Member of this Congress I repudiate the insult against the great body of clean, honest, loyal Americans who compose the two bodies of Congress. The few who have acted suspiciously, in my mind, I have no word for. They have my supreme contempt and deserve the contempt of the American people. And in the name of the Congress and the honor of my country, I ask for an investigation of the charges of Bernstorff to see who is corrupt in this matter. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD. On Saturday evening about 8 o'clock a young gentleman, a member of the press gallery, called me at my home and made a general statement, practically the crux of what was read by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORRIS], and asked me if I had anything to say in reference to it. I told him then that I was utterly astounded that such a statement should have been published as emanating from me. I made no such statement, I want to state to this membership, with whom I have very pleasantly associated for seven and three-quarter years. Our relations, I think, in their entirety have been most cordial. The only gentleman who interviewed me was a splendid young gentleman for whom I have the very highest personal regard, Mr. Plummer, of the New York World. Mr. Plummer came to me when I was on my way to the restaurant for lunch and asked me about the Von Bernstorff exposure.

I said to Mr. Plummer that I did not know what the exposure was, and asked him to state what the contents were. He said that the State Department had disclosed some evidence that Von Bernstorff had been authorized, or had asked for authorization from the Imperial German Government, to spend $50,000 for a corruption fund or some other fund to be used among Members of Congress, or to influence Congress. I told him that I had not heard anything about it, which I had not up to that time. He said, "What do you think about it?" I said, "Well, if that is all he is going to spend in corrupting Members of Congress the Kaiser is a cheap skate"; that I did not think that would get him very far. He laughed, as I said it in a jocular way. Then he asked me whether or not I was in favor of an investigation of it. I have not seen his published report of that interview. I said, "Yes; if it is authoritatively and officially stated from the State Department that this is true, and if it will not turn out to be another 'leak investigation,' I will most heartily support a resolution calling for a sifting and searching investigation."

That is practically verbatim what I said to him. Now, since the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORRIS] has made his statement here, I have racked my brains to remember everything I said, because I do not think I am a "shot dodger." I believe I am courageous enough to assume the responsibility for any statement that I make anywhere on this earth. I have got no political ambition to further by trying to reflect upon the membership of a body who have been universally courteous and considerate of me, and I do not propose to start any reflections upon them now without more to base those reflections on than I have had in the years gone by.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To ask the gentleman if he will yield to me for a question.

Mr. HOWARD. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman made no speech upon the floor of the House?

Mr. HOWARD. I did not make any, and did not know that anybody else made one until I saw it in the Record.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I read to the gentleman what the Washington Post quoted him as saying?

Mr. HOWARD. I have just stated that my good friend from North Dakota [Mr. NORRIS] read it here this morning, and it was the first time that I had ever heard the statement. I never saw the Post on Saturday morning, and I never saw that statement in print, but I heard him read it, and I know what he said. I have got a pretty good recollection of it all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that it goes a little further—I say this for the gentleman's own benefit—

Mr. HOWARD. I should like to have the gentleman read it. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It goes a little further than statements attributed to other gentlemen, and I want to ask the gentleman if he said it or did not say it. What he says as to the fact would have a great deal to do with any vote that I may cast hereafter.

Mr. HOWARD. I would be very glad if the gentleman would read it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It says:

Representative HOWARD, of Georgia, said he could point—

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Washington Post of Saturday, September 22.

Representative HOWARD, of Georgia, said he could point to the men in this House—

This is quoted—

"to the men in this House who, I believe, received money. Their actions certainly indicate it, and they certainly are more prosperous now than they have ever been."

If the gentleman said that, he can not wonder that all of the gentlemen of the House should resent it.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I never said that or anything like that. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a fair statement.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, in conclusion—because I do not want to trespass upon the time of this House any further—I am not at all excited about this thing. I am just as cool as the proverbial cucumber. As I started to say a moment ago, I have racked my brain from the time the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORRIS] took the floor until he sat down, in trying to remember everything I said on that day; and I remember that out in the Speaker's lobby some of the Members were discussing this Von Bernstorff matter. I have forgotten who were in the crowd, but I think there were probably two or three of my Republican friends sitting there, and I said the exact opposite of what is in the paper—that I knew a good many of my friends on the floor of the House who did not look as prosperous now as they did when they came here, and I am one of them. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to say this, in conclusion: I know that the world is suspicious of public officials, and you know it. I know that there are thousands of people on this earth that if they had the choice to make out of themselves anything on the face of the earth they would choose to make of themselves a bird—they would by choice convert themselves into a buzzard rather than a hummingbird. I know that public officials are under very great suspicions by many people. I know that there are some gentlemen in public life at both ends of the Capitol, the Senate and the House, who differ materially with me about public questions for the conduct of the war. They have a right to do it; that is for them, their God, their conscience, and their constituents to settle. I have no criticism to make of it, except that I might say that, as a loyal American citizen, I think it would be indiscreet to say or do anything that would give room for doubt that we are a solidly united people. I would go that far. I have no charge or innuendo to make against any Member of this House for his conduct at any place except upon this floor. And I do not believe from what I know now after my service of seven and three-quarters years in this body that there is one man out of any five thousand that ever finds his way to a seat in this body who is not absolutely incorruptible. [Applause.] Now, that is all that I have had to do with this thing, as far as human recollection can state it, and I have made a plain, frank statement to the House. That is all I want to say. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 148.

Whereas the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 21, 1917, pages 7305 and 7306, contained a statement by the Hon. THOMAS J. HEFLIN, Member of Congress from Alabama, commenting upon the contents of a telegram sent from Washington to Germany by Count von Bernstorff, the representative of the German Government, in which he (Von Bernstorff) asked permission "to pay out $50,000, as on former occasions to influence Congress," Mr. HEFLIN used the following language:

"I do not know what Members of Congress, if any, have been influenced by this mysterious German organization. If I were permitted to express my opinion, I could name 13 or 14 men in the two bodies who, in my judgment, have acted in a suspicious manner. If Members have acted in a suspicious manner by the introduction of resolutions or bills or by speeches in the Congress or out of it that leads to the conviction that they are not loyal to this Government in the hour of its peril, they ought to be investigated and, if found guilty, they ought to be expelled from the House and from the Senate of the United States."

And

Whereas the Washington Post and other newspapers of September 22, 1917, reported the following interview with or statement furnished by Congressman HEFLIN concerning the said telegram of Count von Bernstorff, to wit:

"I have heard a story that there is a gambling room in Washington where pro-German and peace-at-any-price Members of Congress get their pay by being extraordinarily lucky at cards. * * * I demand that this matter be investigated and that the guilty Members be expelled from Congress in disgrace. I believe some of this money has reached some Members of Congress. I know I could name 13 or 14 Members of the House and the Senate who have acted in a very suspicious fashion."

And

Whereas in the Washington Post of September 22, 1917, Hon. WILLIAM SCHLEY HOWARD, a Member of Congress from Georgia, is reported to have said upon the subject of said telegram that he could point to men in this House who, "I believe, received money. Their actions certainly indicate it and they are certainly more prosperous now than they have ever been."

Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives appoint a select committee of seven Members of the House, with instructions to inquire into the charges made in the statement of the said Hon. THOMAS J. HEFLIN, Member of Congress from Alabama, as inserted by him in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 21, 1917, pages 7305 and 7306, respecting the said telegram of Count von Bernstorff, and also to inquire into the statement of said HEFLIN which appears in the Washington Post of September 22, 1917, and also the statement of said HOWARD in said paper and of said date, and all other statements, matters, or things pertaining to such telegram of said Von Bernstorff and comments of Members of Congress thereon. Said committee shall have the power to enforce attendance of persons in Washington or elsewhere, to administer oaths to such persons, and to require the production of such books and papers as may be pertinent to the inquiry. Said committee shall report to the House within 20 days the results of its inquiry and its recommendations, if any, as to appropriate action to be taken by the House against any person or persons involved in this inquiry. To pay the expenses of said committee the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby ordered to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, on vouchers approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the resolution is not privileged and ought to go to the Committee on Rules. The Chair makes that ruling because the resolution ought to be carefully and elaborately drawn, so that the whole question, from top to bottom, can be investigated. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the Chair decided the question without giving Members an opportunity to be heard?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear any gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. When a similar resolution was presented to the House relating to the Lawson charges on January 3 last, the Speaker, if I recollect aright, held that resolution privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker held that the person who rose to the question of privilege had a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. STAFFORD. The charges here are of a similar character.

The SPEAKER. The Chair held that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] had a right to raise the question of the highest privilege.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from North Dakota rose to a question of the highest privilege, as the gentleman from Michigan did. The latter presented this resolution, involving the privileges of the House, the highest privileges, and that resolution does involve, in my judgment, a question of the highest privileges of the House. I want to ask the Speaker wherein it does not involve the question of the highest privilege, because it reflects on the membership of the House, as did the Lawson resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from North Dakota to rise to a question of the highest privilege and ruled that he had a question of the highest privilege. He was heard on it, the gentleman from Alabama was heard upon it, and the gentleman from Michigan was heard upon it, and also the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will permit me to correct the statement of the Chair, when the gentleman from Michigan rose for recognition he asked for recognition on the ground of personal privilege. If he was to be recognized on the ground of personal privilege he would have been then and there obliged to set forth those grounds. Then he said he rose to a question of the highest privilege, and that is the privileges of the House, and he based his ground for rising to a question of the privileges of the House on the grounds that have been charged. He has a right now, under the precedents of the House, to present a resolution, because the precedents of the House make it necessary for him to present a formal resolution. The gentleman from Michigan has presented the formal resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question. Is every question of privilege followed by a resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Every question of the highest privilege to gain recognition must be predicated on a formal resolution.

The SPEAKER. No; the formal resolution is predicated on the question of the highest privilege.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can cite the Chair to a ruling by Speaker Carlisle that sustains my position.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the Chair will pardon me, it seems to me, with all respect to the Chair, that the whole controversy can be settled by answering this question. The privilege of the House is a question of the highest privilege: Is it possible that a resolution to investigate a question of the highest privilege is not a privileged resolution?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Wisconsin yielded the floor?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I shall be glad to yield temporarily, but I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to a ruling by Mr. Speaker Carlisle. First, Rule IX provides—

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members, individually, in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to adjourn.

In the Manual, at page 285, subsection 660, we find the following:

In presenting a question of personal privilege, a Member is not required in the first instance to offer a motion, but he must take this preliminary step in raising a question of general privilege.

And there is cited Hinds' Precedents, volume 3, section 2546. I read now from Hinds' Precedents, volume 3, section 2546:

In presenting a question of personal privilege the Member is not required in the first instance to make a motion or offer a resolution; but such is not the rule in presenting a case involving the privileges of the House.

A paper offered as involving a question of privilege should be read to the House rather than privately by the Speaker before a decision is made regarding its privilege.

A mere proposition to investigate, even though impeachment may be a possible consequence, does not involve a question of privilege.

On February 1, 1886, Mr. Lewis Hanback, of Kansas, rising to a question of personal privilege, asked that a paper which he sent to the desk be read. The reading having proceeded for a time, Mr. Clifton R. Breckinridge, of Arkansas, made the point of order that no question of privilege was raised.

The Speaker said: "The Chair thinks the practice has been for a gentleman who rises to a question of privilege and asks to have a paper read to at least state that there is something in the paper which involves a question of that character. The Chair does not yet know what is contained in the paper which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Hanback] has sent to the desk. * * * The Chair desires the gentleman from Kansas to state whether or not there is anything in this paper which in his judgment involves a question of personal privilege on the part of that gentleman. Unless that were the rule, any gentleman might rise to a question of privilege and have anything that he might choose read at the Clerk's desk."

I pass now to paragraph 2547, a more recent ruling by Mr. Speaker CANNON, in which Mr. Livernash, of California, claimed the floor for a question of privilege and proceeded to discuss a question as to whether or not the President of the United States, in his dealing with the revolution on the Isthmus of Panama, had invaded a constitutional prerogative of the House and to comment on the length of time which had elapsed since the House had called on the Executive for information thereto. I read now from Hinds' Precedents:

Mr. Sereno E. Payne, of New York, having raised a question of order, the Speaker said:

"The Clerk will read a passage from the manual bearing upon this question."

The Clerk read as follows: "In presenting a question of personal privilege a Member is not required in the first instance to make a motion or offer a resolution, but such is not the rule in presenting a case involving the privileges of the House."

The Speaker then said: "If the gentleman will offer his resolution in writing under the rules, he will then conform to the rules; and then, for the first time, the Chair can make a ruling as to whether the gentleman is in order. The point of order being made, the rule is perfectly plain."

"If the gentleman is so unfortunate as not to be able to embody in a resolution in writing for the information of the House, his question of privilege he is unable to conform to the rules of the House, as the Chair understands the matter."

What is before the House? There is no question but what there has been presented to the House, subject to the point of order of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], a resolution demanding an investigation of these omnibus charges that have been made by the gentleman from Alabama and which have not been withdrawn. The previous question has been moved upon the adoption of that resolution, and the gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that it is not privileged. I call attention to the fact that the charges made by the gentleman from Alabama have not been withdrawn. In fact, his statement upon the floor this morning reaffirms the charges as contained in the preamble of the resolution. That makes the matter privileged, and of the highest privilege. It is of the highest privilege of the House, because, as the Speaker held when a like question of order was raised on the omnibus charges of the notorious Thomas W. Lawson, it involved not a personal privilege, but the invasion of the dignity and privileges of the House, and therefore it is privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules exactly in this question as he did on the Lawson resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair desire to hear further upon the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not care to be heard unless the Chair desires to hear me. I think the Speaker has ruled correctly. There are three elements in this resolution that would destroy its privileged character. One of the very simple elements is the matter of carrying an appropriation, but I do not care to place it upon that ground. That destroys its privileged character absolutely. Further, it contains on the first page of the resolution as drawn language in which the gentleman from Alabama expressed a certain opinion. Perhaps the gentleman from Alabama was unfortunate in expressing an opinion, but nevertheless it is an opinion, and there is a provision of the Constitution, as I recall it, that provides that a Member shall not be held to account for words spoken on the floor of the House.

Mr. GORDON. And elsewhere.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Or elsewhere. The matter is not privileged. The Speaker's ruling is correct; but, passing from that for a moment, I wish to express my regret that gentlemen should be so insistent now upon a hurried consideration of this particular resolution. How far-reaching this proposition is we do not know. How much is involved in it we do not know. Certainly gentlemen ought to be willing that this matter should go to a committee, to be there considered and to be put in proper form before considering it seriously. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has referred to the resolution presented in regard to the Lawson charges. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin recall how many times the Committee on Rules had to come back to the House before it finally got the resolution on the Lawson proposition in form to be considered and reach results?

Why is it gentlemen are so insistent upon a resolution hurriedly drawn at the desk touching a vital matter to our international relations being immediately considered without its even being printed where Members can reach it? I think gentlemen are making a mistake in doing that. Even if the resolution were privileged, it certainly ought to be referred in order that it might be considered. Gentlemen will approach the consideration of it in a fair and proper spirit, but, Mr. Speaker, the resolution is not privileged and the Speaker has ruled correctly. Two elements in it destroy its privileged character and the resolution ought to be referred.

Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. NORTON rose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I took the opportunity of inquiring whether gentlemen had concluded their argument on the point of order before I undertook to argue it. I understood they had.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, in my judgment, is fraught with the greatest importance to the House and to the country. As I interpret the rules of the House, it seems to me that the resolution is of the highest privilege. It is just possible the fact that it carries an appropriation deprives it of a privileged status, although I do not think that contention can be successfully sustained. I would be inclined to offer the resolution with that part of it stricken out, but I quite agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that it may be just as well that the resolution go to the Committee on Rules. I trust, for the honor, integrity, and dignity of this House, that the resolution when it does go to that committee will be promptly reported back to the House in approved form, so that this inquiry may be made and disposed of without delay.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, up to the time the Speaker ruled on this question I was of the opinion that a question of the highest privilege having been stated and the Chair having ruled that such a question was before the House a resolution based on the proposition was in order. That was my opinion before the Chair ruled. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has presented nothing to change that opinion. However, it is important that this resolution be in proper form, and if the gentlemen of the Committee on Rules will see that this resolution is put in proper form and immediately returned to the House for prompt action no one will have any objection, except some of us may regret the precedent established in regard to the matter.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but wait until we get through with this.

Mr. POUL. I thought the Speaker had ruled; I may have been mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desired to hear these gentlemen if they had any argument to make, one way or the other. Of course this resolution is absolutely nonprivileged for the reason that it has an appropriation in it. There is no question in the world about that. The Chair supposes that has been ruled on a hundred times. The Chair refers this resolution to the Committee on Rules.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 12 (H. Rept. No. 163).

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives be amended as follows: Amend Rule X by adding thereto a new subdivision, to be numbered 51a, to read as follows: "51a. On Woman Suffrage, to consist of 13 members"; and amend Rule XI thereof by adding thereto a new subdivision to be numbered 51a, to read as follows: "51a. All proposed action touching the subject of woman suffrage; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage."

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this resolution be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by those who favor the resolution, and that hour to be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], he to control a half hour and the other hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who opposes the resolution. At the end of that time the previous question to be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POUL] asks unanimous consent that the time on this resolution be limited to two hours, one-half of the time to be controlled by those favoring the rule and the other hour by the gentlemen opposed to it, and that the gentleman from North Carolina is to have 30 minutes of one hour and the gentleman from Kansas 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], a member of the Committee on Rules, control the other hour, and at the end of the two hours the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MOON. I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if he will not yield for half a minute to make a request that will not take more than a second.

The SPEAKER. Let us get through with this request first. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will include in his request for unanimous consent that the debate shall be confined to the resolution.

Mr. POUL. Well, I include that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman includes in his request that the two hours' debate shall be confined to the resolution. Is there objection to either one of these requests, or both?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

The SPEAKER. Object to what?

Mr. STAFFORD. To the request of the gentleman from North Carolina. The control of the hour in favor of the resolution is to be controlled jointly, one-half by the gentleman from North Carolina and one-half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. I think there ought to be some understanding as far as the hour in opposition is concerned as to whether one-half of the time will be parceled out to Members on this side.

Mr. POUL. I think I can assure the gentleman, though it remains with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. STAFFORD. I think some of the time for the opposition should be controlled on this side.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] of course is asking an entirely superfluous question. He knows very well that whenever I control time I divide it absolutely in a fair and equitable manner between the two sides of the House—

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not recall in my service in the House when the gentleman has had control of the time in a similar situation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee (continuing). And I shall do so at this time. If the gentleman desires to object, I have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not desire to object, but I wish to have some understanding, because the minority is deserving of time and recognition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Less time will suit me, I will say.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Pou]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Pou] is recognized for 30 minutes.

MINORITY VIEWS—MOTOR-TRUCK DELIVERY.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield to me to present some minority views?

Mr. POU. I can not do so without losing some of the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will protect the gentleman in regard to that.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] is absent, but he has requested me to present his views to the House and ask that they be printed on the bill (S. 2718) to authorize experiments in motor-truck delivery, on which the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have filed a report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to file for the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] minority views on the bill S. 2718. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the minority views:

[Dissenting views of Mr. STEENERSON on the bill S. 2718, 65th Cong., 1st sess.]

This is a Senate bill appropriating $100,000 for a proposed experimental motor vehicle truck service in the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1918.

Section 7 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States provides as follows:

"All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills."

Whether the term "bills for raising revenue" includes appropriation bills has been the subject of debate between the two Houses ever since the foundation of the Government, and it can not be as yet regarded as definitely settled. It is the subject of a very exhaustive report by the House Judiciary Committee in the third session of the Forty-sixth Congress (Rept. No. 147). So far as general appropriation bills are concerned, it has been the unbroken practice that they should originate in the House of Representatives. A very able argument in support of this uniform practice was made by Senator William H. Seward, of New York, in the first session of the Thirty-fourth Congress (printed in the Congressional Globe, pp. 160, 161, 162, 375, and 376).

Aside from the merits of the proposition contained in the bill, I think the House should refuse to consider it, because it is a violation of the uniform practice and an infringement of the prerogatives of the House. (Hinds' Precedents, vol. 2, secs. 1483-1501, pp. 942-974.)

Hearings were held, and the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General made statements in support of the original bill, part of which have been printed. It is difficult to see how the original bill can be considered as a war measure which it was necessary to take up at the extra session. As amended the department proposed to expend $300,000 in putting motor trucks upon rural routes and in the larger cities for the transportation of farm products to city customers. The Senate bill was accompanied by a report, in which it was stated that for every parcel transported from the country to the city eight parcels were now carried from the city to the country. The Fourth Assistant was asked the question: "If it be true that eight parcels move from city to farm to one from the farm to the city, how will this be remedied by putting on more vehicles?" His answer was: "If the number of vehicles be increased, the number of parcels will increase; and whether the ratio be eight to one or some other, the patron will benefit and the revenues of the Postal Service increase in proportion."

It is difficult to understand how this can be true. If a railroad company should ascertain that for every eight cars moving from the city to the country loaded only one car had a return load, would it propose to remedy this by putting on extra cars? Putting on extra cars might possibly increase the movement from the city to the country; but seeing that the accommodations are already eight times more than required, it is difficult to see how the traffic will be greatly increased by increasing the facilities not required. The estimated cost for each route is $2,940 and the appropriation asked is $300,000, so that it will probably mean the establishment of 100 new routes. When asked how many new employees would be required, the answer was, "One per vehicle per route." And when asked whether they would be under civil service, the answer was, "Probably not during the period of the experiment."

When asked what was the plan for disposing of the supplies, the answer was:

"The additional direct supervision of a rural agent—employee of the post office or the postmaster—who will be expected to encourage direct commercial relations between producer and consumer; to increase the quantity of mailable matter carried," etc.

This would necessitate the appointment of 100 additional employees, also, it is to be presumed, outside of the civil service.

There does not appear to be any difficulty in carrying the traffic on any of the rural routes with present employees and equipment, and to spend this large sum of money at a time when the country has to meet such heavy war burdens seems unwise. The claim that this effort would lower the cost of living is chimerical. If the extraordinary advance in the cost of living can not be dealt with through the extraordinary war measures already adopted, it is futile to expect that the expenditure of this appropriation of $300,000 will accomplish it. Before this experiment could be fairly tried out it is certain that hundreds of useless offices would be created, which it would be difficult to abolish, and that the Postal Service would not be materially benefited.

If this bill were otherwise unobjectionable, I would favor the aeroplane provision, but certainly there is no emergency that requires us at this extra session of Congress to provide for the disposal of aeroplanes or motor trucks that have been so worn as to be unsuitable for further use by the War Department. Actual military operations have not yet been begun, and are not likely to be begun until after the regular session convenes in December, and we can provide for this matter in the annual Post Office appropriation bill.

H. STEENERSON.

A MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2477) to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House should not be confused with the larger question of national woman suffrage. The proposition before the House is simply the creation of a committee. In times past various new committees have been created by the House. Within the last few years the Committee on Good Roads has been created and also the Committee on Flood Control. The Committee on Rules decided that the question of woman suffrage was of such importance as to justify the creation of a committee charged with the duty of considering that particular question.

In my own mind there is but one argument that can be advanced against the creation of this committee and that is the trifling expense involved. It is very true that at this time the Judiciary Committee has jurisdiction of this question. It is very true that the Judiciary Committee can consider it again as it has been considered in the past. If that point is to be fatal to the resolution offered by the Committee on Rules, then no new committee could ever be created, now or hereafter. And it is no reflection upon any committee of the House, above all the Committee on the Judiciary, made up of able lawyers as it is and presided over by the distinguished gentleman from my State [Mr. WEBB].

Now, Mr. Speaker, the request for this is Nation wide. I have here a petition signed by more than 80 Members of the House of Representatives, gentlemen of both political parties, men from various States of the Union, men from the East, men from the West, and men from the Mississippi Valley, asking that this committee be created. I shall read a short extract from the communications of two very distinguished women. I pause here to say, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it would be a most gracious thing to do in this hour, when the life of this Republic is at stake and when American women are responding to the call to duty equally with the men, to say to the women of America, "You are at least of importance enough to entitle you to have a committee created in the House of Representatives to consider your claims." [Applause.]

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the Woman's Association of America, addressed to the Speaker of this House a letter in which these words were used:

May I remind you that the national Governments of Great Britain, France, and Russia have promised woman suffrage in the near future, and that the greater part of Canada has already established it within a few months. The leaders of these Governments have announced that the vote has been or will be given to their women in recognition of the devotion, sacrifice, skill, and endurance of women in their varied service to their country under the strain of war. Our Republic stands upon the threshold of what may prove the severest test of loyalty and endurance our country has ever had. It needs its women; and they are ready—as fearless, as willing, as able, as loyal as any women of the world.

I supplement this by an extract from a letter addressed to the Committee on Rules by another very distinguished woman, Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, as follows:

It is not much that we ask of you. Surely the women of America—half of the population—have the right to one committee whose duty shall be to hear with patient care, sift with skill and real interest the place, the requests, the needs of the women of the Nation.

We are not arguing here, Mr. Chairman, the question of our right to the suffrage. We are merely asking you to give us a committee, as you have given the Indians, as you have given the people of our insular possessions, which committee shall look after, investigate, and report back to the House on the claims which we make, as well as upon the claims which are made against us.

Mr. Speaker, I read this extract from a letter of President Wilson, dated May 14, 1917, addressed to myself. Speaking of the resolution now under consideration the President wrote:

On the chance that I may be of some slight service in this matter, which seems to me of very considerable consequence, I am writing this line to say I would most heartily approve. I think it would be a very wise act of public policy and also an act of fairness to the best women who are engaged in the cause of woman suffrage.

I would be willing to rest the case upon the statement of these distinguished women, supported by the recommendation of the President. A word to the wise is sufficient. This is a question, Mr. Speaker, which will not down. We have as a Member of this body the first woman Representative in the American Congress. [Applause.] She will not be the last, Mr. Speaker. There will be others who will be elected to this body, and it seems to me the time has come and is here now when the House of Representatives ought to respond to this Nation-wide demand and to give to these women the committee to which they appear to be entitled, and I say this as one who has never voted for a suffrage amendment to the Constitution.

I want to say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that this is no proposition to pack the committee for a particular purpose. The friends of this resolution have distinctly stated time and again that they do not expect action at this session of Congress. The appointment of a committee only is asked; but after this committee is appointed, in the next Congress, they expect to go before the people of America, and, if the returns justify, then in the Sixty-sixth Congress they will ask for congressional action.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POUL. How much time have I consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOON). The gentleman has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. POUL. I would be glad to yield to my friend, but I have used all of my time. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] will use some of his.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON].

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Rules Committee, who has just preceded me and who presents this resolution (H. Res. 12) for consideration at this time, among other things, says that we now have a Congress woman and are going to have more. I do not feel disposed to take issue with him on this subject. It may be that there will be many women in the next Congress, and unless the present House settles down to business and follows the well-settled rules of procedure that govern or ought to govern this body, it might not be surprising if we had a lot of children elected to the next Congress. [Laughter.]

The question now before the House is a resolution creating an additional committee of the House to be known as the suffrage committee, the evident purpose of which is to create a committee that will report a resolution proposing woman suffrage.

This resolution is brought forward notwithstanding the fact that when this Congress was called into extraordinary session to consider the greatest problems that any Congress may ever be called upon again to consider it was agreed in caucus that there should be no legislation on any subject other than war measures. This was wise and proper. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the country at large is far more interested in seeing legislation enacted that will tend to a speedy termination of this war rather than to see the House throwing away its time creating a committee that will insure the reporting of a resolution providing for woman suffrage. If the House is to adopt the resolution to-day brought in by the Rules Committee, caucus action hereafter is a farce unless the personnel of the Rules Committee is ascertained and their views sought rather than the views of a majority of the Members of the House.

For myself, I feel bound by the action of the caucus, notwithstanding the fact that the chairman of the committee reporting the resolution says that woman suffrage is coming and we might as well get ready for it. I take issue with his statement that in order to have the cooperation of the good women in this great war that it is essential that the House suspend consideration of important legislation and take up such a resolution as this.

What is the necessity for this committee? Are we prepared to say that the great Judiciary Committee of the House is unable to deal with this question? There is not a Member of the House that can not draw a resolution proposing a constitutional amendment. Who of you can not do that? What Member of this House is there that can not draw a resolution proposing a constitutional amendment?

You say it is necessary now to create a woman-suffrage committee. Should you do so, and they should report a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, then the services of such a committee is ended forever. It is not contemplated that there will be further legislation to come before this committee. It is proposed to create it for the sole and only purpose of reporting a resolution for one purpose only. The Judiciary Committee of the House has since the organization of this Government been intrusted with all legislation that affects or seeks to change the organic law of this country. The only criticism that the proponents of this resolution have of the Judiciary Committee is that they have had resolutions before proposing constitutional amendments on this subject, but have failed to act. If this be a proper reason for passing this resolution, then every Member of Congress, when he introduces a bill or a resolution and it goes to a committee and that committee fails to report it—then it would be proper for such a Member to create him a committee that would report his bills or resolutions. For myself, I would regret to see such a state of affairs. It is hard enough for a Member to inform himself and prepare to vote on the great questions that are presented even after full consideration by committees composed of the most valuable Members of this body.

Mr. Speaker, the amending of the Federal Constitution is a matter always of the gravest importance to the people, and to argue that the Constitution of the United States should be amended because it would be pleasing to the advocates of woman suffrage, and to say that it is necessary to do this to have their loyalty in this great world war to my mind is unsound. The Judiciary Committee of the House was created at the beginning of the American Congress and has handled a number of perplexing problems that have been presented to it, and in most instances, I am convinced, have handled them well.

There is now pending before the Judiciary Committee several resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution, and the Judiciary Committee has held hearings on them, or some of them, and have gone to great expense to report these hearings.

Women favoring suffrage in great numbers have appeared before the committee and given testimony. An equal number of women have also appeared opposing woman suffrage and given testimony, and we might reasonably expect action on some one of these resolutions early in December. Why, then, should this proposed new committee be created? Its advocates all say that they do not expect legislation at this time, but want to have the committee so that a woman-suffrage amendment may be considered at the December session and reported to the House for action.

The question of woman suffrage was submitted to the people of Maine a few days ago, and the people of the State of Maine voting at this election overwhelmingly defeated the effort to authorize woman suffrage in that State. The Constitution of the United States now leaves the qualifications for suffrage to the respective States, and in this as in many other instances the wisdom of the framers of the Constitution is clearly demonstrated.

Mr. Speaker, I am firmly convinced that any cause too weak to stand the test of the judgment of a majority of the people of a State is not worthy of serious consideration. When the people of my State shall have determined that the right of suffrage shall be extended to the women of Alabama I shall acquiesce, but I do protest against the people of Vermont and Massachusetts and other States of this Union saying who shall or who shall not participate in our elections in the State of Alabama. The people of my State have struggled with the suffrage question for years and years, and I am proud to say that they have solved the question and have done so in such way as to reflect credit upon the great men of our State who gave a portion of the best part of their lives to its solution. There may be those, and no doubt there are, who, in order to have the approval of a limited number, are willing to advocate and support universal suffrage, but I am not one of them. I am and have always been earnest in my desire to please, but when I see a question presented fraught with so many dangers for the people of my State, I must stand for what I conceive to be best for their present and future welfare.

Mr. Speaker, there is not a home in this country to-day where there are not heartaches and sadness, and this is not occasioned by failure on the part of this Government to enfranchise the women. Then is it not of more importance that this body should proceed with legislation that may be instrumental in successfully bringing this country out of war and thereby restore peace, happiness, and contentment in the homes of our people? After this is done, if the Congress of the United States chooses to take up its time in idle ceremonies such as creating committees for the specific purpose of considering woman-suffrage legislation and similar questions, then it may be well; but until then let us go forward with the work of this Congress that is so essential to a restoration of peace and contentment, and in the meantime the States of this Union who want woman suffrage can proceed under the law as did the people in the State of Maine.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes.

Mr. CANTRILL. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is willing to permit the voters of Maine to settle a question for him?

Mr. BLACKMON. No. I am willing for the voters of every State in the Union to pass upon this question as they may see proper. This can be done without amending the Constitution of the United States and thereby bring on a thousand more issues than we are forced to contend with at this time. I want to ask the Democrats if caucus action means anything, and if so, is it binding on Members who take part therein?

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes.

Mr. POUL. As I said before, this is simply a change in the rules of the House. The Democratic caucus did not pass a resolution providing that the rules of the House should not be changed.

Mr. BLACKMON. No; but it said very plainly that we would take up no legislation except war measures, and while this is not legislation in the strict sense of the word, still our considering this resolution at this time shows us to be a lot of babies. That is all there is to it. [Laughter.] It is an admission on our part that the great Judiciary Committee of this House can not intelligently pass upon a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution.

The merits or demerits of woman suffrage I am not going to discuss, but I believe that the women of this country who want suffrage—and I do not mean the crowd, gentlemen, that have been picketing the White House, for they are not entitled to anything—but as to those women who honestly believe in and want suffrage, ought to be willing to risk their own States, and if they are not, then I do not think we ought to go through the farce of creating an extra committee of the House to deal with the subject.

I am not willing to go on record as saying that the great Judiciary Committee of this House is not capable of considering this and all similar resolutions. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] desire time?

Mr. MEEKER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, as to the talk of the chairman of the committee, that the desire for this resolution is Nation-wide, I want to say that the opposition is just as wide as the desire to have this rule adopted. Women in all parts of this Nation—and they are probably as intelligent as some who are insisting upon this rule—are opposed to it, although they do not make the same kind of a noise. Whenever we insist that because people coming from certain sections of the country demand a thing that it is a Nation-wide movement, we make a mistake. The Nation is just as broad for those who do not want this as it is for those who do.

So far as the establishment of this committee is concerned, the only reason for the request is the fact that up to date those who have been in favor of it have not been able to prove their case before the Committee on the Judiciary. They have been in court a number of times; they have had hearings. We have had them on our hands around here ever since I have been in Congress, and the Committee on the Judiciary has heard their claims time and time again. A number of States have heard them.

Now, so far as the amendment itself is concerned, the people who are advocating this national amendment, the amendment to our Constitution, are in this very peculiar position: In a number of their States they have already obtained the vote. Some of them have used it and some have not. But the courts of the United States have never said that when a State granted them the vote they were not entitled to it. It has never been declared unconstitutional where any State has granted them the franchise, and their coming in for a constitutional amendment on a proposition that has never been declared unconstitutional and that always has been recognized when it was brought here by a State—that is the habit of some women, of asking for what they already have and insisting that they get it. [Laughter.]

Here is a law that is on the statute books of a score of States, and it has never been carried to a court to decide its constitutionality, but still those folks come here and want a constitutional amendment as to whether it is constitutional as coming from the different States. I think it is a reflection on the constitutional judgment of the people who are advocating this amendment. It is about the way men would keep house. [Laughter.] That is the way they are coming into these governmental affairs. I think we have had up to the present time about all the feminist movement that we can stand—not all from those who wear dresses, either. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, there is a deeper question than this, and I am going to state briefly and frankly my views about it. I am talking to the men on this side of the House that had a suffrage proposition put on them that nearly destroyed their governments locally. This Nation is so big and so broad that there are some things that people in their communities can decide for themselves better than the folks who live 2,000 miles on the other side of the continent can decide for them. The queer thing about it is that the advocates of democracy, of local self-government, are in the saddle in this House, and local self-government is only a thing of the past.

There is absolutely no safeguard for a free people except to preserve for them those matters for local decision to which they are entitled; and when you reduce the proposition to its lowest terms the only reason this is being asked for is to assist the propaganda for woman suffrage. I should imagine that the wife of the honorable Secretary of State probably stands as high in the confidence of the people of America as the ladies mentioned in that letter. I fancy that the good wife of an honorable Senator, who is the president of the organization to oppose woman suffrage, has the confidence of the American housewives and homes as much as either of the ladies mentioned in that letter. And when we come onto the floor of this House trying to give the impression that because women who are opposed to this are not willing to get into some sort of gear and walk up and down the street and make nuisances of themselves, the demand is only on one side, we are not representing the facts in the case by any manner of means, and it is not fair either to the country or to ourselves to try to persuade ourselves that this is a one-sided question so far as the women of the country are concerned. I think that in my own district I put up a perfectly fair proposition to the women who are advocating this resolution. They got something over 3,600 petitioners out of something over 150,000 women. They wanted me to promise to vote for them. I said, "I will tell you what I am willing to do. Suppose we let the women of the district vote on the proposition." They would not consent to that. There is a vast difference between a woman on the street with a tin horn and a woman in her home looking after home affairs.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MEEKER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Just what does that have to do with the question whether or not this House will amend its rules so as to give both sides—those in favor and those against woman suffrage—an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. MEEKER. I will answer that. Both sides have been heard before the Judiciary Committee time after time, and, as was suggested by the chairman, it is nothing more nor less than this Congress yielding to the nagging of a certain group. We are nagged here and at home and everywhere else. He says it is coming, and that you had just as well surrender. If the American Congress has come to the time when a proposition which belongs absolutely to the Committee on the Judiciary, a proposition that has been submitted to them and discussed, shall be turned over to a new committee to give these propagandists a hearing on either side, then we might as well discharge the Judiciary Committee. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the lady from Montana [Miss RANKIN]. [Applause.]

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe we should have a woman-suffrage committee in the House, as we have one in the Senate. Everyone admits that the question of woman suffrage is a vital question before the American people to-day; that all of the women are divided, either for or against woman suffrage; and that the great body of women who were undecided are now vitally interested in this question. So we believe this is a question that should take all of the time of one committee. There is no other question concerning a certain group of people that is receiving the attention that the woman-suffrage question is receiving from the American people. The Judiciary Committee has all it can do in attending to the regular business that comes before that committee, and we would like to have a committee that would discuss the merits of the question and would report either favorably or unfavorably on the woman-suffrage question.

Some have told us to go to the States. Of course we have always known that woman suffrage was constitutional according to the Federal Constitution, but some of the State constitutions disfranchise the women. Perhaps it is news to you to know that some of the women of the United States can never be enfranchised except by a Federal amendment, for the constitutions of some of the States are such that it is practically impossible to amend them. Take, for instance, the constitution of New Mexico, a State where the men would give the women a chance to vote on the question of woman suffrage at the earliest opportunity if they could; but according to their State constitution it is necessary to have a three-fourths majority of all the votes cast at the election and to have a two-thirds majority in every county. Now, no matter how great the sentiment for woman suffrage would be in a State with that kind of a constitution or how great the sentiment in favor of any question, it would be impossible to amend that constitution. The constitution in New Mexico will remain in that form for 25 years.

Then there will be a little change, but it will still be practically impossible to amend it.

Take the constitution of the State of Indiana, where it is still a question whether or not it is necessary to have a majority of all the electors or of all those casting votes at the election.

Some of our State constitutions make it very difficult to get a proposition through the legislature. For instance, take the State of Alabama, where the legislature meets only once in four years.

Some of the States require the ratification of two legislatures. Such are the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. Some require the ratification before it goes to the people and again after it goes to the people. Some States require a majority of all the votes cast at the election, and that is very difficult to obtain. We are simply asking that you give the sanction of your opinion on this question of whether or not woman suffrage is a question of vital enough concern for the House of Representatives to consider seriously and bring before the House a report that will make the people of the United States realize that this body has come to the conclusion that the women must either ask the men in their own States or whether it can be done in the dignified way of making it unconstitutional for the States to disfranchise women. I believe we should have this woman suffrage committee, in order that this question may be discussed in an intelligent and dignified manner.

Of course we are not asking for anything unusual, since they have had a Committee on Woman Suffrage in the Senate for many years.

Mr. HARDY. Will the lady permit an interruption?

Miss RANKIN. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. HARDY. I should like, for my own satisfaction, to ask about the constitution of New Mexico. The conditions that the lady spoke of were embodied in that constitution as it was first submitted, but the Committee on the Territories modified the provision relating to amendments to the constitution of that State, and I think the lady will find that she is mistaken about the difficulty of amendment.

Miss RANKIN. It is still very difficult.

Mr. RAKER. I think my distinguished friend [Mr. HARDY] is mistaken, because there is no constitution of any State so difficult or almost impossible to amend as that of New Mexico, and investigation will determine that fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the lady from Montana has expired.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, when the Raker resolution for the formation of a committee on suffrage in the House of Representatives was considered by the Committee on Rules, it was my pleasure to move a favorable report. That the motion received a majority vote of the Committee on Rules is, of course, evident, else the matter would not be up for consideration to-day. It will be my pleasure to vote for a committee on suffrage in the House. I can find no real argument against the establishment of such a committee.

The question before the House to-day is confined to the one question of establishing a committee on suffrage. The broad question of woman suffrage by constitutional amendment is not considered in the resolution before the House. I can not understand why even the most active opponents of woman suffrage would oppose the establishment of a standing committee to consider the question. I hope that we all desire to be fair and we should welcome a committee in this House which would gather information and facts on the great question of suffrage. To-day 20 States of the Union have presidential suffrage for women and 36 States of the Union permit women to vote on various questions. Surely a question which has been recognized as just in 36 States is worthy of a committee in the House of Representatives to consider that question. [Applause.] I am in favor of a committee on suffrage, which committee should be elected by the House to make a full and complete study of suffrage questions and present their views to the House for its consideration. Heretofore I have not favored an amendment to the Federal Constitution for woman suffrage, but I am not afraid of information on the subject, and if a study of conditions in the Nation in the great crisis which now confronts us as a people leads me to believe that woman suffrage is a good thing for the United States, I would not hesitate to favor it. [Applause.]

This is not a partisan question, but it is not out of place to say to the Democratic side of the House that of the 12 States having woman suffrage in the last presidential election, 10 of them voted for President Wilson. [Applause.] There can certainly be no valid objection from the Democratic side of this House for the consideration of a great public question, which gave us control in a political way of this House and of the affairs of the Nation. The Democratic side of the House can not afford to consider this question from the local standpoint of the political welfare of a few of its Members. We have been busy passing legislation which denies many of our citizens their individual rights and liberties. It is high time that we were enacting some legislation that would give at least consideration to granting rights and liberties to half of our population. [Applause.] I have heard but one argument advanced against the resolution before the House, and, in my opinion, that is not an argument in reality. I have heard some Members of this House say that they did not favor the establishment of a committee on suffrage because of pickets at the White House gates. I do not favor "picketing" either, but I would not insult my intelligence by voting against this resolution because some few women held banners on the streets of Washington. It would be just as consistent to say that men should be denied the ballot because some few men on soap boxes in some of our large cities have been criticizing the President and the entire administration, which is working so nobly to bring victory to American armies. Millions of Christian women in the Nation should not be denied the right of having a committee in this House to study the problems of suffrage because of the mistakes of some few of their sisters. [Applause.] One had as well say that there should be no police force in Washington because the police force of this city permitted daily thousands of people to obstruct the streets and impede traffic and permitted almost the mobbing of women without arresting the offenders. There was a lawful and peaceful way in which the police of this city could have taken charge of the banners of the pickets without permitting the women carrying them to be the objects of mob violence. To see women roughly handled by rough men on the streets of the Capital of the Nation is not a pleasing sight to Kentuckians and to red-blooded Americans, and let us hope that the like will never again be seen here. [Applause.]

Everyone of average intelligence knows that one of the greatest questions before the country to-day is that of woman suffrage. This being true, why not establish a committee in this House, as the Senate has done, to carefully study the question and report its findings to the House? I will note with much interest the votes of some of the Members of the House, who have always been so insistent on prohibition legislation. It is generally believed that woman suffrage means prohibition legislation. In my opinion, no real and earnest advocate of prohibition could vote against such a simple proposition as forming a committee in this House to study the problems of suffrage, and I sincerely hope that my prohibition friends in the House will join with me in supporting the Raker resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, millions of noble American women are doing just as much as the men of the Nation to-day to bring victory to our armies. They are meeting with hearty patriotic response every demand that is being made by Congress and by our great President. When victory comes, as it surely will, to that flag which has never known defeat, it will be the victory of American women as much as of American men. These same millions of Christian and patriotic American women are to-day asking this House to grant them a committee on suffrage. In my opinion, they have the right to ask that, and I deem it the duty of the House to grant the request. I sincerely hope the House will adopt the report from the Committee on Rules, so that a committee on suffrage can be established in the House.

Mr. WOODYARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield. In reference to prohibition, my State of West Virginia voted 92,000 in favor of prohibition and during the last election something over 100,000 against woman suffrage. How does the gentleman reconcile that?

Mr. CANTRILL. What I said was that the general impression was that the two went together.

Mr. WOODYARD. But we had a vote of 92,000 for prohibition and a vote of 100,000 against woman suffrage.

Mr. FIELDS. Does not the gentleman from West Virginia think the women of West Virginia would have voted for prohibition the same as the men did?

Mr. WOODYARD. Yes; but the gentleman said that the prohibition vote reflected the views of the State on woman suffrage.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB].

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I am one prohibitionist who does not favor the creation of a committee on woman suffrage. I want to say to my friend from Kentucky that we had prohibition in the South when the woman-suffrage question was in its swaddling clothes; and, so far as I am able to gather, woman suffrage has never distinctly aided prohibition in any fight that I know anything about.

When this war Congress began, we held a Democratic caucus and passed a resolution which by common consent the Republican side has agreed to—that we would take up nothing except war emergency measures during this session. I, as one chairman, have tried to represent what I thought the House wanted. I have held in my hand for a long time a number of "hot poker," so to speak, because I have had a lot of legislation pending before the committee, some of which has passed the Senate, and which the advocates of this legislation were urging me to report out the bills and resolutions and let them pass this House. Instead of doing that I have obeyed the dictates of this House on both sides. I obeyed your orders and did my best to carry out what you wanted done—to report and pass nothing in the House except war-emergency measures. I say it is unfair to the Members of the House who have acted in good faith on this understanding in the House so long at the end of the session now to practically deify the woman-suffrage proposition, put it on a pedestal, and shove it through the House to the exclusion of all other important matters.

I do not have to defend the Judiciary Committee. I know it needs no defense in the eyes of this House on either side. But in the Sixty-third Congress we gave the ladies a vote, and they not only did not carry the amendment but it lost by 30 majority. In the Sixty-fourth Congress, last December, we voted to report it out of the committee and bring it on the floor of the House, put it on the calendar, and I offered to go to the Committee on Rules and ask them for a rule to take up the resolution for a vote in the House; but no, the suffragists did not want it and did not ask it. Your Judiciary Committee now is ready to report the resolution out on the first meeting in December, and I am authorized by the members of the committee to say so, and you can have a vote. As far as having it carefully considered, the Judiciary Committee has sat over there in the committee room days, weeks, and months, letting everybody who was for woman suffrage come in and express themselves fully, and printed every word that was said; and not only that, but we have trebled the number of copies of their arguments and sent them out to everybody who wanted a copy. It can not be asserted and ought not to be assumed that that committee has not carefully considered the woman-suffrage proposition—not only last year but every year. No man can say that we have been unfair to them. And, as I say, we are ready to report in December.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Did I understand the gentleman to say that his committee is ready to report favorably on the constitutional amendment in December?

Mr. WEBB. No, I did not say favorably; I mean to say that the majority of the Judiciary Committee is opposed to woman suffrage, as is also a majority of the House against it.

Mr. MONDELL. We want to take the jurisdiction away from them.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; you want to pack the new committee; that is your object. You are not satisfied to have a committee represent the sentiment of this House on woman suffrage. The last vote taken shows 30 majority against it. This whole movement is an effort to get a committee which will make a report contrary to the wishes of the majority of this House, and that is the bottom of this whole business, and it ought not to be allowed. True, you will create a new chairman and a new secretary and a new assistant clerk and a new janitor and all those perquisites, but you will not get any more results, except that you may get a favorable report from the committee if you pack it, and it is just as bad to pack a committee in this House for a good cause as it is for a bad cause.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. No; I can not now. If you create this committee and do not pack it with a majority of woman suffragists, they will be just as mad with you as if you had not created the committee at all, and if you do pack it with a majority of woman suffragists, then you are violating the spirit of American government, and I contend it is just as wrong to pack it on behalf of a good cause as it is on behalf of a bad cause.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Not now.

Mr. ADAMSON. But I want to ask the gentleman a good question. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEBB. I yield for a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is no committee in this House on male suffrage?

Mr. WEBB. No.

Mr. ADAMSON. Why should there be one on female suffrage?

Mr. WEBB. There should not. The Committee on the Judiciary takes care of both.

Mr. ADAMSON. If Congress is to take up the question of suffrage, why not have a committee on the question of suffrage?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I have only 10 minutes; I can not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like only to state that the reason we have not a committee on male suffrage is because males have suffrage.

Mr. ADAMSON. They did not get it from Congress.

Mr. WEBB. No. If you propose to create this committee, everyone knows the object of it. The object is to get a committee on woman suffrage that is in favor of woman suffrage, although a majority of this House is against it and three-fourths of the voters of the United States are against it; and it is baldly proposed to create a committee here that will deliver a report in keeping with what the minority of the country and the House want. We went through all of that packing-committee matter when they charged our distinguished friend, Mr. CANNON, with packing committees.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. POUL. I am sure my friend is not going to assume that the Ways and Means Committee, made up of Democrats and Republicans, will do anything that is wrong?

Mr. WEBB. No; but I will say this, that you are going to get in more hot water than you are in now unless you do pack that committee. [Laughter.] If you do pack it, then you are going back to the days of Cannonism, when it was charged that he used to pack committees. No "packed" juries for me. If you are not going to "pack" the new committee, why create it?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Not now. I would like to if I had the time. I say again that we are going to give these suffragette ladies a vote on their resolution in December, and we have printed all the literature that they have been able to scrape together. We will not give them a favorable report, but we will report out the Susan Anthony resolution and give them a vote; but they do not ask for a vote in December. They want a committee; and if you do not pack that committee they will abuse you and criticize you all over the country. [Laughter.]

Besides that, Mr. Speaker, the creation of this committee is contrary to the spirit of the platforms of both parties, on which every man in this House was elected except Mr. LONDON, the Socialist.

The Republican platform declaration in 1916 upon this question of woman suffrage was that it was a question for the States, and the Democratic platform of the same year declared the same thing. I deny that the President of the United States is in favor at this time of creating a committee on woman suffrage. He has never said so, so far as I know.

Mr. POUL. He said that he would be glad to see a committee created.

Mr. WEBB. I would like to see the letter in which he said that and have it put into the Record. He stated over and over again that he was bound by and standing by the Democratic platform, and that it was a State matter, and I have never heard him vary an inch from that platform declaration. If every Republican and Democrat wants to strike these two planks out of their platforms and say that their national conventions did not know what they were talking about, and that they are going to make this a national matter now and create a committee, why, they can go ahead and do it. The Democratic platform says:

We recommend the extension of the franchise to the women of the country by the States upon the same terms as the men.

The Republican platform had this plank:

The Republican Party, reaffirming its faith in government of the people, by the people, for the people, as a measure of justice to one-half of the adult people of this country, favors the extension of the suffrage to women, but recognizing the right of each State to settle this question for itself.

If these platform planks mean anything, why should you have a national committee to set those planks aside? If woman suffrage is a State matter, as the two great party national platforms say it is, then what has Congress got to do with it?

The country is against woman suffrage by national amendment. In the last 20 years a big majority of the population of the country have voted in the States and have overwhelmingly defeated it, and but a fraction of our population is in favor of it. Yet this Congress is called upon to go in the teeth of the public sentiment of the voters of the country and make this a national matter. South Dakota defeated it the first time by 3,286 and the second time by 11,914. Ohio defeated it the first time by 87,455 and the next time by 182,905. Michigan defeated it the first time by 760 and the next time by 96,144. Wisconsin defeated it by 91,478, Nebraska by 10,104, Missouri by 140,206, North Dakota by 9,139, New Jersey by 51,108, New York by 194,984, Pennsylvania by 55,686, Massachusetts by 133,447, Iowa by 10,341, West Virginia by 50,000, South Dakota by 4,934, and Maine by 2 to 1.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WEBB. I will ask the gentleman to yield me one minute more.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. WEBB. In other words, 14 of the great States of this Union have killed this proposition overwhelmingly at the polls, and 19 States have killed it in their legislatures, and yet with all that, 33 of the great States killing this proposition, not only in Congress as a national measure, but killing it in the States, here an effort is made to force it upon the country in order to get a little political advantage. I hope this House will not play politics in that fashion. I hope you will stand up for the caucus's solemn agreement in reference to this matter; I hope you will stand up for the Democratic and Republican platforms; I hope you will obey the sentiment of this country, that is democracy. The country does not want woman suffrage or a new committee, and I hope this House will not give it to them. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it will be noticed that while gentlemen opposing the creation of the committee may begin their remarks by urging against the creation of the committee as being unwise or unnecessary in itself, they always close by strongly presenting their arguments against suffrage. In other words, those who are opposed to the creation of this committee are opposed to it apparently not because it is not proper to create a committee to consider the subject, but because they are opposed to woman suffrage, and they have a notion in some way or other the creation of the committee will help the cause.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Just briefly.

Mr. MEEKER. Is the gentleman in favor to-day of creating a committee to do useless work when he does not believe in it?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I am not in favor of having useless work done, and if I thought a certain thing was useless I would be opposed to the creation of a committee to do it. The peculiar thing about it is that none of the gentlemen have discussed the question of the creation of the committee from the viewpoint from which we should consider such a question. They are discussing the merits of suffrage.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GORDON. The point I want to ask the question about is what legislative question will this committee have to consider if you create it?

Mr. MONDELL. The very important question presented in various ways, as to whether the better half of mankind in these United States is going to have something to say about the laws and the Government of the land. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. If the gentleman will yield once more, I will show the sophistry of that—

Mr. MONDELL. Now, the only question before the House is, Should there be a committee on woman suffrage? Is the question important enough to justify the formation of a committee to consider the subject? Well, we have a Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers, created possibly in a prophetic hour by some one who wanted to get a place to put the printed arguments of those who are against suffrage. We have committees on some fifty-odd different subjects, no one of which can in the nature of things be more important than the question of whether or not one-half of the race, and the better half, are to have anything to do with the affairs of government. That is a reasonably important question, in my opinion.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. And that is the only question you are called upon to decide here. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HARDY. Since the Committee on the Judiciary have stated they are going to report this matter out for a vote in the House the very first of next session, is not that all that such a committee as the gentleman is seeking to have appointed could do?

Mr. MONDELL. So far as I am concerned, I am not favoring the formation of this committee primarily because I believe such a committee would hurry the decision on the question of the constitutional amendment, but because the question is so important, so many people have asked for the creation of the committee that the Congress should meet their demand and expectation in that regard.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Whenever any large number of people have asked for the creation of a committee for the examination of any tremendously important and controlling matter, it has been granted, and that is all we ask in this case. Yes; I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Does the gentleman feel that the request or demand from a large number for the creation of the committee has been due to the fact that many have felt that there was an effort made to suppress a vote on it, and does it not now appear from the statement of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that that committee is ready to report it for action early in December?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, it would seem from what some gentlemen have said that some gentlemen of the Committee on the Judiciary in order to retain jurisdiction over this highly important subject are at last beginning to see the light, and that they are willing to do in the future what they should have done in the past. If gentlemen of the Judiciary Committee believe that it is proper to present this matter to the Congress, they should have presented it months ago, but they have not done so; they have failed and failed utterly, and it is not extraordinary that under that condition of affairs a very considerable number of people should have asked for the formation of a new committee to consider the subject. The Committee on the Judiciary need not be disturbed over creating new committees.

Other honored and honorable committees have been deprived of a part of their jurisdiction in the past without injury to them, and, judging from the way some members of the Committee on the Judiciary seem to have been piqued and peeved over this question in the past, I should think they would be very glad to be relieved from the consideration of it and pass it on to some other committee. The gentleman from Georgia, who, since he acquired high honors elsewhere, seems to have taken a curious view of things, suggests we should not have a committee on woman suffrage because we have not a committee on male suffrage. We have no committee on the formation of a Constitution for the United States of America. We have no committee on the promulgation and adoption of a bill of rights. There are a great many other important things heretofore accomplished for the consideration of which we have not been foolish enough to appoint and establish committees after the thing was done. We have no committee having to do with things done, accomplished, and established. We may not need a committee on woman suffrage after women are enfranchised; probably we shall not. We do have committees for the consideration of those splendid purposes which we seek to accomplish in the future, of which this is one.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to vote for this committee out of deference to the wishes of the women who want it. But I oppose Federal intermeddling with the suffrage question. Does the gentleman think I could consistently vote for this committee?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman ought to do so, whatever his opinion may be on the question of woman suffrage. I think when a very large number of the good women of America ask for a committee to consider the question of woman suffrage, whether or not it shall be provided for by Federal amendment, that so chivalric a gentleman as my friend would certainly not live up to his splendid record if he did not vote them the opportunity to present their case to such a committee; not a committee having a thousand other important matters to consider, but a committee established for the express purpose of considering this one vital and important question. Of course, my friend will vote for such a committee, because my friend is a chivalrous man and he believes in giving consideration to any widespread and general demand of the people of the Nation, particularly the better half of the people of the Nation.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. I represent what may be called the converse of the position of the gentleman from Alabama. I am favorable to suffrage by constitutional amendment. On the other hand, I do not like to vote for the establishment of a useless committee. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], as I understand it, has stated that his committee was ready to report out the work that will be the only big thing which the new committee would have to do. I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if there is any other bill which would come before this committee?

Mr. MONDELL. That was a very clever dodge on the part of the gentleman, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, to avoid, if possible, the judgment of the House about to be pronounced on this subject. We are no longer concerned with what the Judiciary Committee may propose to do some time in the future in regard to this matter. We shall, without any reflection on the Judiciary Committee, relieve them of further consideration of the suffrage question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. It is too late for that appeal to save the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, the merits or demerits of the resolution to create this committee are not to be determined by its cost or the fact that 12 States have established woman suffrage or any other number of States. Neither is it to be determined by the attitude of any Member upon the advisability or merit of woman suffrage. There are higher grounds than that upon which to consider this resolution. The resolution is unnecessary, it is inappropriate, it is an impairment of the dignity of this House. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] asked a very pertinent question a moment ago, as to what legislation the committee would have to consider. Absolutely no legislation, because Congress has not the power to legislate. The only possible question which could come before this committee, if created, is the resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States. If there is any committee in this House entitled to consider and to give the most careful, deliberate consideration to an amendment to our organic law, it is the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Just for a question.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that neither one of the last two constitutional amendments went to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. SMALL. Well, this Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction of this proposed amendment. It is appropriate it should have it and it ought to continue to keep it.

Mr. RAKER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this—

Mr. SMALL. I can not yield. That is only an incident in the case.

This resolution purports to create a committee to consider an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The Committee on the Judiciary have already had jurisdiction, have reported it once, reported it twice, and are ready to report it again at the next session of Congress. What does such an amendment imply? It implies taking away from the State the right of local self-government. From the beginning of this Government the States have exercised the right to fix the qualifications of suffrage, and that right has only been questioned one time, namely, by the adoption of the fifteenth amendment. And if a vote were taken in every State in this Union to-day upon that question I verily believe that the seal of disapproval of the American people would be against the wisdom of that amendment. [Applause.]

Yet I am not discussing that, because I realize it was the aftermath of a great civil war. But here now, in a time of war, when we ought to be considering questions affecting the protection of our dignity and our national rights, we are called upon to create a committee to consider a resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States whose only purpose is to violate a fundamental principle of government and take away from the States that ancient right to regulate the qualifications for suffrage which they have always enjoyed.

Mr. Speaker, we have gone too far and we are considering too lightly this matter of amendments to the Constitution in violation of the fundamental right of local self-government. The prohibitionists have come forward and they are seeking to amend. Shall we have a committee on prohibition? There are some who believe that the Federal Government by constitutional amendment should be given jurisdiction over insurance.

Shall we have a committee on that? There are others who believe that Congress should be given the jurisdiction of marriage and divorce. Shall we have a committee and propose a resolution to amend the Constitution in that respect?

No one for a moment would favor such a suggestion, and no one should favor a suggestion for a committee to consider an amendment to our Constitution upon the question of woman suffrage. I am opposed to Congress, upon any of these questions involving the right of local government, surrendering its functions, our legislative integrity, our capacity, and our right to consider the merits and demerits of proposed amendments to the Constitution, and upon the specious plea that we shall act simply as the spokesman of some propagandists here and there who favor this reform or that reform.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, may I have two minutes more?

Mr. POU. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SMALL. And because, forsooth, they encountered the obstacle of delay, because the right rests with the State to determine this question, they come to Congress and tell us that we should surrender our functions and our dignity and propose any amendment to the Constitution of the United States which any set of men and women throughout the country may desire. The jurisdiction of a resolution to amend the Constitution for woman suffrage ought to remain where it is, with that committee, carefully selected, of eminent lawyers on both sides of the House, who, appreciating their oath to defend the Constitution and the fundamental rights of the States, will give that consideration to all these vital questions which their importance deserves. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia has given the strongest reason of any yet that I have heard why this resolution should not be passed, and that is, forsooth, because there is no committee on male suffrage there should not be one on female suffrage. That reason has no strength whatever, because we men have suffrage already.

The distinguished gentleman from North Carolina says that it is beneath the dignity of this House to have a committee on suffrage. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a question that gives to women any rights is not beneath the dignity of this House. [Applause.] The distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, says that it is against our caucus agreement that there should be any legislation during this extra session upon this question. This is not legislation which is proposed at this time. The creation of a committee is not legislation. The legislation, as I understand it, will come afterwards. It will come at the next session.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Just what legislation now will this committee consider?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the legislation has to be considered by some committee at some time, and why can not a committee be at work now upon the question? Why can there not be a committee at this time, carefully considering the thousands of petitions which are coming into this Nation's capital every day upon the subject? [Applause.] Is there not plenty of work for the committee to do? Some committee should be at work upon it at this time, and I say that the time is ripe when a committee should be considering this question.

In the great Lone Star State, 58 counties of which it is my honor to represent, a State which is the largest in this Union, every person over 21 years of age may vote except a convict, a lunatic, and a woman. [Applause.] I am not willing that woman shall be placed in the same class and category in the Lone Star State with a convict and a lunatic. [Applause.]

We are grossly inconsistent in being willing to permit our good women of the United States to faithfully toil in Red Cross service during war times, to nurse our maimed and wounded, to lovingly provide clothes and bandages for their wounds, to materially assist in conserving the food supply of the Nation, to run the public elevators of the country, to drive trucks and automobiles in service on the front, to enter daringly the aircrafts upon which now we so largely depend; in short, to do every kind of service and bear every kind of sacrifice—we are willing to permit them to do all of these things for the good of their country, but when they ask us to graciously confer upon them a God-given, inherent right it is beneath our dignity to give such request any serious consideration. I intend to support the resolution. We owe it to the womankind of America. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get rid of the woman-suffrage business if for no other reason than to get rid of the silly arguments that are used on both sides of the question. [Laughter.]

The proposition is so elementary: A woman is either a human being or she is not. She is either a member of the community or she is not. If she is a member of the community, she has a right to vote, as to vote means to participate in the making of those rules which are binding upon the community.

As to this suggestion of a committee, I am going to vote for it, but not with any particular enthusiasm, because it looks to me like a miserable sop which politicians give to would-be politicians. [Laughter.]

Mr. GORDON. That is all it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. That is all it is. But, on the other hand, it is a concession to the existence of a demand for woman suffrage. It is a cowardly, timid concession that the right of suffrage should be extended gradually, unwillingly, reluctantly, politicianlike, not statesmanlike; but because of the value of that concession I shall have to vote for the creation of a committee. Of course the committee can not do any more than the Committee on the Judiciary has done up to now.

What I dislike about it is the avoidance of the big issue—the question of an amendment to the National Constitution. Nothing seems to be more absurd, more grotesque, more indefensible than the appeal by Democrats to the States' rights idea to-day. In time of war they dare talk of States' rights! How would you like to permit every State to organize a little army of its own? How would you like every State to vote on the question of appropriations for the Army and Navy? States' rights!

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman think that war blots out the States?

Mr. LONDON. I think that the States have been blotted out long ago. A million men died on the battle field to destroy artificial State lines. There is an American people, one people, one and indivisible, and the States are mere geographical conveniences. If they are not conveniences, they are nothing else. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman does not believe in any local self-government at all?

Mr. LONDON. I believe in local self-government so far as it is limited by geographical needs. But when you come to consider the rights of human beings, these can not be limited by geographical considerations. [Applause.] When the gentleman from Texas talks of local self-government he uses a geographical term. What does "local" mean? It relates to space, to place, to the ground.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Is not the gentleman just carried away by his enthusiasm when he says the State lines are all blotted out?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, I manage to combine enthusiasm with good sense. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman from North Carolina kindly give me five minutes?

Mr. POUL. I regret I have no time left.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] give me three minutes? I want to rap the Democrats. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given one minute in which to answer seriously the question whether he believes that the States should be wiped out.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If my friend from New York can use the time I give him for the purpose named, I will yield to him two minutes more. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. Very well. Nothing is more absurd than the claim of State rights to-day by a party which has federalized the State militia, and so has done away with the last refuge of the States. The State militia was supposed to be an army organized by the State and existing for the purpose of protecting the State against the encroachments of the Federal Government. Now they have federalized the State militia. They talk about national insurance, about national road commissions, and national road appropriations; but when it comes to the rights of the human being, to the rights of the individual, then they raise the question of State rights. Many of them will vote for national prohibition, or in favor of submitting an amendment which will allow the farmers of Texas to vote on the question of prohibiting a man in New York from drinking a glass of beer. They would allow people in one end of this country to regulate the personal habits of people in the other end of this country; they see no objection to that, but when it comes to a question involving an extension of human liberty they raise the question of State rights. It is untenable. I wish they could face the real issue, and now is the time; and if the women would be energetic enough and brave enough, and not try to play a political game, and not imitate the vices of the men in politics, and compromise and practice the art of political trimmers they would get an amendment to the Constitution. Those who do not ask surely will not receive. [Applause.]

I submit that the country is ready for an amendment to the National Constitution conferring the franchise upon woman.

The right of woman to shape national legislation is a national concern. The Federal Government is ever extending its sphere of activity into fields of legislation heretofore held as exclusively belonging to the States.

Industry, commerce, trade, finance, the principal activities of modern society have overcome all artificial State barriers.

Of course, there is a great deal of frivolous argument used on both sides of the woman-suffrage question.

There is the exaggerated pretension of the suffrage partisan that with the political enfranchisement of woman there will immediately come a regeneration of the human race; that poverty will disappear; vice will be here no more; temperance will become the rule; the child will be taken out of the factory and mine and restored to its mother; in short, that all that is necessary to bring about a complete change of society is to grant woman the vote.

The opponent of the extension of the franchise, notwithstanding the fact that the vote has already been obtained by woman in 12 States of the Union and in some European countries occupying the foremost position among the civilized nations of the world, still continues to repeat the old, worn-out contention that the enfranchisement of woman will destroy the home, pollute political life, degrade woman, and that neither as a matter of right nor expediency is it desirable or advisable to confer upon her political equality.

The great difficulty with both the defenders and opponents of the extension of the franchise is that they lack a social philosophy.

What does the franchise mean? What does the right to vote signify? Is it a privilege or a right? Is it a favor to be granted by the State, or is it an inalienable right of every human being? Is it not more than a right? Is it not a duty?

The study of the struggle for the franchise and its gradual extension from the upper classes to the lower classes of society will furnish the answer to the question.

Democracy means the right to participate in the making of laws.

We have long ago rid ourselves of the doctrine that government is a divine institution, imposed upon society from above, and that the governing power has the special sanction of God.

We have long ago abandoned the theological idea of government and the theological State.

To us government is not an institution by itself, independent and outside of the people whom it governs, but a mere agency giving expression to the collective will and the collective conscience of the community.

As we study the struggle of democracy and for democracy we find the assertion of the right to limit the power of kings declared in the Magna Charta by the barons of England who refused to concede to the Crown the exclusive right to govern the land and to control the imposition of burdens upon property.

Property and liberty were then considered almost synonymous. The landlords or the owners of land were the only ones who claimed the right to participate in governing and in the making of laws.

The law was primarily designed to protect their rights to own and control the land and to compel observance by the rest of the community of the laws which involved submission to the rules imposed upon the nation by the landowning class.

Law and order then stood for the law and order as made by the owners of property, or by the owners of land; no one else dreamt of asking for participation in the making of those laws.

With the growth of commerce and industry, the commercial and industrial classes increasing in importance and in power, finding themselves in possession of enormous sums of money and capital which was needed by the kings and barons in their numerous wars, asserted their right to participate in the making of laws, their right to have a say on the question of the extent and burden of taxation. Again the right to participate in the making of laws and in the Government meant the right to control the laws regulating the acquisition and protection of property.

It is only when you come down to the beginning of the nineteenth century that the principle of taking part in the making of laws assumes the popular form, and the right to share in the government is no longer made dependent upon the possession of property, but is based upon the right of every individual to legislate those rules of conduct which shall be compulsory for all.

In other words, the right to govern, which meant the right to vote, was based prior to the nineteenth century upon property, and property was recognized only either in land or capital. The principle that every human being owes an allegiance to the law only when he participates in its making began to gain ground only in the last century.

We find that at the time the American Constitution was framed almost every State of the Union required of the voter some property qualification, the old principle still being retained.

It was not that every human being was entitled to participate in the government, but it was only the human being who had property that had a share in the government.

The famous struggle in Rhode Island in 1842, the so-called Dorr rebellion, introduced a substantial change and liberalized the law of Rhode Island. Up to that time the constitution of Rhode Island followed the charter of 1663, according to which only landlords and their first-born sons had a right to vote.

A study of the franchise in European countries, with their classes and their curiae and their plural voting point to property as the source of the franchise.

Until very recently they had in Austria-Hungary a complicated curia system with five classes of electors—the large landowners, the cities, chambers of commerce, rural communes, and the rest of the male population constituting the fifth class. The system was devised so as to give to the great masses the minimum representation. The curia system still prevails in several Austrian Provinces.

In Prussia they have a three-class system based upon the amount of taxes each class pays, calculated to give to the majority of the people the least of representation.

The plural system of voting has survived in England, where the owner of several parcels of property votes in the several counties in proportion to and on the basis of the property he holds.

In the Netherlands the ownership of a fishing boat of a certain size carries with it the right to vote.

The propertyless individual who could only contribute his work to the community was not taken into account. He had nothing to say as to how society should be governed.

Law and order meant the law and order of the propertied classes imposed upon the propertyless.

Analyzing history in the light of the struggle of men for the franchise, we understand the full significance of the woman's struggle for the vote.

It is something more than granting the vote to woman as distinguished from man.

The enfranchisement of woman means the placing of human society upon a higher basis than that which has heretofore formed the foundation of our law; it is no longer a question of property right, but a question of human rights.

The unit of the community is no longer the individual who pays a certain amount of taxes for land or who owns a certain amount of capital, but the human being, the human being who contributes his or her share of work to the welfare of the community, whether it be in factory, mine, counting room, or university; whether it be by the practice of a profession or of a trade, the individual is the unit of society to-day.

The principle of the vote as inseparable from property was recognized to such an extent in the past that many decades ago, irrespective of the broad question of woman's emancipation, widows and spinsters who had property were given the right to vote on questions of taxation.

In other words, there was the same theory—property had the right to vote and not the human being.

If the woman had property, she had the right to vote.

The extension of woman's suffrage means a contribution to genuine democracy. It will mean that for the first time in history the individual will be recognized as the basis of the community.

We can recognize only one basis for legislation—that which comes from a free expression of the will of all the individuals who compose society.

The unit of civilized life is the individual.

That is why woman suffrage has so much significance for the men who dream of a better society.

We are on the threshold of a nobler civilization.

The past is undergoing merciless scrutiny. We are revising our laws and our codes of morals.

The mere fact that a notion or a theory is old has no special significance for us, but, on the contrary, stimulates us to a more thorough analysis and scrutiny.

There are great evils to be eliminated.

There are many wrongs to be righted.

We can not rest content; and while the world can not be changed by the lawmaking power only, the participation of every human being in the making of a better world can not be denied.

The extension of the franchise to woman means the extension of democracy. It means an opportunity to every human being to contribute his or her share to the building of a better world.

Mr. POUL. I believe I have seven minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think I have 34 minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 38 minutes remaining.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] like to have me use some time?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] five minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of the rights of men or the rights of women. It is not a question of woman suffrage. It is not a question of the propriety or the wisdom of giving the right of suffrage to the women of the United States. It is not a question whether woman suffrage shall be determined by State laws or by national laws, or whether women shall secure the right to vote from the States or from the Federal Government. It is simply a question whether or not there is any real, substantial, valid reason why a special committee shall be created to consider bills and resolutions relating to woman suffrage. This question must be answered in the negative.

I do not agree with some of the gentlemen who have opposed this rule. For instance, the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], says that a majority of the Judiciary Committee are against woman suffrage. In this I think he is mistaken. He may speak correctly as to how the committee has stood, but I do not think he has authority at the present time to state the attitude of that committee. I do not know, neither do I think he knows, how that committee stands if a vote were taken to-day. I do not think he is correct in asserting that a majority of this House are against woman suffrage to-day. In my opinion, if we should take a vote to-day, a majority of this House would vote for woman suffrage. [Applause.] For myself, even before I became a Member of Congress, I went to the polls as a citizen of Oklahoma and voted to amend our constitution so as to confer the right of suffrage upon the women of our State. At every opportunity that I have had as a member of the Judiciary Committee I have voted to report the woman-suffrage amendment favorably. At every opportunity, in the committee room or in the House of Representatives, or as a citizen of my State, I have stood for woman suffrage. But that is not the question we have here to-day. You propose by this resolution to create a new committee. To create that committee means that you are to take jurisdiction away from the Judiciary Committee. That ought not to be done unless there is some good, solid, substantial reason for so doing. I submit no such reason has been given here to-day, and in my judgment can not be given.

Woman suffrage is a disputed question, a question that is in controversy here in this House, in the Senate, and everywhere throughout the Union. You propose here to appoint a special committee. As suggested by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, Mr. WEBB, are you going to appoint a committee that is favorable to woman suffrage? Is that to be the test? Is no man to go on that committee unless he is favorable to woman suffrage? Are you going to line up the Members of the House and ask them to state their position before you select that committee? The probabilities are that the advocates of woman suffrage will try to see that this new committee shall be in favor of woman suffrage. Otherwise they would not be in favor of creating the new committee. Is that the way the great committees of this House should be appointed? I think not. The members of the Judiciary Committee were appointed not with regard to their views on woman suffrage, prohibition, or any other question. They were appointed impartially, without regard to their views on national questions. They were all supposed to be good men, ready to do what is right. This is the way committees should be appointed. If this new committee shall be created, men will be appointed thereon because they are for or against the proposition. I do not think that is wise.

As to whether or not the creation of this new committee is a reflection upon the Judiciary Committee, I do not think that should have any great weight with any of us in our vote. It is natural for members of the Judiciary Committee to feel that it would be a reflection, but that should not control any man in his vote upon this rule. I hope this motion will be defeated. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution not because I am a member of the Judiciary Committee but because I think the issue is much larger than the transferring of jurisdiction from one committee of this House to another. The question here is whether in the closing days of a special session of Congress we are to take action which will seem to yield to the demands of some iron-jawed angels who have been picketing the gateways to the Executive Mansion and flaunting in the face of the Chief Magistrate of this Nation banners seemingly treasonable and seditious in character and which if used by a poor workingman in an attempt to get his rights would speedily have put him behind the bars for treason or sedition; and these poor, bewildered, deluded creatures, after their disgusting exhibition, can thank their stars that because they wear skirts they are now incarcerated for misdemeanors of a minor character. Why should we submit to this demand at this time when you have been told the attitude of the Judiciary Committee? When the hearings closed, even during this special session of Congress, I stated that I was willing to vote to report out the resolution submitting to the people this question at this session, and I am willing to do so now; and if it be submitted before we adjourn I am willing also to report out the other resolution to submit to the people the other question of a national constitutional amendment, namely, that of national constitutional prohibition, because both these measures have been pending before the Judiciary Committee and the demand for the submission of one is just as insistent as for the other.

Now, as has been pointed out, if this special committee is appointed just before we adjourn, no great benefit will inure to the cause of suffrage, because the chairman of the Rules Committee says that he does not intend that this special committee shall report a resolution before we adjourn, but that they will wait until December. The Committee on the Judiciary, that has always had jurisdiction, intends to report out a resolution in December, and has made no attempt to hide such intention.

The gentleman from New York—the lone representative of the Socialist Party in this body—has given his views, and talks of greater democracy. We had a representative of that party before the committee, who coincided practically with the views expressed by some of the principal suffrage proponents who appeared before the committee, to the effect that if they were not given suffrage the American people need not expect that the women of America would do their patriotic duty during this war. Are we by any subsidiary action, even though it means only the transfer of jurisdiction, to take action here which will say to the great American people, and to all the women of America, and to the hundreds of thousands of women who are opposed to having suffrage put upon them, particularly in a time of stress and strife under which this country is now passing—are we to say that we can be driven into this mere incidental action by an exhibition that we have been witnessing in Washington during the past few months, when the Chief Magistrate of the Nation has been wrestling with war problems, and say we supinely yield to your unpatriotic antics to a certain class of women picketing the gates of his official residence—yes, even posing with their short skirts and short hair within the view of this very Capitol and our office building, with banners which would seek to lead the people to believe that because we did not take action during this war session upon suffrage, if you please, and grant them the right of the ballot, that we were traitors to the cause of the American Republic?

It is a matter of congratulation in the great question that confronted this country at the beginning of this session that the majority of this House of Representatives did not hold the views that are held by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. STAFFORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, of all times, this is the most inopportune for the Congress of the United States to pass any such resolution condoning the outlawry that has been going on the past several months here in Washington. The judgment of this House in passing this resolution will be construed by the country at large with one purpose in mind, and that is that it is a premium and sop to those militants who have been disgracing themselves, disgracing Washington, disgracing the President by hovering around the White House carrying banners inscribed, in some instances, with insulting phrase. What other purpose have the supporters of this resolution except to bolster up their waning cause when they were defeated, and righteously defeated, in Maine, where the electorate of that great State, although a large number were sympathetic to the suffrage cause, repudiated such practices? But, after that defeat, the leaders of the suffrage cause said, On to Washington and force recognition by Congress. What else can our action here to-day mean to the country at large? And what advantage can be gained by the creation of this committee? No action will be taken by the committee at the present session. The Judiciary Committee, framed substantially as it was when this resolution was presented in the Congress before last, is ready to present the only proposition that will be considered by this committee, a resolution for an amendment to the Constitution at the next session of Congress.

If it were a question of suffrage, if the National Government were going to abolish State lines altogether and create one great national sovereignty to pass on all questions, then there might be some necessity in creating a committee on suffrage to determine the qualifications of both male and female suffrage; but the question alone is a constitutional amendment providing for woman suffrage, but at this time for us to take this up with these glaring instances of abuse on their part is most ill timed. The militant class will exclaim, "Ah, see how we have driven the great House of Representatives to recognize our rights. If we keep up the same sort of practices we will compel the House, when they come to vote on the constitutional amendment, to surrender obeisantly likewise."

Gentlemen, there is only one question before the House to-day, and that is, if you look at it from a political aspect, whether you wish to approve the practices of these women who have been disgracing their cause here in Washington for the past several months. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire how the time now stands?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has 23 minutes, the gentleman from Kansas has 4 minutes, and the gentleman from North Carolina has 7 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I have no prejudice against woman suffrage. If it were legally possible for the women to settle this great question themselves, that would be perfectly satisfactory to me.

I am opposed to this resolution for two reasons:

First. Because the majority in this House notified us early in the session—last April—that only war measures would be considered at this extra session of Congress. You intimate now that this resolution is not legislation and therefore does not come within the understanding. I do not concur in that view. I have consistently voted during this session for every bill demanded by the Executive and deemed necessary for the vigorous and successful prosecution of the war. I propose to continue to do that, and the consideration of war measures ought to be our sole business during this extra session of Congress.

Second. Because this question of woman suffrage is now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I have the honor to be a member. We have heard extended arguments for and against woman suffrage. I assume that a decision will be given by the committee at the next regular session of Congress and a report made to the House. Tell me one reason why you should take away from the Judiciary Committee this question now pending before it and under consideration by its members.

There is not any reason why this resolution should come before the House at this time. It means the creation of a useless committee. What on earth could it do? You admit that there is only one thing which it could do, and that is to frame up a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution for submission to the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. No; I have not the time. Do you not think that the members of the Judiciary Committee are competent to submit to the House a resolution for the Members to vote upon? No one can give any substantial reason why the Judiciary Committee should be deprived of jurisdiction in the premises, particularly at a time when the question of woman suffrage is pending before it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, in two minutes I hardly have time enough to say that I am in favor of woman suffrage and against this committee. Many reasons pro and con have been repeated upon this floor to such an extent that further argument may seem unnecessary. I desire only to say a few words to explain my vote. It seems to me to be ridiculous to appoint a special committee to make a report on the woman suffrage amendment. The proposition the women want passed is the Susan B. Anthony amendment. No one disputes that fact. Everyone who is interested in this committee simply desires this one proposition submitted to a vote in the House. There is nothing then for a committee to study, as the form of the legislation is agreed on. The question of policy is for the House and not for the committee in matters of this kind. As bearing upon the question of policy the Judiciary Committee has had repeated hearings. Ample opportunity has been afforded each side to present facts and arguments. The question now is simply this: Shall we create this committee purely for political purposes? Let me call to the attention of the friends of suffrage this one thing. Whenever the enemies of legislation want to delay a thing they appoint a committee, do they not, to study the proposition? That is the practice in legislative bodies not only to delay, but to defeat action. You know as everyone who has taken any interest that the Judiciary Committee is going to report the suffrage amendment next December. That will be done if you leave it with the Judiciary Committee; but if you appoint another committee you do not know whether it is going to be reported at all? You can not know unless you know that the new committee is to be packed for the purpose of making a report.

The creation of this committee will not help woman's suffrage but will be used as an argument against those who urge it. It will be pointed to as a concession that, in a measure, should satisfy its advocates for a time at least. You will notice that it will be voted for very largely by those who are opposed to equal suffrage. I am not going to vote to hazard a chance for its consideration at this time.

In this discussion some very unfair comments have been made upon the women who picketed the White House. While I do not approve of picketing, I disapprove much more strongly the hoodlum methods pursued in suppressing the practice. I gather from the press that this is what took place: Some women did, in a peaceable and perfectly lawful manner, display suffrage banners on the public street near the White House. To stop this the police allowed the women to be mobbed, and then because the mob obstructed the street the women were arrested and fined, while the mob went scot-free. This occurrence reminds one of the disgraceful attack made on the suffrage parade in this city a few years ago. Does not such shameless conduct argue that women do need the vote to protect themselves? If the guardians of peace and those who boast of their chivalry to women have no more regard for woman's rights than this argues, it is high time that something besides cheap politics be demanded.

I was sorry to note that several speakers made disparaging remarks about the women who ask a right to vote. Heat of debate can not justify this. No better women can be found anywhere than can be found among the hundreds of thousands enlisted in this cause. One of the unkindest cuts of all was an insinuation that certain women demanded as a condition for their patriotic support of the Government in this war that suffrage be granted to them. Though I have been present at all the suffrage hearings had before the Judiciary Committee during the last four or five years, no organization and no individual has urged anything that by any fair construction could be tortured into any such attitude. Such a suggestion is not only without foundation, it is cruel. It is ruthless warfare.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE].

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, I think some larger questions are involved in this proposition than woman suffrage. Esau sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, and I do not doubt that the pottage was very good, and he has many spiritual descendants to-day. Every departure from old lines and standards has been upon the plea that the purpose sought to be accomplished was a good one. That is natural, because otherwise the inherent merits of the proposition would defeat it. We have a committee with ample jurisdiction to consider the question of woman suffrage, and as a matter of fact it has been considered. The moral effect is the only purpose for the creation of this special committee. It is an instruction to that committee to bring in a favorable report. In addition, Mr. Speaker, it would be well nigh impossible in the election of that committee—to use a slang phrase—not to “salt it,” because the views of every Member of the House upon the question of woman suffrage are very well known, and the Members going upon that committee where you already have a committee with ample jurisdiction which has been considering the question—this special committee being appointed would feel quite naturally that the appointment was an instruction by the House to bring in a favorable report. Personally, whenever the women of Mississippi wish to vote I am perfectly willing that they should do so, but I believe in the sanctity of campaign pledges. I believe that our platform is specific. Aside from that, I believe that the franchise question should be left to the States. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is rather impatient with the form of government which was created by the fathers. He is not alone in his impatience, but I believe that the Federal Government should not enter upon the business of fixing the franchise qualifications. I think this can be wisely left to the States, and that was the doctrine taught by Thomas Jefferson.

The Judiciary Committee of the House has ample authority to consider the question of the submission of an amendment to the Federal Constitution, and the fact is that it has been considering it for several terms. The real complaint is that it has not seen fit to bring in a favorable report, and so now it is sought to have the House constitute a special committee on woman suffrage, with the hope that the very adoption by the House of the plan to have such a committee will act as instructions to its members to bring in a favorable report. Why have such a committee otherwise? It is not needed; it is not required, for no one has been denied a hearing by the Judiciary Committee, which now has jurisdiction. But, as I have said, a larger question is involved than that of woman suffrage.

I am opposed to such a committee, in the first place, because our Democratic platform, which is the party pledge to the people, expressly states that the question of woman suffrage is a question for the States. This being true, why create a committee for the submission of a constitutional amendment to the Federal Constitution and thus impliedly say that it is national in character? Why create such a committee, if its purpose be not to furnish the recommendation upon which we will break party fealty and the solemn pledge made to the American people?

The same observations are pertinent to the attitude of the Republican Members of the House, for their platform was practically the same as that of the Democrats.

It is argued, however, that the creation of such a committee would not pledge the membership voting for it to vote for a resolution submitting an amendment of the Constitution to the legislatures of the States, but, on the contrary, would be simply affording an opportunity to hold hearings and obtain more information on the question.

To begin with, this argument is false as to fact. We have been holding hearings for several years, and every argument for and against such an amendment to the Federal Constitution has been made and made again, until every Member of the House is familiar with them, and this fact is known of each Member and of those proposing the creation of this committee. No added facilities are needed to get the merits of the proposed amendment before the membership of the House.

Again, if those Members voting for the creation of this committee do not do so with the implied understanding that the question is an open one with them and that they will vote for the submission of such a constitutional amendment if they become convinced by the committee hearings and by a favorable report of the committee that such a step is wise and right, they are doing an idle and futile thing. So it follows that those who vote for this resolution are doing either an idle thing or else are taking the position that the platform of their party does not bind them and that they will cheerfully repudiate one of the things upon which the party asked for power and authority.

In the second place, I am opposed to the creation of such a committee with its creation being a practical instruction to bring in a favorable report for a further and more fundamental reason.

I believe that the fathers of the country were acting with wisdom when they decreed that local conditions were to be legislated upon by the local communities who lived under them; that the institution of local self-government was in fact a condition of local freedom. They decided that matters of franchise were to be left with the States, for they thought that with the varying conditions in each State it could be best left with those communities which best knew conditions. Now, it is proposed that the Federal Government shall go into the business of setting up standards for the exercise of the franchise. Can there be any man who has watched the course of national legislation who does not know that when once the Federal Government begins to exercise authority in a given field it eventually occupies the whole field?

Congress was wisely given the right to regulate commerce between the States and foreign nations. Has it stopped at this? No; true to its tendency, under the guise of regulating commerce, it has passed laws which if upheld as constitutional will take from the States all right to regulate their local affairs where the activities of the people result in a product which is shipped in interstate commerce.

Everything can be so regulated—the size, shape, and structure of factories; the labor of men and women; what they shall work for and what they shall demand; hours of labor; and every conceivable thing connected with the growing, the creation, or the manufacture of any article which is to be shipped in interstate commerce. Many of these things may be good, but in this realm the people of the States were intended to be left to say what was good and to have it or not as they pleased, and were not intended to be forced to accept the congressional standard of goodness.

Now it is proposed that Congress should enter upon franchise matters and fix standards, taking this from the States.

Of course if Congress fixes standards it will see, or at least pretend to see, that these standards are observed. Federal supervision of elections is the next step which will follow fast.

Heaven help the South when ignorance, race hatred, and political corruption are again marshaled to do the bidding of political exigency.

Some may say that my fears are groundless and my objections are far-fetched. Maybe so. This I know, that the course upon which we are about to enter contains these possibilities. The course mapped out by the great political thinkers who founded the Government and placed the safeguards of the liberties of the people in the great fundamental law contain no such dangers. The old paths are well known and safe; the new ones are blind and maybe are filled with gins and pitfalls.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have 10 minutes remaining, have I not?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There will be two more speeches on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the opponents of this proposition seem to be limited for the most part, first, to the members of the Committee on the Judiciary, and, second, to those who are opposed to woman suffrage on the merits of the proposition. Regarding the first, may I say the supporters of the resolution cast thereby no reflection upon the Committee on the Judiciary. That great committee has the confidence and respect of the Members of the House. But from the beginning of the Government this legislative body, as all legislative bodies, has acted through committees. Committees are mere agencies for the consideration and expedition of business of the House. They are the servants of the House, and are called into being as the business of the country from time to time demands consideration.

We had no Committee on Elections except special committees until 1794. We had only one committee until 1895, and then we provided for three. We had no Committee on Appropriations until 1865 and no Committee on Banking and Currency until the same year. The Ways and Means Committee, which had been a special committee until 1802, performed for more than 60 years the work of the two other great committees of this body, the Appropriations Committee and the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Interstate Commerce Committee was created in 1795 and did the work that it now does and, in addition, the work of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. We had no Committee on Rivers and Harbors until 1883, when the work of this country, through the demand for greater river and harbor improvements and the time upon the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce made it necessary for us to create a Committee on Rivers and Harbors. In turn that committee not only handled river and harbor work but the question of flood control until a comparatively recent date. Then we created a Committee on Flood Control. The Irrigation Committee, the Committee on Mines and Mining were both split off from the Committee on Public Lands, and so it has been with the organization of other committees of this body. There was no reflection upon the parent committees, but rather the recognition of some great problem to be specially cared for. So here there is no reflection upon the Judiciary Committee, but rather a recognition of the proposition that before us is a great question that the American people ought to be given the opportunity to have considered in all its ramifications through a committee appointed for that particular purpose.

The passage of this resolution does not mean that the question shall be decided one way or the other; it does not mean that women shall have the right to vote; that an amendment to the Constitution shall pass; but, rather, it does mean that the question that involves the rights of one-half of the people of the United States shall, on coming before this body, have a hearing before a committee constituted for the purpose of dealing with so important a question.

And, gentlemen, if the business of the country demanded the appointment of many other committees of this House, what shall we say of a question that involves the political status of 20,000,000 people?

You have a Committee on Mines and Mining, yet the sacred rights of a free people are more than the wealth of all the mines. You have a Committee on Insular Affairs, yet here is a committee that would have to do with the people at home. You have a Committee on Indian Affairs, and that handles the problems of a people we are leading on to splendid citizenship; yet here is a committee that would have to do with the franchise of the women of our country, who always have been the peers of those to whom suffrage has been granted during the days of the Republic.

The gentleman from Georgia said we have no committee on man suffrage, his inference being that because of that we need none on woman suffrage.

Why, the very words of opposition are the strongest argument. Does the gentleman forget that lack of man suffrage was what caused our Revolution? Do we forget that we had not one committee but committees in every hamlet from Cape Cod to the Colony of Georgia, all of them working for manhood suffrage? Do we forget that the very fact that manhood suffrage is Nation wide removes all necessity for a committee on man suffrage?

Another speaker says it is beneath our dignity to create this committee. But why? It was not beneath the dignity of our fathers to fight for liberty a hundred years ago. It has not been beneath our dignity to stand for freedom for the down pressed of other lands. It is not beneath our dignity to-day to support as we believe in the world war the side that stands for human rights, for liberty, for suffrage in a large sense, if you please.

May I now turn for a moment to those who oppose this resolution because they are opposed to woman suffrage.

Again I ask, Why? Are they not in favor of fair play? Do they want all the facts, or are they afraid that further inquiry and further consideration will strengthen the cause of suffrage? For my part I believe it will. Some of our opponents urge that suffrage is being repudiated in elections that are being held. If so, why should they oppose the creation of a committee that would accentuate this deplorable condition? Rather, gentlemen, I believe that the more this question is debated, the more it is discussed in Congress and on the platform and by the fireside, the stronger must be the claim of those for suffrage, who at all times and under all circumstances have been loyal to our country. I remember well the words of a dear mother of two sons who have already gone to France to do their "bit." She said to me, as the tears filled her eyes, "I am proud of my boys, but I am living in Gethsemane." Gentlemen, the women of our land are not only living in the garden of sorrow, but they are doing their full share in carrying forward the great work upon which our Nation is engaged.

Surely it is not asking too much to ask for a committee that will give its time to the question of woman's full share in government.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I differ just a little from some of the gentlemen who have said that this was not a war measure. I am inclined to think it is a war measure; that the war on the Committee on Rules has gotten so warm that they want to transfer it to the Committee on Ways and Means, who will name the Democratic members of the proposed committee.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to argue the merits of the proposition as to whether a constitutional amendment should be adopted or not. I feel, coming from the South, we could set forth one good reason why the great question of suffrage ought not to be taken away from the States, as memory carries us back to the end of the Civil War, when the smoke of conflict had been raging and the outrageous fifteenth amendment was put upon our people, and it seems to me that we ought to be very careful when we undertake to give other States the right to say who shall have suffrage among the people in the several States.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is no necessity for this proposed committee, and those who are contending for it can not say and do not say that there is. I am not a member of that great Judiciary Committee, but there is no man or woman living who can say that the committee has ever dealt unfairly with the suffragettes. Then what reason can there be for the committee other than to secure a stacked committee? I am not charging any such reason to the splendid members of the Rules Committee that favor this resolution, because I believe a greater motive, perhaps, may have prompted them, and that was the way to get rid of the war these women were making on them. But, Mr. Speaker, what other motive could have prompted the propaganda that has been forcing itself on the Committee on Rules and trying to force itself on the House except the hope of getting a packed committee? And when this House transfers the nagging from the Committee on Rules, mark my prediction, the members of the Ways and Means are going to suffer that same nagging. They have shown their purpose in the Senate. We do not need any better evidence that that is the purpose of this resolution. Woman suffrage has the personnel and the sympathy and the sentiment of all those who constitute the Suffrage Committee in the Senate.

I am going to read in my time a short portion of a letter written by Mrs. Richards, a most excellent correspondent of a number of newspapers in New England, in a recent article to the Woman's Protest, a correspondent who has looked very carefully into this matter, and this is what she says:

There is but one committee in Congress composed of hand-picked Members whose avowed convictions before appointment were all on one side of the vital question which their committee had been expressly organized to consider. That is the Senate Committee on Suffrage. All of the other 133 committees of Congress are bipartisan, not only on political questions, but represent varying sentiments on the specific topics which it is the duty of each committee to consider. But the Senate Committee on Suffrage, with its nine members, provides no representation for the millions of women throughout the country who oppose suffrage and who are urging Congress to protect them from the threatened invasion of militant women. The committee is composed of Senators JONES (chairman), New Mexico; OWEN, Oklahoma; RANSDELL, Louisiana; HOLLIS, New Hampshire; JOHNSON, South Dakota; JONES, Washington; NELSON, Minnesota; CUMMINS, Iowa; and JOHNSON, California. Each of these Senators had, prior to his appointment, expressed himself by voice or vote as favoring woman's suffrage. The full import of this lack of representation for the women who opposed suffrage can be best realized when it is recalled that every petition, resolution, or proposed Federal law relating to suffrage must be first placed in the hands of this committee, which considers it behind closed doors, and later reports to the full Senate its findings as to the merits of the case. And the committee report often sways the vote of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, does any Member of the House believe those gentlemen who are insisting upon this resolution would be willing to accept an amendment to the resolution that the personnel of that committee should be divided in the proportion that the Members of the House of Representatives stand on that question? It would be a fair thing to do, but the Committee on Ways and Means, when they come to pass on this question, I hope will stand up and do what is fair, and if they do it against the pressure that is brought they have got twice as much iron in them and a little more strength than some have. We all know how powerful is the influence and tenacity of a woman when fully aroused. I have been working in double harness, Mr. Speaker, for the last 30 years, and I learned a long time ago that when she says "Go" he goeth and when she says "Come" he cometh. And I think that other men are the same. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not regard this movement as a reflection upon the Judiciary Committee of this House. If I entertained seriously that thought, I would certainly vote against the resolution. When a similar committee was created in the Senate, members of the Judiciary Committee of that august body did not resent it and did not regard it as a reflection upon themselves. I hope the members of this committee will permit us to give the women of this country a day in court. [Applause.] Give them a committee, with a chairman in full sympathy with their aspirations.

Mr. GORDON. Do you want a hand-picked committee?

Mr. AUSTIN. No. I consider that statement a reflection upon the honor of this House, to say it will be a hand-picked committee. We are not selecting committees in that way under the splendid administration of our honored and impartial Speaker.

I hope there will be chivalry and fairness enough in this House to elect the Member from Montana [Miss RANKIN] as chairman of this proposed committee, who so well, efficiently, and faithfully represents the great State of Montana on the floor of this House. Mr. Speaker, there are two great public questions which will be settled only in one way in America, and they will be settled right. The prohibition question is fast being settled. There comes hand in hand with and directly back of it this question of suffrage for the American women. Just as sure as to-morrow's sun will rise, it is coming. You may stop it here to-day. You might block it in this Congress, but the sentiment in favor of it grows with the days and the hours. There will be fairness enough, justice enough, honor enough among the thinking American people to give them the rights which they deserve and to which they are justly entitled. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Each of the three gentlemen has five minutes remaining. If nobody wants to speak, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, we have listened to many and varied arguments by those who oppose the organization of a Woman Suffrage Committee in the House. They may be all right in their way, but most of them do not weigh much.

It has been argued that the "picketing of the White House" by the so-called militant suffragettes is sufficient reason for refusal to authorize this committee. I heartily agree that the conduct of these misguided individuals has been unreasonable, but I maintain that it is vastly more unreasonable for any Member here to make their universally repudiated tactics his excuse for voting against a committee for the consideration of the political freedom of millions of the patriotic, loyal, right-thinking, and right-acting women of America. [Applause.]

My friend from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] argues that because he believes a majority of the House is opposed to woman suffrage he will vote against this proposal to have a vote upon it. If that idea is carried to its logical conclusion, no question could ever be voted on until it was absolutely certain that it would be passed. I am one of those who believe that the American people have a right to know how their Representatives stand on questions of this importance. I have an idea that the very roll call itself, the requirement that Members stand up and be counted for or against this measure, will have a vast influence upon its success. The people themselves have a way of compelling their Representatives to really represent them when they know the exact situation as to the attitude of their Representatives. [Applause.]

It has also been stated that this resolution should not be passed because it takes a question from the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee. Carry that argument to its conclusion and no new committee could ever be established, regardless of the changed conditions that might arise. It is simply a declaration that everything old is necessarily sacred, and that everything new is necessarily dangerous. In the light of a new era in American history, with old customs and habits and creeds going down before actual conditions, that kind of argument will scarcely avail.

The State rights argument has also been called upon to do duty in this discussion. Surely the question of whether it is just to consider fairly the right of women to vote is not affected by State lines. If a thing is wise and just in Illinois, it is equally wise and just in Kentucky. The women citizens of this country are not so different on opposite sides of an imaginary line that some are fit to govern themselves and others are unfit. This is a national question and must be so considered. The State rights advocates forget their misgivings in the consideration of appropriations and matters dealing with property. We insist that they can not shackle within State lines the questions dealing with human liberties and human rights.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] makes the argument that consideration of this resolution is ill timed; that this extra session of Congress is not the proper time for action upon it. I hold that this is exactly the time for it and that delay would have been inexcusable. In fact, when the question was voted upon in the Rules Committee on June 6 I advocated a vote on that day and voted against delaying it three months to the present date. The House adjourned that day without transacting business, and the question of this committee could have been and should have been settled finally then.

But surely this session should not be adjourned without action. We are fighting a war to make democracy safe in the world. While doing that we must take every means possible of making democracy sure in America. And there can not be real democracy, true government by the people, when half of the adult, intelligent citizenship do not have the right to vote. There can not be real expression of the national will in America unless the womanhood of the Nation has the right to express her will in the only way that expression really counts in the end, and that is with the pencil in the voting booth on the day of election. [Applause.]

One of the best definitions of democracy ever given was that of Pasteur, the great scientist. He said:

The true democracy is that which permits each individual to put forth his maximum effort.

Now, we have been calling upon the women of this Nation to serve in a multitude of ways during the conduct of this great war in which we are engaged. I maintain that simple justice demands that they be given the power to make those efforts really effective.

I hold in my hand a red, white, and blue circular issued by the American League for National Unity. It makes exactly the same appeal that is made by every patriotic organization and by the Nation itself. It is as follows:

The country needs women—
To give their sons to defend the Nation.
To force the "slacker" to do his "bit."
To encourage their children to save their pennies for the Red Cross.
To sew and knit for the men who are at "the front."
To produce their own vegetables in their back yards.
To keep a watchful eye on the family pocketbook.
To serve as Red Cross nurses.
To work in munition factories.
To teach classes in American citizenship in the schools and churches.
To display the American flag from their homes.
To teach their sons and daughters to salute the national emblem.
To remember the President and the men of the fighting forces in their prayers.
To urge a new spirit of national unity.

Does any Member mean to say that the women should give their sons to defend the Nation and yet have no voice as to their protection? Shall the women encourage their children to save their pennies and to keep a watchful eye on the family pocketbook and yet have no voice in protecting that money from the hands of unscrupulous profiteers? Shall the women work in munition factories and yet remain dumb as to working conditions in those factories? Shall they teach citizenship in schools and churches and yet be denied the vital rights of citizenship? Shall they remember the President and the fighting forces in their prayers and yet be unable to help make their prayers come true? Shall they urge the new spirit of national unity, while at the same time they are prevented from realizing their own membership in the Nation? [Applause.]

Gentlemen of the House, I insist that the women of this country have the biggest stake in this war. In the current issue of the Official Bulletin, issued by the Government, I find 28 separate articles. Of these 12 are direct appeals to the women of America, while those dealing with the assignments of soldiers are of heart concern to mothers above all others. These articles deal with "Sugar supply and prices," "Red Cross activities," "Grain and foodstuffs," "Food value of potatoes," "Municipal markets," "Milk prices," "Retail delivery methods," and so forth.

Surely in this day of direct governmental appeal to the women of the land to serve their country these women have a right to a committee which shall give full and free consideration to their claims to the franchise.

Mr. Speaker, not only have the women a right to ask the creation of this committee for the consideration of the question of equal suffrage, but it is a matter of wise policy. The keynote of American thought to-day is cooperation. This war, with its hideous possibilities, has awakened the Nation to the fact that the supreme need of the hour is close cooperation between all classes for the safety of the Republic.

President Wilson's phrase, "We must all speak and act and serve together," has been heeded by this Congress, and every measure passed has had as its foundation principle the obligation of all classes of citizens to serve the Nation in its time of need.

But still it takes more than a splendid phrase and legislative enactments to secure the unity which is essential at this time. This cooperation must be based on justice and consented to in liberty. It must come through the people and not be forced on them from the outside. American unity must be that of co-ordination, not subordination. It must be the unity not of obedience but of agreement, not of followers but of fellows.

We must first make every citizen realize membership in the Nation before we can expect responsibility for the Nation.

One of the greatest tributes that could be paid the womanhood of America is that, in spite of the denial of her right to a voice in government, she has never hesitated or faltered for a moment in giving her whole-hearted, enthusiastic devotion to the Nation. Never yet have American women been slackers when America went to war, and they have won and will win new laurels in this latest and greatest struggle. They have answered every call nobly. They have served and sacrificed. They have waited vainly since 1869, when the Susan B. Anthony amendment was first introduced in the Senate. Two generations of women have pleaded with Congress for a declaration that the rights of citizens shall not be denied or abridged on account of sex.

Surely they have been law-abiding, fair, and patient. Now when they ask for the creation of a committee in the House which shall give especial and exclusive consideration to their great question, the very least this House can do is to grant it willingly and whole-heartedly.

I ask you to pass this resolution and send out to the 20,000,000 unenfranchised women of America the glad news that their rights are to be considered by a committee created for that purpose alone, and you will add to the spiritual unity of this Nation in splendid fashion; you will help to mobilize and unify the public mind of America in a way which will mean much in the days which are to come. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this proposition has been approached from every possible angle during the discussion of the last two hours, and there is really nothing that I can add that has not already been expressed by those who have preceded me in the discussion.

That which struck me so forcefully from the beginning of the agitation for the creation of this committee, which began, by the way, in 1913, up to the present time, is the utter uselessness of such a committee. There was a time when the great majority of my colleagues of the Committee on Rules agreed with me on that proposition. For reasons satisfactory to themselves they have ceased to agree with me on that, and so to-day—

I feel like one
Who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted.

One thought, if I may be permitted to suggest it in response to the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], who immediately preceded me, and in response to similar remarks made by other gentlemen, is with respect to what lies back of this proposition. It is not to create the committee simply to have a committee. The proposition is to create a committee in order that a Federal amendment may be brought before the body. That committee can perform no other function. When it shall have brought that resolution before the body its functions will be ended, and it can be dismissed as a useless thing.

But gentlemen speak of democracy in the world and in the United States being promoted by the agitation of a Federal amendment to the Constitution. Is that true? Let us see. I do not antagonize woman suffrage through State action. I do not oppose it in Tennessee. But in Tennessee, in order to amend the constitution of my State, the question must be submitted to a popular vote. That is democracy. This amendment of a Federal character will not have to be submitted to a popular vote. It will be submitted to the legislatures of the several States. And yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] speak of it as spreading democracy.

Mr. Speaker, there is no necessity for the creation of this committee, from whatever angle you approach this question. The fact remains that there exists absolutely no necessity, practical, sentimental, or otherwise, for creating this committee. And yet a number of very sensible gentlemen here are going to vote for it. They will be picketing the White House themselves before long. [Laughter.]

The Committee on the Judiciary has handled this subject from the very beginning of the agitation concerning it for more than 50 years. This question has been sent to that committee because it was a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States. That committee has never failed to respond to the wish and will of this body. That committee will not in the future fail to respond to the wish and the will of this body. We have that assurance, not only by their spoken word but by reason of our knowledge of the processes of legislative activities in this House; not only through our own experience but through all the experience of the past. It is proposed to create a committee that can have but one function to perform, a function which has heretofore been performed by another committee, which we know will be again performed by that committee; and when this committee that we are now creating shall have performed that function, its utility will be gone and there will be no other duties for it to perform. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. LONERGAN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. LONERGAN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the pending resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. LANGLEY. I make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And I make the same request.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE], the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the resolution favoring the naming of a special committee on woman suffrage. I shall do this not only for the reason that the importance of the question of equal suffrage deserves this consideration, but frankly because of the stimulus it will prove to be in giving to women the privilege of direct participation in our Government. The interests of the women are equal to those of the men. They are as much concerned in the welfare of the country. They are as intelligent and honest as the men, and there is no substantial reason for discrimination against them. And particularly at this time I want to show in part my appreciation of the splendid services that the women in so many ways are rendering.

Millions of mothers and wives are giving their boys and husbands for the preservation of the liberty which they, in its fullness, do not enjoy. Their heroism in this sacrifice to patriotism commands our veneration. Practically without a murmur, though their hearts bleed, they are answering the call of their country in its hour of peril.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the wide range that the discussion upon this resolution has taken has been somewhat surprising, but as a matter of fact there is nothing very serious before the House.

It is the creation of a new committee to handle an important matter. This ought not to have taken 10 minutes of discussion in the House. It has taken two hours here, and it has been discussed indefinitely before the Committee on Rules and in other ways. Everything has been dragged into this discussion, from State rights to the question as to whether or not this is a great Nation that has obliterated State lines.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No. Why gentlemen who have voted for appropriations to exterminate the boll weevil down in Georgia and Texas and Alabama should raise the question of State sovereignty and State rights when the question of the right of women to vote is under consideration is something that I can not understand. [Applause.] Is the boll weevil of more importance in Georgia and Alabama than woman suffrage? You did not raise the question of State rights then, or assert the question of the duty of a State. You insisted that the Federal Government should cross the State line and do the thing that the planter theretofore had done for himself, or that the county might well have done, or that the State might have done. But, oh no, you lost sight of all these questions and went to the Federal authority. You have been doing it upon so many questions that it is most natural that those of us who have always believed that this was a Nation spelled with a big "N" did not have the cold chills when we saw another question of Nation-wide importance forcing itself for consideration upon the Federal Congress. [Applause.] We believe that this question rightly belongs to the Nation, to the Federal Government, and that the creation of this committee is a mere incident in the consideration of that great subject.

Of course the resolution will be agreed to. The committee will be appointed, and in due time a resolution will be reported out of the Committee on Woman Suffrage, granting woman suffrage to the people of the several States. Then gentlemen can vote their sentiments upon that subject here in this House.

Now, that is all there is before the House. The fact has been referred to that some of the advocates of woman suffrage have been doing things that have not appealed to the best sentiment of the country. It was not asserted by these gentlemen that the large majority of the women who believe in woman suffrage frown upon these actions of a small faction who believe in woman suffrage, and that this majority are as much opposed to the conduct of that faction as are the gentlemen who have criticized them here upon this floor to-day. In the conduct of great affairs we can not take notice of the mistakes that are made by the advocates of a great principle. The merit of this question is the only thing to be considered.

What substantial argument has been made against the creation of this committee? None. No more argument has been made against this than was made against the creation of a Committee on Good Roads, and no more than was made against the creation of the many committees that have been created in this House.

It is said that this committee will be useless after this resolution has been submitted to the States for their adoption or rejection. Suppose it is. The great Committee on Improvement of the Mississippi River is dead—has had its last meeting. It no longer has a chairman, a secretary, or a janitor. It died because there was nothing more for it to do.

This resolution should be agreed to. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to this rule.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 180, nays 107, answered "present" 3, not voting 142, as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. RAKER a motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

SUSPENSION OF WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendments to Senate joint resolution 78 and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House insist on its amendments to the Senate joint resolution 78 and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FOSTER, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. DENISON.

SERVICE FLAG.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, on my house in Cleveland hangs a service flag given me by Capt. R. L. Queisser, the designer of this flag.

The flag may be of any size, with a red border and a white center, with stars in the center to indicate the number from that household or place of business that are in the service of the United States during this war.

This service flag has been adopted by Hon. Harry L. Davis, mayor of Cleveland, the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, East Cleveland City Council, and by the governor of Ohio. The flag is displayed in many homes and factories in Cleveland and all over the United States.

The Cleveland Trust Co. and the Guardian Trust Co., two of the largest banks in Cleveland, have this service flag displayed. There is nothing to do but to have Congress ratify what has been accepted by the people of this country as a proper service flag.

I am certainly proud of the fact that my only son is now in the service of the United States, not as an officer but as a private. I know that every family in Cleveland and all over the United States that have a member of the family in the service would be proud to display this flag. The Government should give one to every family that have sons or daughters in the service.

In these closing days of this extra session let us pass this resolution and give the fathers and mothers of this country who give their sons and daughters freely to this great cause, some recognition, so that the world may know as it passes those families who gave to this great cause of liberty. We give a button to those who buy a liberty bond. Why not give a flag to those who are willing to give their own flesh and blood; the dearest thing in all the world to a father and mother—their children? [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a speech made by my colleague, Mr. HARRY C. WOODYARD, at the twenty-eighth annual reunion of the Society of the Blue and the Gray at Ripley, W. Va., on September 20, 1917.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech by his colleague, Mr. HARRY C. WOODYARD, at the twenty-eighth annual reunion of the Society of the Blue and the Gray at Ripley, W. Va. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONDITIONS IN ILLINOIS AND MISSOURI.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 150.

Resolved, That all expenses that may be incurred by the special committee under House resolution 128, adopted September 11, 1917, authorizing said special committee to make certain investigations set out in said resolution, to an amount not exceeding $7,500, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent Mr. RAKER and Mr. KEATING were given leave to extend remarks in the RECORD on the resolution creating a Committee on Woman Suffrage.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 25, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. DECKER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6045) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River, in Poinsett County, Ark., at or near the section line between sections 35 and 36, township 11 north, range 6 east, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 158), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (S. Con. Res. 12) providing for the setting aside of a day of prayer for the success of the American Armies in the pending war, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 160), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MOON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 2718) to authorize experiments in motor-truck delivery, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 159), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2705) to create the aircraft board and provide for its maintenance, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 161), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6175) giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade with Alaska, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 162), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4269) for the relief of Henry I. Stockstill, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. OSBORNE: A bill (H. R. 6305) for the further relief of soldiers of the Civil War pensioned for wounds or injuries received in the line of duty; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 6306) to provide for the payment of six months' gratuity to the widow, children, or other previously designated dependent relative of retired officers or enlisted men on active duty; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 6307) to authorize the drafting of aliens domiciled or resident in the United States by the countries of which they may be citizens or subjects or by the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HADLEY: A bill (H. R. 6308) to prevent interstate commerce in timber products upon which labor has been permitted to work more than eight hours in any day, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MANSFIELD: A bill (H. R. 6309) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COOPER of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 6310) granting the consent of Congress to the Trumbull Steel Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, complete, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FORDNEY: Resolution (H. Res. 148) providing for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into certain charges made in the statement of Hon. Thomas J. Heslin on the floor of the House and inserted in the Congressional Record of September 21, 1917; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. FLOOD: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 160) authorizing and directing the food administrator to fix prices on farm machinery and fertilizers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. EMERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 161) to provide a service flag; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 6311) granting an increase of pension to James W. Beasley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6312) granting a pension to Lebbeus H. Brockway; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A bill (H. R. 6313) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Harris; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 6314) granting an increase of pension to William R. Cramer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 6315) granting a pension to William Washburn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KRAUS: A bill (H. R. 6316) granting a pension to Wayne L. Dickey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OSBORNE: A bill (H. R. 6317) granting a pension to Joseph C. Whittington; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PLATT: A bill (H. R. 6318) for the relief of Antranik Aprahamian; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. EMERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 159) to pay W. L. Baker the sum of $1,000 in lieu of rent; to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the National Woman's Party, Pennsylvania Branch, Philadelphia, Pa., urging the passage of the Susan B. Anthony amendment, and protesting against the arrest of the pickets; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of the Utah Branch of the National Woman's Party, urging the passage of the Susan B. Anthony amendment and protesting against the arrest of the pickets; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CRAMTON: Petition of J. L. Frostick and 34 other citizens of Sanilac County, Mich., in behalf of the Purple Cross bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CARY: Petition of the Milwaukee Newspaper Web Pressmen's Union, Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the zone increases in second-class mail matter; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Achen Motor Co., Milwaukee, Wis.; Hoppe-Hatter Motor Co., Milwaukee, Wis.; and Packard Motor Car Co., of Chicago, Milwaukee branch, Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the gross-sales tax on automobiles; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of D. Lewandoski and S. Skoniski, Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the provision of the war-revenue bill to reduce the whisky tax to $2.20; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, September 25, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast thrice armed us with the justice of our cause. We bless Thee that as we face the uncertain conditions that are before us we have the inspiration and power of coming before Thee, God of infinite wisdom, and love, and power, to present our plans and to ask Thy guidance. This day we pray Thee to look upon us as we further plan for the campaign that is before us, and we pray that Thou wilt smile upon all our endeavor and give to us the consciousness of having in all things done the will of God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. VARDAMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

INTERNATIONAL PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE OF COMMERCE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication, which was read:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 24, 1917.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States.

Sir: Referring to my letter of May 4 last, communicating to you the invitation extended by the secretary general of the International Parliamentary Conference of Commerce to Congress to participate in that meeting, which was held in Rome in May last, I now have the honor to inform you that a telegram has been received from the American ambassador in Paris, in which he states that the conference is desirous that the United States send delegates to the coming meeting to be held in Paris from the 11th to the 14th of October and requests to be informed what decision has been reached by Congress.

Since the receipt of the telegram above referred to a second message has been received from the American ambassador in Paris, in which he states that he has been advised that Belgium, England, Italy, Japan, Portugal, Roumania, and Serbia will be represented.

The ambassador is further advised that England is to send a delegation from the House of Lords and the House of Commons; Italy to be represented by Mr. Tittoni, some time Italian ambassador at Paris, and by Mr. Ferrari, who was former minister of state. It appears from Ambassador Sharp's message that discussions of a private character will be held with the presidents of the tariff commissions, and should the United States conclude to participate a solemn session will take place in the Senate in honor of the American delegates.

The coming International Parliamentary Conference will be presided over by Mr. Doumer, who is minister of state in the French Cabinet.

According to the statement of the secretary general, the conference was founded in the year 1914, at the suggestion of the commercial commission of the House of Commons under the patronage of the Belgian King, before the declaration of war, and is purely an economic organization and is quite distinct from the political congress in behalf of which Mr. Franklin Bouillon is now in the United States for the purpose of extending an invitation to both Houses of Congress.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT LANSING.

The VICE PRESIDENT. While this communication has to do with the commercial relations of the United States, in view of the fact that the Committee on Foreign Relations is considering the advisability of sending a commission abroad, the Chair is inclined to refer the communication to that committee.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may be permitted to suggest that this being the second communication, it should receive prompt consideration at the hands of the committee, and some response ought to be made to the invitation.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists on its amendments to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FOSTER, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. DENISON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2477. An act to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department; and

H. R. 5335. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., authorized by an act approved January 28, 1916.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I send to the desk a petition from two New England cities and ask the Secretary to read it.

There being no objection, the Secretary read the petition, as follows:

CITY CLERK'S OFFICE,
New Britain, Conn., September 21, 1917.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is called to the following:

"Resolved by the Common Council of the City of Stamford, That—
Whereas the people of this city and other New England communities are unable, under present conditions, to obtain anthracite coal adequate to their needs; and

"Whereas the prices of anthracite coal have advanced within the past two years to a point which causes real hardship to consumers of such coal, particularly to those numerous small consumers on whom the advanced cost of living entails a diminution of the necessities of life: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled, be, and they hereby are, petitioned to cause an investigation to be made of conditions existing in the production and distribution of anthracite coal with a view to determining a reason for the aforesaid conditions, and with a further view to determine, if possible, some remedy therefor."

The above resolution as adopted by the city of Stamford and received by the Common Council of the City of New Britain, September 19, 1917, was indorsed by said common council and voted to cooperate with the city of Stamford in relation to the same. A copy of said resolution to be sent to each Senator and Congressman of Connecticut; also a copy to the Clerk of the United States Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Attest:
[SEAL.]

ALFRED L. THOMPSEN, City Clerk.

Mr. KELLOGG. I send to the desk a petition for reference, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DETROIT, MINN., September 11, 1917.

To Hon. KNUTE NELSON,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Resolution passed by F. C. Scholts Post, No. 67, Department of Minnesota, Grand Army of the Republic.

To YOUR HONOR: We would ask you to favor legislation along the same lines as Abraham Lincoln adopted with Vallandigham, who was sent by Abraham Lincoln over into the Southland to remain during the period of the Civil War. We think all the agitators that are agitating any question that is against this Government at this time when we are in trouble are to be classed with the followers of the Kaiser.

We think they ought to be dealt with on the same lines that Lincoln adopted with Vallandigham. They should be loaded onto boats and shipped to the country from which they came. If the submarine saw fit to sink them on the high seas, that would be something that we would not be responsible for.

The American people would not stand to have these people backed up against the stone wall, nor would they stand to have them poorly fed; and we think it would be cheaper for our Government to ship them out of the country. A couple of shiploads would do more to kill copperheads than anything else, and give them the privilege of fighting in the front.

We know what we had to contend with for the four long years when the copperheads at home were stabbing us in the back. We knew where to find rebels, but never knew where to find the copperheads.

Yours, in F., C., and L.,

JOHN J. MERRITT,

Commander.

PETER MITCHELL,

Adjutant, Post 67.

W. R. MORTON,

George Weller,

Officer of the Day.

JOHN O. FRENCH,

WM. W. ROOF,

E. L. JORDAN.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Planet Lodge, No. 1, Associated Railway Employees of California, praying for an investigation of the East St. Louis riot, which was ordered to lie on the table.

ALLOTMENT OF PAY IN THE ARMY.

Mr. WARREN. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2883) to amend an act approved March 2, 1899, increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (S. No. 135) thereon. It is a short bill. It provides that a part of the payment to officers and men in the Army serving abroad may be left here at home with their families through regular apportionment. It ought to pass immediately in order to receive consideration in the other House. I ask, therefore, for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 16 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1899, entitled "An act for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of March 2, 1901, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to permit, under such regulations as he may prescribe, any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Army, any retired officer or enlisted man of the Army on active duty, and any permanent civilian employee under the jurisdiction of the War Department on duty outside the continental limits of the United States, to make allotments of his pay for the support of his wife, children, or dependent relatives, or for such other purposes as the Secretary of War may deem proper. All allotments of pay of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees that have been or shall be paid to designated allottees previous to the receipt by disbursing officer of notice of discontinuance of the same from the officer required by regulations to furnish such notice shall pass to the credit of the disbursing officer who has made or shall make such payments, and if erroneous payment is made because of the failure of an officer to report, in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of War, the death of the grantor, or any fact which renders the allotment not payable, then the amount of such erroneous payment shall be collected by the Quartermaster General from the officer who fails to make such report, if such collection is practicable. Nothing herein shall be construed to invalidate allotments now in force."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill making further provision for the allotment of pay of officers, enlisted men, and civil employees of the Army, and for other purposes."

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the report be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 185, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session.]

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2883) to amend the act of March 2, 1899, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the Senate with amendment in the nature of a substitute, and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

The object of the bill as originally drafted was to extend to commissioned officers the permission to make allotments of their pay for the support of their families or relatives, or for other purposes, during such time as they may be absent on distant duty. Civilian employees of the War Department when on duty beyond the continental limits of the United States have been embraced within the provisions of the amended bill.

The permission to allot a portion of their salary was extended to enlisted men in the service by section 16 of the act of March 2, 1899. The act of March 2, 1901, restricted the time of payment of the allotment until one month subsequent to the month in which such allotment accrued.

The bill as amended extends permission to allot salary to any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Army, any retired officer or enlisted man of the Army on active duty, and any permanent civilian employee under the jurisdiction of the War Department on duty outside the continental limits of the United States. The provision as amended embraces practically all men in the military service who will be called on foreign duty for whom a necessity exists for providing that an allotment system be established.

The bill as amended also eliminates the provision in existing law which provides that the allotments shall not be paid until after the expiration of one month subsequent to the month in which such allotments accrued. The effect of this provision of law was to impose unnecessary suffering and hardship upon the dependents of the men at the front by withholding from them for the period of one month the pay to which they were entitled.

The other provisions of the bill as amended reenact the provisions of existing law (1) in reference to the payment of allotments by the disbursing officer previous to the receipt of notice of discontinuance of the same, and (2) fixing the liability of officers who fail to report the death of the grantor or any fact which renders the allotment not payable when such negligence leads to the erroneous payment of an allotment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

A bill (S. 2916) to amend sections 24 and 256 of the Judicial Code, relating to the jurisdiction of the district courts, so as to save to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 2917) to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2918) prohibiting the forfeiture of entries on the public lands on account of an absence in the military service of the United States; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. SMOOT:

(A bill (S. 2919) granting a pension to Olive R. Grow (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

PRICE OF SUGAR.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, in behalf of my colleague, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], who is absent from the Chamber, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an important letter in regard to sugar written by him on the 24th instant to Mr. Herbert Hoover, Federal food administrator.

SEPTEMBER 24, 1917.

HON. HERBERT HOOVER,

Federal Food Administrator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HOOVER: As you have shown no less concern for the producer of our supplies of food than for the consumer, and as you have frequently expressed your desire of protecting both classes from the rapacity of the middlemen, who prey upon them alike, I deem it advisable to bring to your notice a matter that has probably escaped you in the multitude of difficult subjects that have been pressing for your consideration.

My attention has been called to the fact that the seaboard refiners are preparing to purchase the Louisiana crop of raw sugar at 10 points under the New York price as fixed by the national food administration. It has not been disclosed just how they expect to accomplish this, but I assume that it will be through the medium of private contracts with the producers.

While there is no way to prevent the individual farmer from contracting for the disposal of his crop at any price, or upon any terms he may see fit, yet the farmers as a whole, who object to this deduction, must not be coerced or intimidated by the refining combine into surrendering this year's crop at a less price than they are expected to receive for it.

In enacting the food-control legislation Congress purposed to prevent this very practice, and I understand that you have been in thorough accord with Congress on this subject. The Agricultural Committee, which reported the bill, used this language: "The Government guarantees the receipt of the price by the domestic producers who rely upon the guaranty and comply with the President's regulations."

I had that guaranty in mind when I supported this legislation, and I propose to see that it is not violated. I believe that this statement will apply with practical unanimity to the membership of both Houses of Congress who supported the bill. If the farmers of this country are to be securely bound by the regulations of the Food Control Bureau, then I think you will agree with me that they shall not be preyed upon by a group of men who neither toll nor spin.

The New York quotation for raw sugar is the price paid the grower in Cuba. When our people are called upon as a war measure to sell their crop at an arbitrary figure, the least that should be guaranteed them is that they will receive the same price protection from the Government of which they are a part as that Government guarantees to their foreign competitor.

The refiners are seeking to justify this last piece of sharp practice in the Louisiana sugar district by calling attention to the fact that this 10-point reduction will be only one-fourth the amount they have frequently mulcted the Louisiana farmer in the past. We don't propose to be mulcted one penny by the refiners. We don't propose that they shall plead their own past turpitude in order to justify this injustice. The present conduct of the refiners calls for greater condemnation when their course during the past few weeks is considered. They have been the recipients of special consideration at the hands of the food administration. They have been privileged to name their own figure as the proper margin to be allowed for refining.

A few years ago when they were engaged in a malicious assault upon the domestic industry, which they were seeking to root out and destroy, they solemnly swore before the committees of Congress that if given sugar raised by pauper labor in the Tropics they could refine it at from 50 cents to 65 cents a hundred pounds and make a fair profit. Fortunately for the American consumer, they failed in that plot and the domestic crop has been the only factor that has saved the American consumer from the rapacity of these refiners in the present crisis.

Instead of a refiner's differential of 63 cents it is proposed to allow them an increase of more than 100 per cent above that figure. In fact, it is reported that they will probably be allowed a margin of about 135 cents more than twice the figure named by some of the best-known members of their craft as reasonable during the free-sugar agitation a few years back.

We make no complaint about that. Their expenses have increased in common with the expenses of all other industries. But their expenses have not increased nearly as much proportionately as the expenses of the farmer.

Any one familiar with the history of the eastern seaboard sugar-refining industry knows that when they named the cost of their operations for refining the coming crop they guarded against any possible loss. The price they named was good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over. That being the case, they will have to be content with it. If they pay the Cuban 6.25 for his sugar in New York, they are not going to hold up the Louisiana farmer to the tune of 10 points and pay him only 6.15. Do they propose to sell their refined product to the consumer in New Orleans for 10 points less than they charge the consumer in New York, or do they propose to pocket the 10 points out of which they are planning to wheedle the Louisiana farmer?

Congress never intended that the sugar-cane farmers should be discriminated against in this manner. On the contrary, the war has created a condition which demands that the domestic sugar production be increased and protected or we will be confronted with a sugar famine next year infinitely worse than the present shortage. Unless their plans are frustrated the present conspiracy provides for a clean-up by the refiners, over and above what the Government proposes to guarantee them of more than half a million dollars on the Louisiana crop; of more than a million on the Porto Rican crop, and a like sum on the output of the Hawaiian Islands. If the American consumer was to receive this domestic sugar at a cheaper price after it has passed through the hands of the refiners than he would be compelled to pay for Cuban-grown sugar there might be some argument for grinding down the American farmer. But that is not part of the plan. The consumer will not be allowed to buy the domestic refined sugar for one penny less than he pays for the Cuban product. These two and a half million dollars which the refiners are conspiring to extort from the American farmers is to be used in expanding their already swollen dividends, but I very much fear that the American farmer will show his resentment at such treatment by abandoning the cultivation of sugar for some more profitable crop. The refiner should therefore be warned by the food administration that any deviation from the prices agreed upon will not be tolerated. If this is not done, I think I am safe in predicting that Congress will find it necessary to so amend the food-control act as to make such practices a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment.

This matter is of such intense importance to producers and consumers alike that I shall take the liberty of making this letter public, to the end that all may be advised, and to prepare public sentiment to support you in preventing this imposition, should it be attempted by the refiners.

Yours, very truly,

ROBERT F. BROUSSARD.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5949, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, reported yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5949) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendments, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think we deserve a quorum before we commence on this measure, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Husting	Martin	Shafroth
Brandegge	Johnson, Cal.	New	Sheppard
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Colt	Kellogg	Page	Smoot
Cummings	Kendrick	Phelan	Trammell
Curtis	Kenyon	Polindexter	Underwood
Fall	King	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Kirby	Ransdell	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Robinson	Welcott
Hale	McNary	Saulsbury

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] is unavoidably absent owing to illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness. I will state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is detained by illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. McKELLAR, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina answered to their names when called.

Mr. STONE, Mr. BRADY, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. STERLING, Mr. REED, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. DILLINGHAM entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Emergency shipping fund," on page 3, line 1, before the word "extension," to strike out "of," and insert "or"; so as to make the clause read:

For the acquisition or establishment of plants suitable for shipbuilding, or of materials essential thereto, and for the enlargement or extension of such plants as are now, or may be hereafter acquired or established, $35,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, are we proceeding under an agreement to first consider committee amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have an amendment to the paragraph the Secretary is about to read, but I will wait until the committee amendments are disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," on page 3, line 15, after the words "per annum," to insert "and not exceeding $2,400 per annum each," so as to make the clause read:

For additional employees in the Department of State, $85,000; Provided, That not more than two persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum and not exceeding $2,400 per annum each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 19, to insert:

That portion of the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, which provides "that no more than 50 cents per day for the keeping and feeding of each prisoner while actually confined shall be allowed or paid for any such keeping and feeding" shall not be operative during the fiscal year 1918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 6, after line 11, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

For two additional Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, at a salary of $5,000 per annum each, from the date of this act to the close of the present war and six months thereafter, so much as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 18, to insert:

Section of Surety Bonds: For one clerk of class 1, from October 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918, both dates inclusive, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings," on page 8, after line 10, to insert:

Charlotte, N. C., rent of buildings: For additional for rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 19, to insert:

Muskegon, Mich., rent of buildings: For additional for rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 9, to insert:

Washington, D. C., Treasury Department buildings: For repairs and alterations of buildings and their equipment belonging to the United States, on square 226 in the city of Washington, D. C., to fit them for temporary use by the Treasury Department, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 6, to insert:

INTERNAL REVENUE.

For expenses of assessing and collecting the internal-revenue taxes, as provided in an act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved September 1, 1917, including the employment of necessary officers, attorneys, experts, agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, janitors, and messengers in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, to be appointed as provided by law, telegraph and telephone service, rental of quarters, postage, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, printing, stationery, law books and books of reference, and such other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, $4,583,000: Provided, That not more than $375,000 of the total amount appropriated herein may be expended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for detecting and bringing to trial persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations: Provided further, That not more than $850,000 of the total amount appropriated herein may be expended in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, in the District of Columbia, including payment of additional compensation to the following: Increase compensation of two deputy commissioners from $4,000 to $4,500 each, and increase compensation of one deputy commissioner from $3,600 to $4,500.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to assign to deputy commissioners such duties as he may prescribe, and the Secretary of the Treasury may designate any one of them to act as Commissioner of Internal Revenue during the commissioner's absence.

The appropriation of $2,200,000 for salaries and expenses of agents and subordinate officers of internal revenue for fiscal year 1918, made in the act of March 3, 1917, for the employment of revenue agents, storekeepers, storekeeper-gaugers, and gaugers is hereby made available also for the salaries and expenses of deputy collectors and inspectors in assessing and collecting internal-revenue taxes, as provided by the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved September 1, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Engraving and Printing," on page 11, after line 22, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, during the continuance of the war with Germany, to have all bonds, notes, checks, or other printed papers, now or hereafter authorized to be executed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, printed in such manner and by whatever process and on any style of presses that he may consider suitable for the issue of such securities and other papers in the form that will properly safeguard the interests of the Government, except that such presses as are used in printing from intaglio plates shall be operated by plate printers: Provided, That in the execution of such work only such part of it shall be transferred from the present method of executing it as will permit of the retention in the service of such permanent plate printers as are now engaged in the execution of such work, or such temporary plate printers, similarly employed and who can qualify under civil-service regulations for permanent appointment, and all acts or parts of acts heretofore enacted relative to the use of power and hand presses in the printing of securities of the Government are hereby suspended and declared to be not in effect during the continuance of said war, and at the termination of the war such acts or parts of acts shall be in effect and force as heretofore.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his judgment the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is unable to execute any of the internal-revenue stamps, checks, or certificates which it now or may hereafter have orders to print, or any bonds or certificates of any character required under the authority now or which may hereafter be vested in the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds and other securities for the purpose of procuring funds for the purposes of the war with Germany, to have such work printed under contract with private printing establishments and to make payment for such work from the appropriation for "Materials and miscellaneous expenses for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918," unless there be now, or may hereafter be, available other specific appropriations covering the cost of such printing, in which case payment may be made from such specific appropriation.

That nothing in the preceding provisos shall be construed to prevent the accounting officers of the Government from making full payment to land-grant railroads for transportation of property or persons where the courts of the United States have held that such property or persons do not come within the scope of the deductions provided for in the land-grant acts; for the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals in such numbers as are actually required for the service, including reasonable provision for replacing unserviceable animals; for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of such harness, wagons, carts, drays, other vehicles, and motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, as are required for the transportation of troops and supplies, and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several depots; for the hire of teamsters and other employees; for the purchase and repair of ships, boats, and other vessels required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for expenses of sailing public transports and other vessels on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, $413,567,777.92.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 11, to insert:

During the present emergency the appropriations for mileage for officers of the Army shall be available for the purpose of paying mileage at the statutory rates to officers of the armies of the allies of the United States who may be on duty in the various bureaus of the War Department or at other places within the continental limits of the United States for travel performed by them under competent orders.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee if he believes that the first paragraph of this committee amendment, commencing at line 12 and ending at line 18, would conflict with the purpose or spirit of the bill which has already passed the Senate which authorizes the Secretary of War to use a portion of the appropriations made for the transportation of the Army to meet the necessary expenses incurred by foreign officers and enlisted men serving with the Army of the United States in this country?

Mr. MARTIN. I will say to the Senator that I see no possibility of conflict; and this is the exact language sent to us by the War Department for insertion in this bill. They felt that it was necessary to enable them to pay these officers of our allies in traveling in this country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This refers only to the mileage?

Mr. MARTIN. That is all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had it in mind to call the Senator's attention to that, because the bill which has passed the Senate already, and I believe has been reported to the House by the Military Affairs Committee of the House, does not prescribe the rate of pay for mileage, but leaves it entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of War. It is immaterial which bill passes, but I did not want a conflict between the two.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not think there will be any conflict. I have in my hand, and will read it if the Senator desires, a letter from the Secretary of War asking that this language be inserted in the bill. It was put in exactly in accordance with the request of the War Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the Senator that the bill which has already passed the Senate was urgently requested by the Secretary of War in a letter.

Mr. MARTIN. I am sure there will be no conflict. There will be no difficulty in executing the law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 18, to insert:

Land-grant railroads organized under the act of July 28, 1866, chapter 300, shall receive the same compensation for transportation of property and troops of the United States as is paid to land-grant railroads, organized under the land-grant act of March 3, 1863, and the act of July 27, 1866, chapter 278.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 10, after the word "reasons," to strike out "$350,000,000" and insert "$357,506,097.85," so as to make the clause read:

Clothing and camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woollens, materials, and for the purchase and manufacture of clothing for the Army, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, for issue and for sale at cost price according to the Army Regulations; for payment for clothing not drawn due to enlisted men on discharge; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning when necessary; for equipage, including authorized issues of toilet articles, barbers' and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances and applicants for enlistment while held under observation; issue of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment, and issue of housewives to the Army; for expenses of packing and handling, and similar necessities; for a suit of citizen's outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $10, to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $357,506,097.85.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 14, after the words "when needed, at," to insert "not exceeding," so as to make the clause read:

For the expense of maintaining, upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens physically capable of bearing arms as may be selected under such terms of enlistment and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and for furnishing said citizens, at the expense of the United States, uniforms, subsistence, transportation by the most usual and direct route within said limits as to territory as may be prescribed; for such expenditures as may be deemed necessary for water, fuel, light, temporary structures, not including quarters for officers nor barracks for men, screening, and damages resulting from field exercises, and other expenses incidental to maintaining said camps and the theoretical winter instruction in connection therewith, including textbooks and stationery; for furnishing such equipments, tentage, field equipage, and transportation belonging to the United States as may be deemed necessary as authorized by section 54 of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1913, $1,240,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Engineer Department," on page 56, line 14, after the word "equipment," to strike out "$4,300,000" and insert "$12,100,000," so as to make the clause read:

Engineer equipment of troops: For pontoon material, tools, instruments, supplies, and appliances required for use in the engineer equipment of troops, for military surveys, and for engineer operation in the field, including the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of the necessary motorcycles; the purchase and preparation of engineer manuals and procurement of special paper for same, and for a reserve supply of above equipment, $12,100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 24, after the words "Maps, War Department," to strike out "$100,000,000" and insert "$186,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

Engineer operations in the field: For expenses incident to military engineer operations in the field, including the purchase of material and a reserve of material for such operations, the construction or rental of storehouses within and outside the District of Columbia, the purchase, operation, maintenance, and repair of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and such expenses as are ordinarily provided for under appropriations for "Engineer depots," "Civilian assistants to engineer officers," and "Maps, War Department," $186,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," on page 57, line 14, after the word "vehicles," to strike out "$1,825,000" and insert "$11,825,000," so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance Service: For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department in connection with purchasing, receiving, storing, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, comprising police and office duties, rents, tolls, fuel, light, water, advertising, stationery, typewriters, adding machines, office furniture, tools, and instruments of service; incidental expenses of the Ordnance Service and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small arms, and other ordnance stores; publications for libraries of the Ordnance Department, including the Ordnance Office; subscriptions to periodicals; mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance; and for purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, $11,825,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 18, after the word "supply" to strike out "$36,000,000" and insert "$73,270,000," so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance stores, ammunition: For manufacture and purchase of ammunition for small arms and for hand use for reserve supply, $73,270,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 3, after the word "prescribe," to strike out "$13,000,000" and insert "$89,676,000," so as to make the clause read:

Small-arms target practice: For manufacture and purchase of ammunition, targets, and other accessories for small-arms, hand, and machine-gun target practice and instructions; marksmen's medals, prize arms, and insignia for all arms of the service; and ammunition, targets, target materials, and other accessories which may be issued for small-arms target practice and instruction at the educational institutions and State soldiers' and sailors' orphans' homes to which issues of small arms are lawfully made, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, $89,676,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 4, to insert: Manufacture of arms: For manufacturing; repairing, procuring, and issuing arms at the national armories, $32,690,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 14, after the word "Artillery," to strike out "$73,520,000" and insert "$113,520,000," so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance stores and supplies: For overhauling, cleaning, repairing, and preserving ordnance and ordnance stores in the hands of troops and at the arsenals, posts, and depots; for purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requirements of troops; for Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery equipments, including horse equipments for Cavalry and Artillery, $113,520,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 1, before the word "Provided," to strike out "$16,750,000" and insert "$36,750,000," and in line 4, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$75,550,000," so as to make the clause read:

Armored motor cars: For the purchase, manufacture, test, repair, and maintenance of armored motor cars, $36,750,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise to incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned, not to exceed $75,550,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 7, to insert:

Hereafter, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, officers of the Ordnance Department accountable for public moneys may intrust moneys to other officers for the purpose of having them make disbursements as their agents, and the officers to whom the money is intrusted, as well as the officers who intrust it to them, shall be held peculiarly responsible therefor to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 8, to insert: NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

So much of the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, so far as it designates the classes of persons entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, is amended so as to read as follows: The following persons only shall hereafter be entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and may be admitted thereto upon the order of a member of the board of managers, namely: All honorably discharged officers, soldiers, and sailors who served in the regular, volunteer, or other forces of the United States in any war in which the country has been or may be engaged, including the Spanish American War, the Provisional Army (authorized by act of Congress approved Mar. 2, 1899), in any of the campaigns against hostile Indians, or who have served in the Philippines, in China, or in Alaska, or in the Organized Militia or National Guard when called into the Federal service to enforce the laws, suppress insurrection, or repel invasion, who are disabled by disease, wounds, or otherwise and have no adequate means of support, and who are not otherwise provided for by law, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning their living.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Public buildings and grounds," at the top of page 64, to strike out:

For a temporary office building, including heating and lighting, for the use of the War and Navy Departments, to contain approximately 1,055,000 square feet, to be erected in Henry Park, reservation No. 4, Sixth and B Streets, $2,000,000. Space in said building shall be allotted by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds upon the joint order of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

And insert:

For temporary office buildings in which to house activities of the Government, including heating and lighting, to contain approximately 1,055,000 square feet of floor space, to be erected in Henry Park, reservation No. 4, Sixth and B Streets, $2,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the committee amendment the following proviso:

Provided, however, That within two years after the conclusion of the existing war the land above referred to shall again be reserved for the erection of the George Washington Memorial Hall, unless in the meantime some other site in the city of Washington be reserved for such purpose.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee I accept that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Naval Establishment," subhead "Aviation," on page 64, line 24, after the word "stations," to insert "including the acquisition of land by purchase, donation, or condemnation"; and on page 65, line 1, after the word "purposes," to strike out "$35,000,000" and insert "$45,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

For aviation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for procuring, producing, constructing, operating, preserving, storing, and handling aircraft; maintenance of aircraft stations, including the acquisition of land by purchase, donation, or condemnation; and for experimental work in the development of aviation for naval purposes, $45,000,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for drafting, clerical, inspection, and messenger service for aircraft stations shall not exceed $175,000.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether the expenses provided under the head of the Naval Establishment for Aviation are in addition to the appropriation heretofore made of $600,000,000 or thereabouts for aeronautic purposes?

Mr. MARTIN. It is in addition, and it has no relation to that appropriation. This is for the Navy. That was for aviation under the charge of the War Department. This is for the Naval Establishment entirely.

Mr. KING. It is estimated for?

Mr. MARTIN. It is estimated for, and the department insists that it is essential to the conduct of the war.

Mr. KING. I was under the impression that the appropriation of six hundred and odd million dollars included the demands of the Navy as well as those of the Army, in part at least.

Mr. MARTIN. No; the War Department has entire charge of that appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 6, to insert:

National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics: Such portion of the appropriation "National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics" carried in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, approved March 4, 1917, as may be necessary, not to exceed $40,000, is made available for the completion of the committee's research laboratory now under construction, and for the construction of additional buildings necessary in connection therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Civilian Naval Consulting Board," on page 66, line 6, after the words "Naval Consulting Board," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to make the clause read:

For actual expenses incurred by and in connection with the Civilian Naval Consulting Board, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Ordnance," on page 67, after line 23, to insert:

Fuel lands for armor and projectile plants: For the investigation and acquisition of options to mineral rights on about 26,000 acres of gas and oil lands in the State of West Virginia, located within reasonable distance of the Government armor plant, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 68, line 11, after the word "stations," to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,750,000," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent: For contingent expenses and minor extensions and improvements of public works at navy yards and stations, $1,750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 68, after line 12, to strike out:

Hospital construction: For temporary hospital construction and repairs, as may be necessary, at points not provided with suitable hospital facilities, and for buildings for naval medical supplies, $1,000,000.

And insert:

Hospital construction: For temporary hospital construction and repairs, as may be necessary, at points not provided with suitable hospital facilities, and for buildings for naval medical supplies, and for the purchase of land, $3,575,000: Provided, That not exceeding $250,000 of this appropriation may be used in the acquisition of land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 22, to insert:

New London, Conn., submarine base: For the acquisition, by purchase or condemnation, of the tract of land, comprising approximately twenty-six and eighty-eight one-hundredths acres, owned by the C. M. Shay Fertilizer Co., in the immediate vicinity of the property now owned and occupied by the United States as a submarine base at New London, Conn., including all easements, rights of way, riparian and other rights appurtenant thereto, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 9, to strike out:

Training camps: For construction and equipment of training camps, including the rental of land, $6,000,000.

And insert:

Training camps: For construction and equipment of training camps, including the rental of land, $12,600,000, and the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to transfer from this appropriation to the appropriations "Naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va.," and "Schools or camps of instruction for recruits and Naval Reserve Forces," contained in the act approved June 15, 1917 (Public No. 23), and to the appropriation "Naval emergency fund," contained in the naval appropriation act approved March 4, 1917, the amounts expended from said appropriations for the construction and equipment of training camps, including the rental of land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 4, after the words "Bureau of Ordnance," to strike out "$2,250,000" and insert "$3,592,500," so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance stations: For improvements at stations under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Ordnance, $3,592,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 11, to insert:

Repairs and preservation at navy yards and stations: For repairs and preservation at navy yards, fuel depots, fuel plants, and stations, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 14, to insert:

Naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va.: For cold storage, $650,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 16, to insert:

Temporary storage: For temporary storage, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 17, to insert:

Land for ordnance storage: For the acquisition of additional land for ordnance stations by purchase or condemnation in the vicinity of the Naval Torpedo Station, Newport, R. I., for storage of explosives, $100,000; in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin Ammunition Depot, Philadelphia, Pa., for the stowage of explosives, $360,000; in all, $460,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Naval Academy," on page 71, line 17, after the word "librarian," to strike out "$18,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead, "Marine Corps, Quartermaster's Department," on page 71, line 21, after "$2,650,000," to insert: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept all garments which may be supplied or furnished, without compensation, by the comforts committee of the Navy League and other patriotic organizations," so as to make the clause read:

Clothing: For noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, authorized by law, $2,650,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept all garments which may be supplied or furnished, without compensation, by the comforts committee of the Navy League and other patriotic organizations.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "accept," in line 22, insert the following: "through the American National Red Cross."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope that amendment to the amendment will not be agreed to. About six months ago, at the request of the Secretary of the Navy and with his approval, the members of the comforts committee of the Navy League sent out an appeal to the women of the country asking them to join in the efforts of the comforts committee to secure knitted garments for the Navy. In response to that request or appeal over 300,000 loyal, patriotic women throughout this country joined the comforts committee. They have 700 units in the different States and a membership of over 300,000. They have made over 440,000 garments. Nearly all of those garments were sent to the Navy Department through the comforts committee and they have been accepted. All the garments tendered were accepted until about the 15th day of August. Since that time the Secretary of the Navy has refused to receive the garments sent in through the comforts committee of the Navy League.

The members of the comforts committee have appeared before the Secretary time after time. They have gone so far as to offer to disassociate their committee from the Navy League and work as an independent association, to work as advisors, but they do want to maintain their organization, because they are now well organized and well equipped and comprise over 300,000 women in this country. The Secretary of the Navy refuses to accept the garments they have offered, and the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina is an attempt to transfer this organization to another body.

I wish to say to the Senate now that I have in my possession letters from the Red Cross addressed to the comforts committee asking the comforts committee to supply garments which the Red Cross have been unable to supply. The Secretary of War has accepted garments from this committee; different members of the Army have accepted them; and I appeal to the Senate not to agree to an amendment that will cause a disorganization of the women's comforts committee. They are willing to work independently; they are willing to work with the Secretary; but they do want to keep up their organization throughout the country.

In connection with my remarks I wish to submit first the bulletin that was sent out with the approval of the Secretary. I want to insert the letter of the Secretary of the Navy thanking the comforts committee for the garments they had sent to the Navy and I desire to insert other letters of thanks and of acceptance of the garments and materials.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WHAT WOMEN CAN DO FOR THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

[Comforts committee of the Navy League of the United States.]

NEED OF KNITTED ARTICLES IN THE NAVY.

The men of the United States Navy could gladly use certain articles of comfort which are not supplied by the Government. These are principally knitted articles to keep them warm during severe weather and when engaged in exposed work in small boats, such as picket duty, mine laying, submarine service, patrol-boat service, etc.

In time of war the value of these articles is greatly accentuated. Peace maneuvers in winter are held in warm southern waters, but in time of war there is no choice of time or place, while work in small boats above described is greatly increased, and is frequently performed under conditions of considerable hardship.

ARTICLES APPROVED BY THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The Navy Department has definitely approved the furnishing of the following articles, if made according to its specifications:

1. Sleeveless jacket, gray wool.
2. Mittens, gray wool.
3. Mufflers, blue, or preferably gray wool.
4. Wristlets, gray wool.
5. Helmets, gray wool.
6. Arctics.

Specifications and full knitting directions are printed on a separate circular, which will be furnished without charge by the comforts committee to anyone interested.

COMFORTS COMMITTEE.

A comforts committee has been formed at Washington for the inauguration and supervision of this work. They will furnish literature, directions, and advice without charge of any kind. They will also receive finished articles and attend to their packing and distribution.

INDEPENDENT UNITS.

Independent units may be formed by groups of women anywhere in the United States. Chapters of patriotic societies, preparedness organizations, and the like, are particularly urged to join in this work.

HOW THE WORK IS DONE.

1. Form a unit or organization. (Bulletin 132 gives the details.)
2. Write to the comforts committee at Washington, stating how many articles or sets you will undertake to furnish in three months.
3. The comforts committee will send you knitting directions, samples if desired, and general advice as to procedure, purchase of wool, etc.
4. The comforts committee will keep in communication with the Navy Department and will notify you from time to time where the garments are most needed. At present the needs of the smaller craft are greatest.
5. Finished articles should be sent to Washington, where the comforts committee will deliver them to the Paymaster General of the Navy for prompt distribution. (As the whereabouts of the fleet must be kept secret, it will not be practicable for local organizations to send the garments direct to the ships.) The Navy Department expects the comforts committee to inspect and vouch for the contents of packages before they are sent to the vessels. They will, however, be sent with the name and address of your organization.

Address all communications to Comforts Committee, Navy League, Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

Mrs. JAMES CARROLL FRAZER,
Chairman.
Mrs. SIDNEY BALLOU,
Vice Chairman and Treasurer.
Mrs. JOHN CALLAN O'LAUGHLIN,
Secretary.

The comforts committee may issue this bulletin.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy.

U. S. S. E-1.

DEAR SIR: I have received your circular, and wish to state that it will meet a very real and serious condition, particularly on submarines, where the men have no adequate clothing even for peace time. My crew have asked permission to buy gloves with their entertainment fund, which, of course, had to be refused. * * * Knitted caps, socks, and mufflers, and in addition a mitten with separate index finger will be much in demand.

(Signed) ERIC L. BARR,
Lieutenant, United States Navy, Commanding.

U. S. S. GEORGIA.

DEAR SIR: I beg to inform you that I am very much in sympathy with the movement of the Navy League. * * * If called upon to campaign in the North Atlantic in winter both officers and men, who depended upon the regular uniform to protect them against the bitter weather experienced at sea, and in particular during this season, would not only suffer serious hardships but their attention would necessarily, and in a large measure, be distracted from their duty by the suffering which such weather inflicts upon those exposed to its rigors for long periods when improperly clad.

Yours, very truly,

(Signed) W. E. KITTELLE,
Captain, United States Navy, Commanding.

MAY 7, 1917.

From: Bureau of Navigation.

To: Commander in Chief, Atlantic Fleet, Pacific Fleet, Asiatic Fleet, Chief of Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

The acceptance, and wearing of the following articles under such restrictions as commanding officers may prescribe, is authorized:

- (a) Sleeveless jacket, gray wool.
- (b) Mittens, gray wool.
- (c) Mufflers, blue, or preferably gray wool.
- (d) Wristlets, gray wool.
- (e) Helmets, gray wool.
- (f) Arctics.

(Signed) L. C. FARLEY
(By direction).

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 18, 1917.

MY DEAR MRS. FRAZER: The enlisted men on board the American destroyers now in European waters were generously furnished by your comforts committee with sweaters, mufflers, and wristlets prior to their departure from the United States, and I am sending this letter to let you know that the same were most acceptable and genuinely appreciated.

Yours, sincerely,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy.

Mrs. JAMES CARROLL FRAZER,
1316 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

U. S. S. "NICHOLSON"
Navy Yard, New York, May 12, 1917.

Will you please convey to the members of the Navy League the sincerest thanks of the crew of the Nicholson for their great kindness in sending the warm outfits.

We appreciate their patriotic efforts and will endeavor to show that we are worthy of them.

You are further assured that these clothes will be used within 24 hours and probably will remain in use during the greater part of our service in — (word deleted by censor).

With best wishes and many, many thanks for the kindly interest of the Navy League in our welfare.

Very sincerely,

FRANK W. HEIMS, Chief Boatswain's Mate.
JAMES CALLAN, Chief Gunner's Mate.
IRA SIKES, Chief Carpenter's Mate.
J. FRANK WELCH, Chief Machinist's Mate.
ROY W. FAUST, Chief Water Tender.
THEODORE M. HYATT, Chief Yeoman.
(In behalf of the entire crew.)

To the NAVY LEAGUE OF AMERICA:

The package of sweaters, mittens, and scarfs sent to us at — by the Navy League has been distributed, and I want to thank you for sending it. The clothing is appreciated very much and is something destroyers have long needed.

Very truly,

G. F. NEAL,
Lieutenant Commander, United States Navy.

Many thanks for your trouble in supplying the ship with such a good supply of articles which will add so materially to the crew's comfort and consequently to their efficiency.

The articles arrived safely and were fully appreciated, and I beg to thank you most heartily for the interest and generosity shown both by yourself and the good people who furnished us with such practical outfits.

Very sincerely, yours,

S. W. BRYANT,
Lieutenant Commander, United States Navy.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this amendment does not propose to disorganize any organization. There are other organizations in the country besides the comforts committee of the Navy League. There are dozens of associations of good women in the country making garments for soldiers and sailors. I wish to say that the Secretary of the Navy has not declined to receive any of these garments, but has ordered all to go through the Red Cross Association.

How does this amendment that provides that all these things shall be sent through the Red Cross disorganize any association? I do not think the Senator from Kansas understands it. It proposes that the comforts committee, which is recognized by this amendment, and all other organizations, shall send their garments through the Red Cross Association, because the Red Cross Association is a national organization recognized by the Government. How sending these things through the Red Cross will disorganize any association I do not see. The Senator will remember that the amendment recognizes the comforts committee of the Navy League. That does not disorganize it. How could it? It recognizes it and not only recognizes it, but it recognizes other good women's associations, and I know there are other associations making garments.

In order to do it systematically why should not the comforts league and every other league, as the Secretary has ordered, send and distribute their garments through the Red Cross Association, which is a national organization recognized by Congress? That is all my amendment does.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to suggest that the last three words of the committee amendment provide that garments may be received from "other patriotic organizations." That would permit the Red Cross to distribute any garments that might be sent to them. We all realize the great work the Red Cross has done and is doing, but the comforts committee was organized for the specific purpose of making garments for the sailors.

But I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that he is mistaken when he says they have not refused to accept garments sent by the comforts committee. On the 13th day of September, 1917, the following letter was forwarded to the proper officer of the department with a truck load of garments. The letter was addressed to the supply officer of the Navy Department:

NAVY LEAGUE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., September 13, 1917.

SUPPLY OFFICER, Navy Yard.

DEAR SIR: We are sending one truck load of sweaters, mufflers, wristlets, and helmets for the men in the naval service. Will the supply officer please see that these goods are distributed to the men free of charge as gifts of the comforts committee of the Navy League.

Thanking you for your kindness in this matter, I beg to remain,
Very truly, yours,

ELIZABETH VAN RENSSLAER FRAZER,
Chairman Comforts Committee.

Here is a photograph of the truck loaded with garments [exhibiting].

On the same day that truck load of garments was offered it was refused by the supply officer in the following words:

No more to be received until further instructions.

So the Senator from North Carolina will realize that the department has refused to accept supplies tendered by the comforts committee.

Letters have gone out to individual members of the committee that garments sent in by the committee would be refused. I have received from my constituents letters saying that the goods were going to be sent to me by express or by freight and I have been requested to deliver them to the Navy Department. I will gladly receive them, and it will give me pleasure to deliver them to the department, but it does seem to me that these women, loyal and patriotic as they are, should be permitted to deliver to the Secretary of the Navy the garments that have been prepared under their instruction and supplied without cost to the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, there is no desire on the part of anyone to refuse to accept articles made for our soldiers and sailors, but it is necessary in order to determine what is most useful and to distribute the gifts and the garments that there be some system adopted. Such a system should have entire control of all means and agencies relating thereto.

It can readily be seen that if the Navy League auxiliary sends garments to the Secretary of the Navy or to anyone else, or distributes them among sailors on the ships, inevitably there will be thousands of other organizations that will want to do the same thing. All of the large societies have their women's auxiliary organizations and they are knitting now, and I hope that their efforts will do great good.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President—

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDING. Does the Senator see any objection to the Secretary of the Navy turning these things over to the Red Cross for distribution?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here is the difficulty with that. The Red Cross has an organization in every town in the United States, and instead of expressing the goods to the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary sending them to the ships those kindly disposed persons who have gifts to send can right in their own home town deliver the goods to the local Red Cross organization. Thus there is effected a great saving to the people who want to send the goods, and there is also valuable time gained in the distribution of them.

The difficulty with different organizations arranging for shipment of goods to the various vessels is in the fact that some vessels will have a superabundance and others will not have any of the articles. Consequently there ought to be some kind of an organization to attend to this matter. The Secretary of the Navy is busy; he has not a bureau for this purpose; but the Red Cross has a bureau for this particular purpose, and that organization is one that is recognized by the Government, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has said. Its accounts are audited by the War Department, and all expenditures can be checked over by the Government officials.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. May I suggest that the supply department of the Navy knows full well where garments are needed? Another thing, in regard to accounting the women of the country are donating these articles free, and there is no need of an accounting officer.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There ought to be, because there has to be a great number of express charges and expense of that kind, and there must be a large bureau that will keep track of the transactions. The Red Cross has made this the special work of a part of its organization. Having an organization, and the Secretary having written to them concerning the matter and they having replied creating such a bureau, it seems to me it is better to accept their management than to divide this business among numerous organizations that might want to be recognized in the distribution of the goods.

Then again, we know that the Red Cross has a fund of $100,000,000, and they are able not only to maintain a bureau but to indicate what garments are needed. Otherwise their uniform work would be duplicated, and there would be cross purposes upon the part of the various organizations that might want to send particular kinds of garments, too numerous in one direction or not enough in another.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President—

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDING. I wish to ask the Senator if this amendment has anything to do with the controversy between the Secretary of the Navy and the Navy League.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask whether the Curtis amendment has anything to do with it.

Mr. HARDING. I can not speak of that.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDING. Just a minute. I want to say to the Senator from Colorado that it seems to me rather an unseemly thing for the United States Senate to take part in that controversy between the Secretary of the Navy and the Navy League and slap in the face the patriotic efforts of thousands of women throughout the country when there has not yet been made an argument to show why the Red Cross should not make this distribution, even after the Secretary of the Navy has received the articles.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not see that there is any more slap in one way than in the other, so far as that is concerned.

The amendment does not properly belong to this bill and probably could be ruled out on a point of order. It is injected here without any reason, so far as the bill is concerned.

Mr. President, we all recognize that there ought to be one bureau for the purpose of distributing articles to our soldiers and sailors; for the purpose of directing what character of garments should be made by the ladies and how they should be disposed of. We all recognize that by the establishment of such a bureau we will obtain the most economical distribution, and that the garments will be sent where they are most needed. That was recognized by President Wilson in a statement he made to the effect "that multiplicity of relief agencies tends to bring about confusion, duplication, delay, and waste." If we recognize organizations which will direct how garments shall be made and what garments shall be made, and where they shall be distributed there will be solicitations for contributions from the public; but if the work is centered in the Red Cross there is no likelihood that there will be, to any extent, such solicitations, the Red Cross having a large fund, it being an organization with perfect machinery for the distribution of such materials, and having facilities of communication throughout the United States. There is in each town in the interior of the United States a Red Cross organization. It seems to me, therefore, they can decide as to what it is best to make, how the things made should be sent, and can save an enormous amount in bringing proper organization and direction to the work in the various towns in the country where the garments may be made.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to ask the Senator if he does not know that the Secretary of War is receiving these garments direct from the comforts committee, and has not asked that they shall come through the Red Cross.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether that is so or not.

Mr. CURTIS. I know it to be a fact.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But I want to say that some kind of an organization will have to be perfected to do this work. The committee referred to has not the machinery for that purpose now, and when they send a lot of bundles to the Secretary of War they will have to be readdressed and shipped to places where they are needed, when the cost of transportation could be saved and they could be sent to the proper places in the first instance direct from the towns where they are made. It seems to me there would unquestionably be a saving, and even an economy, with respect to that situation if the work were done by the Red Cross.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. How could the Red Cross, through their local committees, send garments direct to a ship any better than could the comforts committee of the Navy League, which has over 700 units and over 300,000 members, with an organization and a head here, familiar with the situation, in touch with the Navy Department, who know what is needed and where to send the garments?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I want to say that in many instances the Secretary of the Navy has requested the comforts committee to have the materials sent to the Red Cross, which has been distributing them. That is what is being done, except in the case of the people of Kansas, as it seems.

Mr. CURTIS. Other Senators have told me that they have received similar letters and that they expect to receive goods in the same way, and no Senator, I think, will object to delivering them. The Senator from Kansas believes that these loyal and patriotic women are entitled to recognition.

Mr. OVERMAN. They are entitled to recognition.

Mr. CURTIS. And I believe that they are entitled to have received by the department the garments which they have sat up nights to make.

Mr. OVERMAN. I tried to keep this controversy off the floor of the Senate. I did not think this amendment belonged in this bill, but it is here, and that being the case, the best way to dispose of the matter is to provide for carrying out the directions of the great Secretary of the Navy according to the plan he has laid down, and not follow the method suggested by some Member from Kansas or from any other State. I want to say that these goods are being delivered, and they have been delivered from this very association through the Red Cross, in accordance with the orders of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Kansas has not asked that his advice be followed. I did not mention the controversy between the Secretary of the Navy and the Navy League; I purposely omitted doing so because I did not care to take sides in that controversy. The comforts committee offers to withdraw from the league; but I want to say to the Senator from North Carolina that if the Senator from Kansas were at the head of the Navy Department, these garments would be accepted regardless of any feeling he might have against any individual or any organization.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. President, I want to direct the attention of the Senate to the organization which the Red Cross has for the purpose of handling this business.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to ask a question of the Senator who offered the amendment. In reading the amendment I am impressed with the thought that it is a mere discretionary amendment—that it simply authorizes the delivery of these goods to the Navy Department—but there is nothing mandatory or compulsory as to the Secretary of the Navy receiving them. Is there anything in this amendment which the Senator thinks will require the Secretary of the Navy to accept these articles unless he regards them as of availability to our sailors?

Mr. OVERMAN. In answering that question I will ask the Senator to listen to the amendment. The original bill as it came from the House had no such provision, but the amendment was submitted in the committee by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. Let us see where it appears. It has been added as a proviso to this provision of the bill:

Clothing: For noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, authorized by law, $2,650,000.

Now, what is that? That is an appropriation for the Navy Department to buy clothing for the musicians, noncommissioned officers, and privates; and now there comes the amendment introduced in this place. It does not belong here; it has no business here, but it is introduced here; and it provides that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept garments, and so forth. My amendment authorizes him to accept them through the Red Cross, thus carrying out the plan and the organization of the Navy Department. That is all there is to it.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, does the Senator, if I may ask him the question, think, the Secretary of the Navy being authorized to accept the goods through the Red Cross, that therefore he would be prevented from accepting them through any other source than the Red Cross? Is that the Senator's construction?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not construe it in that way. I say that under the language of the amendment the Secretary is authorized to accept the goods through the Red Cross, but he is not prevented from accepting them from any other source.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to read, so that the Senate can be informed exactly as to the organization which has been inaugurated with respect to the distribution of such goods, a statement issued through the news service of the American Red Cross:

"[American Red Cross, Washington, D. C.]

"NEWS SERVICE.

"WASHINGTON, September 10, 1917.

"The formation of naval auxiliaries of the American Red Cross throughout the country is announced to-day by H. P. Davison, chairman of the Red Cross War Council. The action of the war council in establishing this new division of activities is taken in compliance with the wishes of Secretary of the Navy Daniels.

"Mrs. E. T. Stotesbury, of Philadelphia, has been named as chairman of the naval auxiliary of the Red Cross, and an advisory committee of women is to be named by Secretary Daniels this week.

"Secretary Daniels in a letter to Chairman Davison declares that the cooperation of the Red Cross with the Navy is especially desired, owing to President Wilson's wish that all American war-relief agencies be centralized under the Red Cross. His letter is as follows:

"DEAR MR. DAVISON: For some months a large number of patriotic women of the country, animated by a desire to add to the comfort of the fine body of youths who have enlisted in the Navy, have been sending useful gifts of their own make. Some of these good women have done this work through the Red Cross and others through different organizations. It has been suggested that it would be wise if the Red Cross, the only national relief organization having official recognition, be asked to extend its large sphere of usefulness by taking over entirely the direction of this laudable work of sending tokens of good will from willing workers to the men in the Navy by creating a naval auxiliary of the Red Cross.

"I am sure the country fully approves the statement of the President that "recent experience has made it more clear than ever a multiplicity of relief agencies tends to bring about confusion, duplication, delay, and waste." In every European country volunteer aid has been rendered "under a well-organized central body." The Red Cross is the body to which the whole country looks. To its appeals the people are ready to respond generously, because, as President Wilson recently said: "With its catholicity and its democracy the Red Cross is broad enough to embrace all efforts for the relief of our soldiers and sailors, the care of their families, and for the assistance of any other noncombatants who may require aid." With this broad foundation, with a record of efficiency, I feel sure the workers of the country who are particularly interested in the men who wear the naval uniform will be glad if the Red Cross will increase its benefactions by this natural and proper addition to its noble service.

"If your organization can do this, the Navy Department and the Navy in all its units, and the 100,000,000 Americans who are proud of their Navy, will give cordial aid and hearty cooperation.

"Trusting that this suggestion will meet your favorable consideration, I am,

"Sincerely, yours, "JOSEPHUS DANIELS."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me finish reading this letter and then I will yield to the Senator:

"In response to Secretary Daniels, Mr. Davison sent the following letter outlining plans for the naval auxiliaries:

"MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Your favor of the 1st instant, in which you express the hope that we can favorably consider that the Red Cross extend its present organization for the purpose of creating naval auxiliaries, to bend their efforts particularly to Navy work, duly received.

"The Red Cross, as you know, makes no distinction between the Navy and the Army in its work, our entire facilities being alike at the present time, at the disposal of both branches of our Government. We have given your letter a great deal of thought, desiring to carry out your wishes in every way possible, and the following plan suggests itself to us as the most practical for accomplishing the results indicated in your letter as desired by the Navy Department:

"In all communities where Red Cross chapters are organized ladies who desire to work especially for the Navy shall be invited to organize and become an auxiliary of the Red Cross under the following conditions:

"1. The name of such auxiliary shall be in each community the ——— Naval Auxiliary of the American Red Cross.

"2. In each community the naval auxiliary shall affiliate with the present local organized unit of the Red Cross, and shall report to and be responsible to the executive committee of the chapter of the Red Cross or the branch, as the case may be.

"3. Naval auxiliary may maintain separate headquarters or they may combine with the headquarters of the local Red Cross work in any manner that may be determined upon by the chairman of the naval auxiliary in question and the executive committee of the chapter or the branch under whose jurisdiction it is.

"4. The rules governing naval auxiliaries shall be the same as the rules governing the present Red Cross auxiliaries.

"The name of the auxiliary shall be descriptive of its membership and affiliation, and shall not be that of a person.

"The purpose of the auxiliary shall be to carry out one or more specific lines of Red Cross work as prescribed in the certificate of organization.

"The auxiliary must have at least 10 members. All officers and members of committees shall be members of the American National Red Cross and of the chapter or branch within whose jurisdiction the auxiliary is located.

"The auxiliary may be affiliated with the branch to which it is tributary or may be placed directly under the jurisdiction of the chapter.

"What Red Cross chapters and branches shall do for naval auxiliaries:

"(a) Transmit to them information and instructions received from the central committee through the division offices.

"(b) Keep them supplied with literature, blank forms, and other equipment necessary for their work.

"(c) Assist them in obtaining raw materials for supplies.

"(d) Establish a uniform system of accounting and records.

"(e) Centralize the assembling and shipping of supplies.

"(f) Give them full credit for work accomplished when reporting to the central committee.

"An advisory committee of women particularly interested in naval affairs, nominated by you, would no doubt be helpful and would be welcome to us.

"Kindly advise if this method of procedure would, in a manner satisfactory to you, meet the situation you have in mind. It is needless for me to repeat that the Red Cross wishes to render any service within its power desired by the Department of the Navy.

"Yours, very truly,

H. P. DAVISON,

"Chairman War Council."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to state first that I am very glad that letter has been read. It shows that the Red Cross has not been organized to do this work. In this connection I desire to have read from the Secretary's desk the letter which caused the Secretary of the Navy to write the letter which has just been read by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator will wait until I get through my statement. I do not want a speech interjected into mine.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the letter to which I refer ought to follow the letter which has been read, because it is the letter which brought forth the one which has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; I will allow the letter to be read. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEPTEMBER 5, 1917.

HON. JOSEPHUS DANIELS,

Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The comforts committee of the Navy League of the United States, which has served as the medium through which over 200,000 garments have been supplied to the personnel of the Navy, is extremely anxious to avoid any misinterpretation of your attitude with reference to the patriotic work in which it is engaged.

It has manifested its anxiety in this regard by the several conferences which its officers have sought with you and which you have been good enough to grant. The last of these conferences occurred on Tuesday, September 4, the committee being represented by Mrs. James Carroll Frazer and Mrs. Thomas F. Bayard, chairman and member of the executive committee, respectively.

Your attitude at these conferences, and particularly the last, was set forth by you as follows:

First. Because of the controversy in which you are engaged with the Navy League of the United States you stated that no further garments would be received for Navy use from the comforts committee of the Navy League of the United States.

Second. You rejected a proposal that the comforts committee disassociate itself from the Navy League of the United States and act as an independent receiving and advisory committee, such committee to receive the work of patriotic women and turn it in to the Navy.

It follows that it is your view that the comforts committee of the Navy League of the United States, with its organization of 700 units distributed throughout the United States, disband and cease work.

In justice to the committee your attention is recalled to your warm endorsement of its activity and is invited to the enthusiastic letters of thanks from the commanding officers of numerous ships' companies.

You suggested that in the future only through the Red Cross would you be willing to permit the acceptance of sweaters and other garments by the Navy, though you added that this would not bar the acceptance of garments from church and other charitable and patriotic societies save the comforts committee of the Navy League of the United States.

The comforts committee of the Navy League of the United States is earnest in the purpose to leave no stone unturned to continue its efforts to aid in alleviating the discomforts and hardships of the men who are so gallantly striving in defense of our common country.

It asks you, therefore, to state to it, and through it to the 300,000 women associated with it in its activities, whether the attitude above set forth is that which you have finally determined to adopt.

I have the honor to be, Mr. Secretary,

Very respectfully, yours,

MABEL O'LAUGHLIN, Secretary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I understand that various organizations have presented garments made for sailors, and the Secretary of the Navy requested that they should tender them through the Red Cross, that this has been done, and that everybody else seems to be satisfied.

Mr. President, if there is to be a number of organizations attempting the distribution, and as the Navy Department has not the help and has not the bureau through which it will be necessary to make the distribution, it can readily be seen that confusion must follow. No matter what might have been the reason or the cause of the organization of the receiving and distributing bureau of the Red Cross, everybody must concede that it is eminently proper that it should have been organized. There should be one organization to receive and distribute these garments and only one. It can readily be seen that some ships might have twice or three or four times as much as was needed of a given article, which might be sent to a point where there would be lack of communication with any other ship, and another ship might have absolutely nothing given to it, unless there was one central organization.

That central organization has been designated by the Red Cross. As I said, its accounts are audited by the War Department of the United States Government. It has been recognized by acts of Congress. Its president is the President of the United States. The chairman of its board of directors is ex-President William H. Taft. There is no politics in an organization such as the Red Cross. If there are to be some other organizations that are perfectly independent, you can see what confusion must result. It will not be long before the ladies' auxiliary of the Masons, of the Knights of Columbus, of the Odd Fellows, of the Young Women's Christian Association, Daughters of the Revolution, and various other organizations running up to the thousands, will be sending to the Secretary of the Navy these garments. The Secretary of the Navy is here in Washington, and the ships land only at seaports. He has to express the garments to the particular ship and Congress has made no appropriation for a bureau to undertake the task. The work involved is no easy task, but hundreds of persons will be needed to carry it on.

Here is an organization that has had $100,000,000 given to it by the people of the United States of all denominations and of all classes. It is absolutely nonpartisan. It has the direction of the relief of our soldiers in the field. It has complete and reliable information, and will through its agencies have a system of reporting better than any other organization. While the Navy League is a most excellent organization, and the ladies themselves no doubt are doing most patriotic work, yet they are not established over the United States like the Red Cross.

I have been told that the Red Cross has 4,000,000 members and has an organization in every town in the United States. Now, the Navy League or the Navy League Auxiliary no doubt has some organizations along the Atlantic and the Pacific and the Gulf coasts; but when you go into the interior as a usual rule it does not extend there. You ought to have one organization, and that organization ought to reach to every town in the United States, and then if there are too many garments of a certain kind being made they can send them in a certain other direction. It is just as in case of war; you can not have a dozen people conducting it. It must be all under one head. In the same way the manufacture and distribution of these articles is better under one control.

I do not care what the disputes have been. There has been a Red Cross organization for this very work, and the Navy Department, not having any such organization and not having been provided by the Congress of the United States with any means for undertaking this great work, it seems to me it is folly to distribute these garments except through the Red Cross. Secretary Daniels deserves great credit for devising such an excellent organization for this work.

For these reasons I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, which says "through the Red Cross," will prevail. Then you will have a complete organization, complete method of manufacture, complete harmony of design as to what shall be manufactured, and perfect distribution.

Under those circumstances it seems to me the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I had hoped that this controversy would not be projected into the Senate. I had hoped that people had enough love for the Navy and enough patriotic sentiment not to project this controversy into the Senate.

What is this controversy? I am going to state it to the Senate plainly and clearly. There is no difficulty about all of the relief that anybody will furnish the sailors being given to them and received by them. Every gift, all clothes, all money, all tobacco, all relief which the patriotic and generous people of America will give to the Navy through any agency to be provided or that is already provided will be received by the Navy.

Now, what is the issue that is projected here? It is an issue between the Secretary of the Navy and the officials of the Navy League—not the Navy League itself but its officials.

How was this fight precipitated? Who is at fault in this fight between the Secretary of the Navy and the officials of the Navy League? Now, let us see.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator name the officials of the Navy League?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know all the officials.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator name those that he knows there is a contest between?

Mr. SWANSON. There is a contest between Col. Thompson and the Secretary and the directors.

Mr. OVERMAN. Col. Thompson—that is the man.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not get the name.

Mr. SWANSON. Col. Thompson and others. I do not know all of them.

Now, what is this issue? I want to appeal to the Senate to do what is right in this matter, if it loves its Navy. What is this issue?

There was an unfortunate incident at Mare Island. There was a conspiracy by—

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to suggest the absence of a quorum. I think this discussion ought to be heard. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Smoot
Calder	Kellogg	Pittman	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Poinexter	Stone
Culberson	Kenyon	Pomerene	Swanson
Cummins	Kirby	Ransdell	Trammell
Curtis	La Follette	Reed	Underwood
Dillingham	Lewis	Robinson	Wadsworth
Fall	McCumber	Saulsbury	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Shafer	Watson
Hale	McKellar	Sheppard	Williams
Harding	Martin	Shields	Wolcott
Hollis	New	Simmons
Husting	Norris	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] on account of important business.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. HOLLIS. Will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of raising a point of order on this amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; at the proper time; but I should like to discuss it first. I will yield later.

Mr. HOLLIS. It seems to me useless to discuss this matter all the afternoon if it is out of order. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, to which the Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment, is clearly out of order under Rule XVI, on page 18, section 3, which provides:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The precedents are full of cases of this kind. The very first one in Gilfr's Precedents, on page 71, was a very similar amendment to the Army bill, and was a proviso, as follows:

And provided further, That during the existence and operation of the foregoing restrictions upon any United States soldier appearing at the polls to keep the peace it shall not be lawful for any other man to carry a deadly weapon—

And so forth. That was ruled out of order as being general legislation on an appropriation bill.

This bill is to appropriate money for the support of the Government. The amendment is general legislation that will operate long after these appropriations have been spent. It is a general provision compelling or authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, from this time forth until the statute is repealed, to receive these articles. In the interest of saving time, I raise the point of order and ask that it be passed upon.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am satisfied that the point of order is well taken. I am willing to withhold my speech until the point of order is ruled upon. If it is not sustained, then I shall wish to state the position of the Naval Committee on this question, which I think is absolutely right. At the conclusion of my remarks I contemplated making the point of order. This is certainly a condition which does not now exist. It seems to me that with the amendments venturing on a field of conditions which do not now exist in the Navy the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas is clearly out of order, and the point of order is therefore well taken, and the amendment should be declared not in order. I will yield in order to permit the question to be decided by the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not see how this amendment can be declared general legislation. It is not general in its nature at all. It simply authorizes the Secretary to receive certain gifts that may be made. It was considered by the committee, and it has been reported here from a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. It is general legislation, because it appertains to the entire Navy. It is general as far as the Navy can be general. There is no special legislation as to the Navy. It includes the entire Navy.

Mr. CURTIS. There is only one Navy Department.

Mr. SWANSON. Of course there is only one Navy Department, and if legislation can be general, this is general.

Mr. CURTIS. Instead of being general, it is more likely to be special legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. The whole amendment goes out, then, as I understand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It goes out on the point of order.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Increase of the Navy," on page 72, after line 3, to strike out:

Toward the construction of additional torpedo-boat destroyers and for acquiring and providing facilities for their expeditious construction, to cost complete, including armor and armament and such other expenses as may be incidental thereto, not exceeding $350,000,000, the sum of $225,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise to incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $125,000,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 12, to insert:

For acquiring and providing facilities for the expeditious construction of additional torpedo-boat destroyers, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, and toward their construction, to cost in all not more than $350,000,000, $225,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended at the direction and in the discretion of the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 19, to insert:

The President is hereby authorized and empowered to acquire or provide facilities additional to those now in existence for the construction of torpedo-boat destroyers, their hulls, machinery, and appurtenances, including the immediate taking over for the United States of the possession of and title to land, its appurtenance and improvements, which he may find necessary in this connection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 73, to insert:

That if said lands and appurtenances and improvements shall be taken over as aforesaid, the United States shall make just compensation therefor, to be determined by the President, and if the amount thereof, so determined by the President, is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as added to said 75 per cent will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, section 145, of the Judicial Code.

Upon the taking over of said property by the President, as aforesaid, the title to all property so taken over shall immediately vest in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," subhead "Contingent Expenses," on page 74, after line 12, to insert:

Capitol Grounds and Buildings: For the repair, equipment, and furnishing of the Maltby Building and other buildings owned by the United States fronting on B and C Streets, Arthur Place, and New Jersey Avenue NW., with a view to utilizing them for office purposes, including labor and material and each and every item incident thereto, said work to be done under the supervision of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, $75,000: Provided, That the space fitted up for office purposes herein authorized shall be allotted and assigned by the Public Buildings Commission authorized in the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1917: Provided further, That hereafter all public buildings and all space in the several public buildings owned or buildings leased by the United States in the District of Columbia, with the exception of the Capitol Building, the Senate and House Office Buildings, the Capitol power plant, and the Congressional Library, shall be from time to time assigned and allotted for the use of the several activities of the Government by the said Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. MARTIN. After that estimate was made Mr. Elliott Woods came to see me with a correction. He does not think the improvement can be made for $75,000, and he simply desires to increase the amount to $85,000. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, line 20, page 74, strike out "$75,000" and insert "$85,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. In line 4 on page 75, after the word "Library," the word "Building" ought to be inserted, so to read "Congressional Library Building." I move that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Territory of Alaska," on page 76, after line 18, to insert:

Care and custody of insane, Alaska: For care and custody of persons legally adjudged insane in Alaska, including transportation and other expenses, $29,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Postal Service," subhead "Out of the postal revenues," on page 78, after line 21, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

The Postmaster General is authorized to continue the rental of the buildings at First and K Streets NE., Washington, D. C., known as the Post Office Department Annex, for the use of the Post Office Department, including the mail-bag repair shop and lock-repair shop, at the rate of $32,000 per annum, until such time during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, as the new equipment shops building now being constructed is ready for occupancy, and such sum as may be necessary for that purpose is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside pending the consideration of the present appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the subhead, "Naturalization Service," on page 83, line 20, after the word "years," to strike out:

Provided further, That all mail matter, of whatever class, relating to naturalization, including duplicate papers required by law or regulation to be sent to the Bureau of Naturalization by clerks of State or Federal courts, addressed to the Department of Labor, or the Bureau of Naturalization, or to any official thereof, and indorsed "Official business," shall be transmitted free of postage, and by registered mail if necessary and so marked: Provided further, That if any person shall make use of such indorsement to avoid payment of postage or registry fee on his or her private letter, package, or other matter in the mail, the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of $300, to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction.

So as to make the clause read:

For an additional amount for allotment to clerks of courts for clerical assistance in naturalization proceedings in accordance with the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918, $30,000: Provided, That the allotment for the foregoing purpose heretofore made from the appropriation of $275,000 for naturalization expenses for the fiscal year 1918 shall not be reduced during the said fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 84, after line 17, to insert:

in," to insert "Senate Document No. 93 and," and in line 8, after the words "of the," to strike out "State of Massachusetts and the judgment in favor of the," so as to make the clause read:

For payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, reported to Congress at its present session in Senate Document No. 93 and House Document No. 298, except the judgment in favor of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 12, after the words "War Department," to strike out "$43,060.01" and insert "$936,878.40," so as to make the clause read:

Under the War Department, $936,878.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 15, after the words "In all," to strike out "$53,995.60" and insert "$947,813.99," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $947,813.99.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 97, to insert:

The next amendment was, on page 103, after line 15, to insert:

SEC. 9. That section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved May 10, 1916, as amended by the naval appropriation act, approved August 29, 1916, shall not apply to teachers in the public schools of the District of Columbia who are also employed as teachers of night schools and vacation schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Are the committee amendments concluded?

Mr. MARTIN. That is the last committee amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Senator from Arkansas if he will yield to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I may have to leave the Hall, and I desire to offer an amendment at this time to come in on section 3, with reference to the Federal board for vocational education. Before the amendment is read I wish to say that there is no appropriation. We have in the general vocational law an appropriation of $200,000 to be used by the board for certain administrative purposes. This amendment broadens a little the administrative purposes. The House broadened it somewhat, but this makes it more specific. It is absolutely essential that they shall rent their own quarters now, because while originally it was supposed that they would be furnished quarters in existing space everything is crowded. We add nothing to the $200,000 which is carried in the general appropriation, but liberalize somewhat the use of the money.

Mr. MARTIN. I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 9, after the word "periodical," strike out the word "and," and, in line 10, before the period, insert a comma and the following:

rental of quarters in the District of Columbia, from September 1, 1917; traveling expenses, including attendance at meetings of educational associations, societies, and other organizations, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses, not included in the foregoing; and the Federal Board for Vocational Education is hereby authorized to expend out of such appropriation such amounts as may be necessary for studies, investigations, and reports in cooperation with other Government agencies, or otherwise, in regard to the vocational training of disabled soldiers and sailors, and in regard to the vocational training of mechanics and technicians for war service. In any State the legislature of which met in 1917 and failed for any reason to accept the provisions of the vocational education act, as provided in section 5 of said act, if the governor of that State, so far as he is authorized to do so, shall accept the provisions of said act and designate or create a State board of not less than three members to act in cooperation with the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and shall designate the State treasurer as custodian for all moneys allotted to that State under said act, the Federal board shall, if such legislature took no adverse action on the acceptance of said act in 1917, recognize such State board for the purposes of said act until the legislature of that State meets in regular session in due course and has been in session 60 days.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I offer an amendment and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, after line 16, insert the subhead "United States Employment Service" and the following:

To enable the Secretary of Labor to carry into effect the purpose specified in the act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to create a Department of Labor" by advancing the opportunities of wage earners for profitable employment, to wit: For salaries of officers and employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including repairs and alterations thereto, contingent expenses, fuel, heat, light, telephone and telegraph service, purchase of typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, and all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, $500,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor: Provided, That the officers, clerks, and employees of the Division of Information in the Bureau of Immigration are hereby transferred to the United States Employment Service, at Washington, D. C.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

Mr. HOLLIS. This is a matter of very great importance and there are less than 20 Senators in the Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Shields
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Simmons
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Smith, Ariz.
Cummins	Kellogg	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Curtis	Kenyon	Phelan	Smoot
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Sterling
Fletcher	La Follette	Polindexter	Swanson
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Pomerene	Trammell
Gerry	McCumber	Ransdell	Underwood
Hale	McKellar	Reed	Wadsworth
Harding	McNary	Robinson	Warren
Hollis	Martin	Shafroth	Williams
Husting	New	Sheppard	Wolcott

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], on account of important business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Arkansas will proceed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I realize that many Senators are compelled to be absent from the floor on account of conferences on important bills which have not yet been disposed of. I express the hope that as many Senators as find it practical to do so will remain in the Chamber for a few minutes while the purposes and importance of this amendment are disclosed.

I regard it as one of the most important items to be considered in connection with the pending legislation. It is in every proper sense an emergency measure appropriate to be carried in the pending bill. It contemplates providing a fund of $750,000 for the use of the Employment Bureau in the Department of Labor, primarily for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act of March 4, 1913, creating the Department of Labor. That act declares its fundamental purpose to be as follows:

The purpose of the Department of Labor is to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

The measure is important at this time and possesses an emergency character by reason of the fact that in many of the industries necessary for the prompt and efficient conduct of the war there is now an enormous shortage of laborers. Take, for instance, the shipbuilding industry. In one shipyard alone there is a shortage of 30,000 laborers; in two other shipyards soon to begin construction work there will be, within a few days, a shortage of 30,000 more, and in all probability in this industry there is a shortage of more than 100,000 laborers.

I use this merely as an illustration, for the Employment Bureau has not confined and will not confine its activities to the securing of employment in any one important branch of industry. Its activities extend to all of them, including agriculture as well as manufacture.

The item has so far not received favorable consideration by those charged with the direct responsibility for this legislation on what I regard as erroneous theories. It has been stated that the purpose of the amendment or the provision contemplated by the amendment is to create a new bureau, and it has also been stated that it is not desired by anyone save the Secretary of Labor and his subordinates. I call to this subject the attention of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, and I propose to show during the course of this debate that the legislation is supported and advocated by the Civil Service Commission, by the War Department, the Navy Department, the Shipping Board, the Council of National Defense, and by unofficial organizations, including the American Federation of Labor and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read all the indorsements and requests for this legislation. I repeat the statement that the letters which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD are unqualified indorsements of the amendment and express many and varied reasons why the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if the requests are as to the amount also?

Mr. ROBINSON. No, sir.

Mr. KENYON. How does the Senator arrive at the amount, which seems to me to be very large?

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be very glad to answer the question of the Senator from Iowa. The letters from the Civil Service Commission, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Shipping Board, the Council of National Defense, the American Federation of Labor, and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States do not undertake to determine the amount necessary for the purposes involved in the amendment. The Secretary of Labor, however, reached a conclusion as to the amount necessary by the following calculation:

The cost of the United States Employment Service's work in the previous fiscal year was 65 cents per person found employment. The minimum rate charged by private employment agencies is $2, more than three times as great. Estimating that an expanded business might permit reducing this rate to 50 cents per person found employment—the estimated needs of the Government and certain basic industries essential for war needs, which were known to approximate 1,500,000 workers—indicated a necessity for $750,000 as a fund to carry on the service during the fiscal year.

That is the only information I am able to submit to the Senate concerning the amount that is required to carry on this work. The Secretary of Labor has estimated that there are required 1,500,000 additional workers necessary to carry on the various industries in which the Government is directly interested in order to properly and efficiently conduct the war, and that to accomplish that end and secure the 1,500,000 additional laborers it will require on an average 50 cents per person found employment, making a total of $750,000.

Mr. President, I have a statement read before the Chamber of Commerce of the United States on September 20, 1917, when that body was in session at Atlantic City, N. J., by Admiral Bowles, heartily commending the Department of Labor for its activities in securing employment in connection with the Government service and particularly the shipping industry, and expressing also an opinion as to the necessities for this legislation. I ask that that statement be printed in the RECORD without reading, unless some Senator wishes to hear it read in detail.

The letter referred to is as follows:

[Statement from Admiral Bowles to be read by Meyer Bloomfield, Sept. 20, 1917, United States Chamber War Convention, Atlantic City.]

This notable convention, organized by the business men of America to consider the serious issues arising from the world war and ways to bring to the United States Government the support of organized business and industry, affords an unusual opportunity to make a statement which is pertinent to the purposes of the convention.

Only those who have been situated so as to follow the exertions of the United States Department of Labor in organizing the labor market, through its system of employment offices, so as to help farm, factory, railroad, and shipyard, employer and employee alike, with the opportunity to connect worker and work can appreciate in due measure the value and success of these efforts.

But for the far-reaching help of this department both our Government and private persons would have been obliged to create a war-time agency, costing probably millions of dollars to administer (to say nothing as to the adequacy of such an instrument), all for the purpose of bringing information, order, and proper help distribution in the employment field.

The vital national need of speedy shipbuilding has nowhere received a more telling support than it has from the officials of this department and its agents scattered throughout the Union. Such support has been beneficial in equal measure to the Government, the shipbuilder, and the worker, both skilled and unskilled.

It is due the United States Department of Labor to make this public acknowledgment of its large contribution in a time of national emergency.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have a copy of a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States approving and recommending the legislation, which I ask be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

XVII. EMPLOYMENT SERVICE.

Whereas in considering employment problems raised by the war the Chamber of Commerce of the United States finds imperative need for a common agency whereby employers may be connected with workers seeking employment; and

Whereas the evidence of business men who have used it agrees that the United States Employment Service of the Department of Labor as such an agency is lacking for war emergencies only because too limited in extent: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the United States approves the usefulness of the United States Employment Service and recommends that Congress sustain the said service by ample appropriation and direct its immediate extension as a war measure.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have also a letter from the president of the Civil Service Commission, Hon. J. A. McIlhenny, discussing the subject in detail and expressing his favorable opinion concerning the importance of the legislation and the necessity for it. I ask that the letter of Mr. McIlhenny be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., September 17, 1917.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF LABOR.

SIR: This commission has received from the local offices of the United States Employment Service valuable assistance in locating men available for employment in mechanical trades and similar positions in navy yards and arsenals. It is believed that the Department of Labor can render a further assistance to the commission in its effort to obtain a sufficient number of stenographers and typewriters to meet the war needs of the Government. The demand for stenographers and typewriters is unprecedented in private business as well, and if the commission is to keep abreast of the increasing requisitions of the departments every agency which might help to increase the available supply must be employed.

The publicity which could be secured for the commission's examinations through the offices of the United States Employment Service would be of the greatest value to the commission in its work. The commission has literature describing its examinations for stenographers and typewriter positions, which can be furnished for distribution in any reasonable quantity. When inquiry is made at an office of the United States Employment Service concerning employment as a stenographer and typewriter, if the needs of the Government in this line were brought to the attention of the inquirer and his mind relieved of any impression it may have received concerning the difficulty of the examination and supposed "red tape," it is believed that a number of additional applicants for stenographer and typewriter examinations would result. The commission requests that the department instruct its agents along this line.

The commission appreciates the assistance the Department of Labor has given it, and will be grateful for its further cooperation.

By direction of the commission.

Very respectfully,

J. H. McILHENNY, President.

Mr. ROBINSON. I next offer a letter of Secretary of War Baker, who signs a communication as chairman of the Council of National Defense. This letter was written September 13, 1917. It is brief and is as follows:

COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE,
Washington, September 13, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: There was brought to the attention of the Council of National Defense at its meeting yesterday your plan for the expansion of the existing employment exchange system in the United States, and its details were given careful consideration.

The council heartily indorses the undertaking, and is of the opinion that it is essential as a war measure that such a project be inaugurated and an adequate appropriation provided as early as possible.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Chairman Council of National Defense.

Hon. WILLIAM B. WILSON,
Secretary of Labor.

I next read a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, dated September 24, 1917, and addressed to me:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, September 24, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your request as to the value of the employment service of the Department of Labor, I desire to state that the exigencies of the war have called for a very large increase of skilled and unskilled workers in our navy yards and at naval stations. The Navy's demands have been much larger than can be obtained by the ordinary sources of supply. We have called upon the Labor Department, which has been effective, to secure for us labor of the character needed in the work the Navy is called upon to perform in making adequate preparations for the war in which we are engaged.

I should like the chairman of the committee to hear this communication. I ask his attention. The statement has been made elsewhere that no one desires or urges this legislation save the Secretary of Labor. I have already read into the Record the unqualified advocacy of the legislation from the president of the Civil Service Commission, the Secretary of War as chairman of the Council of National Defense, and the resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and I am now reading a letter from the Secretary of the Navy who gives the proposed amendment equally unqualified indorsement with that of the others I have already read. He proceeds:

The Navy Department has no organization comparable to that of the Labor Department for doing this work, and the officers of that department have responded with such alacrity to our request that I feel at liberty to suggest that such appropriation as may be necessary be made for them to continue that work, certainly during the war.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate.

I ask the attention of the Senate to a communication from Rear Admiral W. L. Capps, general manager of the Shipping Board. This communication is dated September 24, 1917, and is addressed to me:

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.
UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION,
Washington, September 24, 1917.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your inquiry as to the value of the employment service of the Department of Labor, I beg to say that the Emergency Fleet Corporation has entered into contracts for the construction of vessels under the authority of Congress, which, to accomplish the best results, require in the near future an increase of approximately 100,000 skilled and unskilled workmen in shipyards.

The Emergency Fleet Corporation has accordingly felt it absolutely essential to organize an "Industrial service department" for cooperation with its own contractors and all the shipyards of the United States which are now completing the requisitioned vessels on behalf of the Government. This industrial service department is largely dependent upon the cooperation of the Department of Labor and its employment service. The situation is an exigency of the first importance, and I earnestly request that the Department of Labor may be supplied with ample funds for this purpose as a war measure.

Very truly yours,

W. L. CAPPS, General Manager.

Mr. President, that letter is from one who is in a position to know something of the necessity for this legislation as it will affect the shipbuilding plans of the United States. The statement is contained that there is now a necessity for an additional number of skilled and unskilled laborers in that industry alone of 100,000 men, and that it is necessary that the shipbuilding program be carried forward through cooperation with this bureau in the Department of Labor. The situation he states is an emergency and requires prompt action on the part of Congress.

I have also a letter from the Secretary of Labor, Hon. W. B. Wilson, which is addressed to a member of the Committee on Appropriations, which I ask to have inserted in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

SEPTEMBER 24, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It is with a feeling of genuine regret that I have observed the omission by the House from the pending urgent deficiency bill of the item of $750,000 which was requested for the maintenance of the United States Employment Service.

I am conscious of the desire of Congress to restrict the scope of this bill to items that have a distinct and vital bearing upon the Government's participation in the war, and it is in an effort to persuade you of the fact that this item comes clearly and precisely within that category that I address you on the subject.

May I not, in the first place, invite your particular attention to the accompanying copy of a communication from the Secretary of War in his capacity as chairman of the Council of National Defense, certifying to the fact that this item is "essential as a war measure"?

That there is, generally speaking, an abundance of employment for all available workers at the present moment may be freely conceded, but without that guiding influence which the Federal Government alone is able to exercise it is highly probable that available man power in one community may not be brought into touch with opportunities for employment in another. Take, for instance, the situation which exists in the Middle West during the harvest season. There the demand for men greatly exceeds the supply. At the same time at many points along the Atlantic seaboard there are large numbers of men out of work. It is in the bringing together of these two factors that the United States Employment Service has been particularly effective. Obviously the agencies of the several States are unable to carry on this work beyond the jurisdiction of their own boundaries. It has been the aim of the department, therefore, to take up the work where the different States leave off and by a system of hearty cooperation to work out a closely knit organization which will prevent large numbers of workers remaining in idleness in one State of the Union while in another there is profitable employment to be had for the asking.

In accordance with that provision of the act creating the Department of Labor which authorizes it to advance the opportunities of wage earners for profitable employment, and the terms of section 40 of the immigration act, there has been developed, as an adjunct of the Immigration Service, the nucleus of a Federal Employment Service. Without recounting in detail the achievements of this branch of the department, I wish to submit for your information a few of its undertakings that are particularly relevant to the production of foodstuffs and other supplies for the maintenance of our people and the troops on the other side.

It placed some 290,000 persons in profitable employment during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, in addition to several thousand who were directed to agricultural pursuits during the harvest season.

It made a complete canvass of the Nation's available supply of shipwrights at the request of the Shipping Board, and registered 17,000 competent workers within four days. There was no other agency known to the Federal Government which was in a position to handle this matter with equal facility and dispatch.

It has provided sufficient labor to handle the entire crop in the principal wheat-growing States of the Middle West without loss, notwithstanding a serious shortage of help for this purpose was estimated to exist.

It is supplying necessary help to contractors engaged in the construction of Army cantonments and training camps.

It is directing labor to navy yards, factories, and shops that are working upon supplies for our Army and Navy.

It is cooperating with the Civil Service Commission in supplying office help to the various departments of the Government.

The War and Navy Departments, the War Industries Board, the Shipping Board, and the Food and Fuel Administrations are placing large contracts which can be completed only in the event that the available labor supply is forthcoming. The United States Employment Service is the only branch of the Federal Government to which the contractors and the departments can turn for the necessary assistance.

It is apparent that if the wants of our soldiers and sailors are to be supplied, the maximum production must be attained on the farms and in the factories of this country. Real efficiency here is essential to our successful prosecution of the war. It is the aim of the department to prevent any stoppage of work in war industries because of a shortage of labor.

Upon a further consideration of this matter I trust that the Senate may be disposed to accept as an amendment to the pending bill the item proposed for the maintenance and extension of this most important work.

Respectfully, yours,

W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

Mr. ROBINSON. I now produce a letter of September 25, 1917, from Samuel Gompers, who, as everyone here knows, is the president of the American Federation of Labor, and who is also chairman of the committee on labor of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense. I ask that the Secretary may read his letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 23, 1917.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I very greatly regret that the deficiency bill now before your committee does not carry the item appropriating $750,000 for the United States Employment Service, which the Secretary of Labor requested. However, the failure of the House Committee on Appropriations to include this item does not preclude your committee from taking this greatly needed constructive action.

The American Federation of Labor is deeply interested to have the system of employment exchanges in the Department of Labor made completely national and increasingly efficient. The members of the American Federation of Labor have pledged and are giving their loyal service to the Government. To enable them with the slightest delay and economic waste to place their energies and trained abilities at productive effort a perfectly adjusted machine is vitally and fundamentally necessary, and the United States employment service is potentially such an agency.

I have been familiar with the splendid development of this service through several years. It has become invaluable to the best interests of industry. Now that the regular course of orderly events is disturbed by the pressure of war demands, such an employment service is as vitally necessary to our people as the similar service in England has proven to be to their industries.

Plans may be drawn for ships, but it must be realized that ships will not be built unless men are found to build them. Industries will be projected in vain unless behind the lathes and furnaces and at every guiding lever stands a trained and loyal American workman. The members of the Federation offer their services unreservedly; but in order to make their services freely and fully effective liberal support by Congress of this employment work of the Department of Labor is imperative.

In the interest of our Government in this crucial time, I trust you will bring this matter to the favorable attention of the committee. Small as it is, the appropriation meets as important a war need as anything your honorable body has acted upon this session. Unless adequate provision is made for this purpose, as president of the American Federation of Labor as well as chairman of the committee on labor of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense, I shall be deeply concerned for the success of the Government's construction program. My apprehension is shared by many.

Very respectfully, yours,

SAML. GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have a number of other letters from quasi-official organizations strongly urging and advocating this legislation, but the statements already read into the RECORD emphatically disclose that everyone connected with the public defense who is in a position to know the needs of the Government for additional men in the industries indispensable in connection with the carrying on of war strongly urges and advocates this legislation. It is not, Mr. President, an effort to create a new bureau. The service is already in existence, and has been in operation for a period of about 10 years. There are now in the United States something like 100 offices, located in various portions of 32 of the States; it is a well-organized service of national extent. The business men have used it, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States has declared it a beneficial organization, and the heads of the Navy Department, of the War Department, and of the Civil Service Commission have declared in favor of an adequate appropriation to enable it to properly carry on its functions.

Mr. President, it has been said, and no doubt will be repeated, that there are other departments that may, if they have need for this service, set up bureaus of their own. Funds which are given to the other departments are appropriated, Mr. President, for specific uses. We have given liberally to the War and Navy Departments for the war needs of the Nation—it is right that we should be liberal in providing for these purposes—but the sums we have given and are giving are all limited to special uses and can not be legally used for employment bureaus. But granting, for the sake of the argument, that other departments may employ their funds for such purposes, what would happen if they each undertook to set up an employment service?

Four competing bureaus, four sets of officers, four allotments of travel expense, printing, office rents, and four new bureaus, each having to learn a new trade. Gentlemen who wish to prevent the starting of new bureaus have a fine opportunity to do so by simply meeting the war emergency, declared by all these departments to exist, through an appropriation to carry on the United States Employment Service. The other course certainly does not mean economy, efficiency, or saving for the taxpayers.

If you rely on all of the various departments, whose demands for additional men are imperative in order that the war may be efficiently conducted, to establish employment agencies, you will not only have competition between them in securing the necessary results, but you will have an immense amount of duplication of work and a great increase in the cost of the work. The sensible and the intelligent thing to do—and nobody can answer the argument—is to employ an agency which is already in existence and to develop and strengthen it so that it may accomplish the ends that are desired by all those who are charged primarily with the responsibility of carrying on the war.

It has been said that the appropriation is too great. That is a question for the Senate to determine. I challenge Senators now to say whether it is their purpose to deny the Shipping Board, the War Department, and the Navy Department, and the Civil Service Commission this useful utility, which has shown its value in the past by securing the men necessary to carry on the work which is indispensable that the United States may disclose to the world its ability to stand firmly and fight efficiently before the greatest enemy that ever arrayed itself against mankind. You have an opportunity now to do a practical thing, a thing that will result in great benefit to the service, something that will not result in needless waste of money. I appeal to the Senate to adopt this amendment.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. HOLLIS. Will the Senator state whether the appropriation which he recommends has been estimated for by the proper department?

Mr. ROBINSON. It has been. In reply to a question by the Senator from Iowa earlier in the debate, while the Senator from New Hampshire was temporarily called from the Chamber, I stated the way in which the conclusion was reached as to the amount necessary.

Mr. President, if it be admitted that this is a necessary service, my next proposition is that the present organization can not meet the demands of the existing exigency. Last year the employment service had about $135,000. It has been operating in the Bureau of Immigration on a limited scale, on a peace footing. Its high-water mark of service was reached last fall. It was then placing about 20,000 persons in industry monthly. Because of the war demands of the Government largely, its work has increased to about 35,000 placements a month; 175 per cent.

Its funds have not increased a penny. Senators can readily calculate how long its funds will last. It will, in all probability, break down about the time the need for its services become the greatest, unless given funds now, even if it is not allowed to increase its personnel and make ready to really serve the national demands.

In addition to this, Mr. President, the public safety, as I have already indicated, demands this service. The shipyards especially need a Governmental employment service, able to guard against the irresponsible or the unfriendly. An example may illuminate the situation:

One shipyard, having about 6,000 workers, has now close to 2,500 in it of foreign birth. About 60 per cent of these men do not speak English. How many of them are loyal to American ideals nobody knows. How many of them are members of the I. W. W., nobody knows.

The United States Employment Service can aid greatly in guarding against such situations as that. On all accounts, this is a war measure of greatest importance, and should be adopted.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary may read the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Wolcott in the chair). The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE.

Miscellaneous expenses, United States Employment Service: To enable the Secretary of Labor to carry into effect the purpose specified in the act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to create a Department of Labor," by advancing the opportunities of wage earners for profitable employment, to wit: For salaries of officers and employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including repairs and alterations thereto, contingent expenses, fuel, heat, light, telephone and telegraph service, purchase of typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, and all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, $750,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor: Provided, That the officers, clerks, and employees of the Division of Information in the Bureau of Immigration are hereby transferred to the United States Employment Service, at Washington, D. C.

Mr. ASHURST. Thus, Mr. President, we observe that the Secretary of Labor, in the estimates which have been submitted to Congress, has estimated the sum of $750,000 as being a requisite sum for this purpose. It would seem unnecessary for me or any other Senator to say anything on this subject after the forceful and illuminating speech of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the proponent of the amendment; but it so happens that for some days I have been giving special attention to this particular subject, and to the energies and activities of the Department of Labor generally, and have collated some data which I believe may be pertinent to the amendment.

PUBLIC-SERVICE RESERVE.

A most encouraging evidence of the patriotism of America when Congress declared war was the flood of offers, from every State, that poured into Washington from citizens who wished to be given some work to do for their country. They wrote, they telegraphed, they rode to the Capital on every train. They besieged every department, they bombarded the President, stormed the Capitol, and cannonaded the Council of National Defense. They were in earnest and were very welcome; but the Department of Labor did not know how to find what particular work they could do or find the right man when a job appeared and a man was needed. The department finally solved the puzzle and absorbed the congestion. The Public Service Reserve was organized—a real democratic organization. Equipped simply with a director, a staff of workers, and a set of files, the reserve has already taken over thousands of offers from the files of departments and is classifying them and rendering them available for every need of the Government. Now that it has been done, the mystery is that no one thought of doing it before. Instead of citizens going home feeling depressed and disheartened because they can find nowhere to serve the country, this service of the Department of Labor has provided a meeting place for needs and supply—a common ground where men of all degrees of capacity and attainments may unite in devoting themselves to the service of our country in winning the great war.

The utility of the Public Service Reserve will be very great. It is registering men, ascertaining their experience, training, capacity, and aptitudes for service. It is in touch with all the agencies of the Government likely to need men, whether volunteers or for compensation. It can supplement the regular employment agencies and the work of the Civil Service Commission by preparing reserves of competent workers against the time of need. Men once registered may thereafter go contentedly about their own affairs, knowing that the Department of Labor is seeking their niche and will advise them when their opportunity comes. In France, in England, in the lands of our other allies there scarcely may be found to-day a man who is not devoting his all to the cause of his country. The powers of resistance of our common foe is due in large measure to the complete consecration of the individual to the service of the State. If the United States is to win the war, it can not be done solely through superior resources in material and in numbers of men. To win an enduring triumph democracy must show its capacity to light the world with a purer and a whiter flame of patriotic devotion than autocracy can inspire.

UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE.

Ten years ago, as a phase of the Immigration Service's care of foreign homeseekers appearing at our ports, an office was opened in New York purposed to direct aliens to interior localities promising profitable employment and to prevent them from sinking into the city's slums. Little was accomplished until the newly created Department of Labor was given charge of immigration. Secretary Wilson saw in the toy Division of Information an opportunity for real public service. He blew into it the breath of life. He galvanized it into a reality. He made it a real tool for the benefit of society. To-day the United States Employment Service has 93 offices in 36 States and the District of Columbia, being unrepresented in only New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, West Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Wyoming. By agreement official cooperation is carried on with many State employment services. This is being done in the States of Maine, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Louisiana, Arkansas, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Texas, New Mexico, Oregon, Nevada, Arizona, and Washington. Similar cooperation is carried on with Connecticut, South Dakota, and Iowa from the nearest office of the service in contiguous States. In New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, District of Columbia, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, North Dakota, Wyoming, and Montana cooperative agreements are under discussion.

As part of the service the administration undertook in 1915 to assist the harvesters in the corn and wheat belt of the Middle West. Last season about 75,000 workers were directed to the harvest fields. This year the demand for workers from every industry, the pressure upon farmers to plant an increased acreage, and the generally diminished labor supply in the wheat belt combined to cause great national anxiety regarding the prospect of saving the crop. The Department of Agriculture made preliminary surveys, indicating an inadequacy in the labor reserve for farm work. Unless the United States Employment Service could rise to the occasion it seemed probable that the patriotic labor of the farmers who at the President's call had seeded the greatest grain acreage ever known would go for naught. The Employment Service called on the National Farm Labor Exchange, in which the service cooperates with the State employment offices in Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, and with the railway commissioner within that territory and other interested agencies. Realizing the serious emergency, Commissioner General Caminetti placed a special agent in the field, with headquarters at Kansas City, put special assistants at work to aid him, and by arrangement with the Post Office Department, which gave splendidly effective cooperation, instituted a dragnet search for the necessary farm workers. Telegrams recently received from the affected States, which were published in the Official Bulletin, indicate the results achieved.

Missouri—"Labor conditions quite satisfactory." Nebraska—"Labor demand and supply about equal." Iowa—"Farm labor sufficient." Kansas—"Few calls for farm help now." Utah—"All right on farm help until September 25, at least."

The regular business of the service has grown at an amazing pace. The annual reports are as follows:

	Referred to employment.	Actually placed.
Fiscal year 1915.....	18,883	11,871
Fiscal year 1916.....	84,963	75,156
Fiscal year 1917.....	361,417	276,949

The figures for the latter year are incomplete.

The monthly returns of placements in the service now show a ratio indicating that the fiscal year 1918 may total 400,000 wage earners placed in employment through this agency. When it is considered that production everywhere depends upon the labor supply and that a worker's sole capital is his skill and labor in production, the value of the service is manifest. No substitute for its aid exists. While manufacture, mining, transportation, and finance are well organized, the business of connecting workers and jobs has never been given general attention, and is utterly haphazard, disorganized, and without operating mechanics. The United States Employment Service supplies the needed machine. It is the vehicle that gives the employer skilled service in finding competent workers and assures the workers a job, if jobs exist. In the present national emergency such a service is beyond valuation. Without it our whole national structure may be endangered. It is useless to send men to the trenches of France if we can not assure a constant flow of weapons, ammunition, food, and clothing to sustain them. That assurance can not be given unless our supply of workers is so organized, trained, and mobilized that the best results shall be obtained from the effort of each worker. No days must be lost between jobs. No worker must be so overworked that he shall have to drop out of the race for production. Comprehensive, intelligent husbanding of our man power is essential if we Americans mean business. Such husbanding is entirely practical, thanks to the foresight of Secretary Wilson. The United States Employment Service is the instrument which assures a steady supply of workers in our manifold industries.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I have had occasion recently to notice the value of the work done by the Department of Labor in the field of furnishing employees to employers who actually need them in this war period. There has been established in my own State, in Manchester, by the Department of Labor, a Federal employment office. I feared there might be some clash between the Federal department and the State department. So I communicated with the State commissioner of labor, a man of ability, who conducts his office in an entirely nonpartisan way, and placed him in touch with the Department of Labor. I have seen him within the last few days and he is very much pleased with the way in which the employment bureau of the Government has started out in New Hampshire and the good that it is likely to accomplish.

The time has gone by when laboring men should be left to drift around over the country or to stay at home where there is no employment, when there are jobs actually looking for the men, as there are to-day, and the Government would be very remiss if it did not undertake to bring the men and the jobs together. The case made out by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr.

ROBINSON], supplemented by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], seems to be so plain that I can hardly understand how the Senate can fail to adopt the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I voted against this amendment in the committee because of the size of the appropriation. With the general purpose and plan I am in entire accord, but with the amount of the appropriation I am not. It seems to me, if we are going to commence anywhere at any time to cut down appropriations, we can commence on this one without in anyway injuring the efficiency of our country during the war; and I propose as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to strike out "$750,000" and insert "$400,000."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that the amount carried in the amendment is scarcely adequate; but, if the Senator from Iowa will modify his amendment so as to make it $500,000, I will accept it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. KENYON. Well, Mr. President, while that would seem a little excessive, I will do that, and I will modify my amendment to the amendment so that it will propose to strike out "$750,000" and insert "$500,000."

Mr. ROBINSON. So far as I am authorized to do so, I accept the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this question was brought to the attention of the subcommittee, and that committee, after giving the closest attention to it, arrived at the decision that this amendment was absolutely unnecessary and should not become a part of the law.

There is an agency in the Bureau of Labor, Mr. President, that has been organized for a number of years, for placing the unemployed in profitable positions, and, in passing, I want to pay tribute to the man who conceived the idea and who asked for the first appropriation, for he has spent the money wisely and has through his labors and the labors of those engaged with him brought about favorable results.

The original idea was to take the immigrant as well as the unemployed of our country and to put them in touch with institutions and individuals who desired to employ help. Commissioner Caminetti, of the Immigration Bureau, began this work; he studied the question very carefully; he communicated with State organizations which were doing similar work in a small way, and from all the information he gathered he outlined a plan of assisting the unemployed of this country and of assisting the immigrants as they landed upon our shores, both men and women, in securing employment in the line of work that they had been accustomed to.

Now, Mr. President, we are asked for an appropriation of $750,000, which amount has been cut down by the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and accepted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to $500,000, for the purpose of securing men to do certain work for the Government or institutions working for the Government—not to find employment for them, for that, Mr. President, is unnecessary, for there is no man and no woman in the United States who desires employment to-day who can not get it and at wages unheard of.

Mr. President, I think if the truth were known that it would develop the fact that there is a jealousy existing between two divisions of the Department of Labor. The Commissioner of Immigration has made a success of this activity, and is still carrying on the work successfully; but another division of the department desires now that all of that work shall be transferred to it.

There is no department in the Government where there is so much duplication of work as there is in the Department of Labor. That has been called to the attention of the Senate time and time again. I remember the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] placing in the RECORD a statement showing the duplication of work done not only by the Department of Labor but by other departments of our Government. I know, Mr. President, that this is not the time to talk economy; I know that we are not scanning the appropriations as we should, and I want now to say that this session of Congress is the last one where appropriations will be made by the billions without more information as to the necessity of the appropriations.

I recognize that we have been making initial appropriations with a view of creating a great Army and Navy. I recognize that they have got to be large. I recognize that the heads of the departments can not give an itemized statement of each appropriation asked for, because they are beginning the building up of a great Army and the extension of our Navy, and as conditions develop in Europe cables are sent to the heads of those two great departments and requests are made almost daily for unforeseen requirements or additional men needed to carry on the war in Europe. As far as I am concerned, I want to confess that I have not investigated the actual need for the huge appropriations asked for. I have taken the word of the heads of the departments that they are absolutely necessary in order to carry out the war program as mapped out.

There is only one thought in my mind, and that is to win the war; and under present conditions I am not going to haggle or to criticize those that are responsible for directing our Army and our Navy for appropriations asked for, no matter if they do run into the billions of dollars; but when we are asked for $500,000 to duplicate the work that is being already done in the same department it seems to me we ought to object, and we ought not to make an appropriation of any sort at this time that can be got along without.

A great deal has been said about how much this appropriation, if it is made, would assist the Shipping Board in securing the necessary help and assistance in building ships so necessary to carrying on the war. Why, Mr. President, we have appropriated already $1,090,000,000 for the Shipping Board. It is in close touch with all the organizations or institutions of this country that build ships, that purchase all the material that goes into the ships. They know exactly where to secure the labor, if the labor is in the United States, for the purpose of producing the material and constructing the ships themselves. The Shipping Board has ample money, with no restrictions whatever upon its expenditure, to secure all the help that is necessary, if the help is in the United States.

Another thing, Mr. President: Wherever labor is taken from one section of this country to another, the section from which the labor is taken suffers and production is interfered with. There is a shortage of labor all over the United States, and every man who is capable of work ought to be compelled to work. If this war continues a year or two longer, we will not only have to resort to the draft law to secure the soldiers necessary for our Army, but we will be compelled to draft people to work in order to produce sufficient food and materials to carry on the war.

Mr. President, if this appropriation were necessary, or if it assisted in any way in carrying on the war, or if it would help the industries or producers of the country, I would never object to it for a moment. But, Mr. President, I think it is a waste of money, and I want now to ask the Senate of the United States, as soon as this war is over, to assist the Committee on Appropriations to weed out all the duplicate work that is going on in all the departments of our Government.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope the committee will be sustained in the position they took that this appropriation should not be placed upon this urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I appeal to Senators not to be frightened, notwithstanding the vehemence of the Senator from Utah. I wish he would take occasion to repeat a part of this speech the next time he delivers himself upon the virtues and benefits of the protective-tariff system, and tell the people of the United States then that there is more work in the United States now than we can secure laborers to perform.

Mr. President, the Senator from Utah made some statements to which I think I should reply, in order that the Senate may not be misled by his address. If there is any controversy in the Department of Labor as to where this work should be performed, a knowledge of that controversy has not reached me; and I think if the Senator from Utah has any information concerning the effort of anyone to unfairly take away from the Commissioner of Immigration functions that should be discharged by him, and to discharge them themselves, he ought to give the Senate a little fuller information upon the subject, rather than seek to have us reach the conclusion by innuendo.

The fact of the matter is that the provision in this amendment transferring these clerks in the Division of Information is a very proper one; and even the Senator from Utah will see it when I make the simple declaration that when this work was begun it was applied solely to procuring labor for aliens in the United States, and was therefore properly placed in the Bureau of Naturalization; but when Congress reached the conclusion that the function was a beneficial one, and that American citizens, as well as aliens, should have the benefit of it, the reason for placing it in the Bureau of Naturalization, or for keeping it there, terminated. There is not a reason on this earth, and I challenge the Senator from Utah now to say why any part of this work should be done in the Bureau of Naturalization since it has been extended to citizens of the United States generally. The proper place for it is where this amendment seeks to put it; and there is no quarrel in the Department of Labor about it, notwithstanding the innuendoes of the Senator from Utah.

The statement has been made by the Senator from Utah that this amendment contemplates a duplication of work. His argument is fallacious in this respect: If the amendment is adopted, it will prevent duplication of work. Instead of having four, five, or six bureaus employed in these various departments of the Government, as would be contemplated by his plan, we will have one bureau cooperating with all the departments. Instead of having the competition which would naturally arise if four or five of these bureaus were created in the various departments, we will have a systematic distribution of the benefits of the service, and the Government will be able to assist in securing the employment of laborers where they are most needed.

The Senator from Utah, Mr. President, struck the keynote of the opposition to this amendment when he said that it arose out of the desire of some Senators to prevent taking away laborers from some localities and transporting them into others. I maintain that in the great crisis which is now confronting the United States, laborers ought to be permitted to go and ought to be provided with information necessary to enable them to arrive at the point where they can best serve the Government's requirements. That is one of the most beneficial results to be obtained from this amendment.

The Senator from Utah has characterized this as a useless extravagance. I am not going to attempt to repeat the arguments that I made in the beginning, in which I think I showed to the Senate that instead of being extravagant it would save millions of dollars, and, perhaps, in the end, result in the saving of millions of lives, because it will enable the War Department and Navy Department and these great shipbuilding industries to promptly and efficiently carry on their work. That can not be done unless some adequate provision is made by the Congress to enable them to secure the men necessary to perform the toil. You can not build ships without labor, skilled and unskilled. There is already a shortage in shipbuilding industries of 100,000 men, and God knows how great the shortage will be within the next six months, unless we marshal all our resources and bring from industries where they are little needed men who are capable of performing these duties. With regard to the resultant hardship to some of the industries of the country, we can console ourselves with the consideration that the great good of the country will have been conserved by it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah says this will be a waste of money, and therefore he hopes the amendment will be defeated. If I thought it would be a waste of money, I would be against it, just as he is; but I do not think it will be a waste of money. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, I do not believe there is any more important item in this bill than that covered by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

While it may be true that this branch of the Department of Labor was originally established with the purpose of securing employment for idle men, it is just as important now, when the industries of the country and especially the activities of the Government are so greatly in need of men, that there should be some agency to bring those men where they are most needed.

The Senator from Arkansas has shown, by letters from different agencies of the Government carrying on this war, that in their opinion we need this service, and we need it now. I want to refer especially to the statement made by the Shipping Board with reference to the shipbuilding industry. They have recognized the importance of something of this kind, and according to the letter they found it necessary to establish in that service itself what they call the industrial-service department.

The Senator from Utah suggests that the Shipping Board has an almost unlimited amount of money, and that at any rate it has unlimited authority with the money that is put at its disposal. In other words, he would encourage what he condemns; he would encourage a duplication of work. He would have the Shipping Board establish a service bureau to go out over the country to hunt labor, instead of allowing it to be done by the department that properly has that work in charge.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Arkansas suggested, in the interest of not duplicating work and service I am in favor of this amendment. I do not want to see the Shipping Board establish an industrial service bureau to send agents and inspectors and men all over the country hunting a certain class of labor to go into employment. I want to see that work done and performed through the department and through the agency that Congress has already established and that is better acquainted with labor conditions throughout the country than any other agency in the country.

Mr. President, the Government, in carrying on this war, must have men to do certain classes of work. It needs men more than anybody else at the present time. The supply of labor along these lines is more important than any other one thing. We are told that the most essential thing in the conduct of this war at the present time is shipping transportation, and I think that that is true. An ample supply of ships rests at the very foundation of success in this war. We are not fighting this war in this country. We are not fighting it on our own territory. We must get our armies with all their supplies, their ammunition, their guns, their equipment, and everything that they need to enable them to fight battles across the seas, 3,000 miles away. We can not do this without ships. It is the only way to do it. We need these ships just as quickly as we can possibly get them. If it is necessary, in order to have these ships constructed with the greatest expedition, to take men from other classes of employment, to take men from other sections of the country into the sections where these ships are built, it is our imperative duty to do it. Wherever men that are trained or that can be used in connection with the building of ships can be found they ought to be gotten and taken to those places to be used in the construction of ships for the Government. While many of these contracts are let to private parties, they are for the construction of ships that the Government needs and that the Government must have.

Mr. President, on the Pacific coast the Government has requisitioned over 800,000 tons of shipping that was under construction when the war began. It has let contracts for over 700,000 tons more. We must have shipping constructed as soon as possible. We have not an ample supply of labor to carry on that work at this time; or, at any rate, when these contracts are under way it is estimated that there will be a shortage of from eighteen to twenty thousand laborers for this work alone.

Now, Mr. President, the officials of the Department of Labor, through this bureau, are in touch with various classes of labor all over the country. They know where former shipbuilding plants may have been. They are in touch with men who have had some training or some experience along the line of the construction of ships. They know this as no other department of the Government knows it. They can find these men at far less expense than the Shipping Board or any other new branch of the Government service, and I want to give them every possible facility to perform this most important function at this most important time and in this most important work.

Mr. President, when the Department of Labor was established I considered it one of the most important departments of the Government. I still think so. I have thought that Congress has been just a little bit niggardly, that Congress has been just a little bit penurious, with reference to the needs and estimates of that department in order to do the work that it was intended to do. I think we ought to be more liberal with it, but, at any rate, at this time we ought to do anything and everything that will make it most efficient in performing its function in connection with carrying on this war, and right at this time we can afford to appropriate too much money rather than too little money.

The amount involved in this amendment is $500,000. I do not know whether that is too much or whether it is too little, but I do feel that there is a most important service to be performed and that it is imperative that we should appropriate an ample sum of money in order that it may be efficiently performed. So I was prepared to vote for the $750,000, and I am prepared to vote for this $500,000, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope this amendment, offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], will not be adopted, because I think it is unnecessary. I have contributed by my vote to the establishment of the Department of Labor and to its support always, but in the condition we are in just now I do not believe we need to add anything to that which this bill carries without that amendment.

If there were a great quantity of labor seeking employment it would, of course, be an immediate necessity for us to correct that condition as far as possible, but to-day every man in the country who wants labor can find it either near at home or far away. All of the labor markets are open. It needs no incentive and it needs no appropriation in order to bring the laborers and the employers of labor together. If we were appropriating for the manufacture of something that we needed more of in times of scarcity it would be all right to do that, but we can not make men. This appropriation will not make two men where there was one before. It will not add at all to the volume of labor.

We are restricted by legislation which it has been thought wise to enact as to immigration. Now, if this means that we are to sit back supinely as employers of labor and ask the Government to bring labor to our doors, knowing that they must rob some other employer of labor to bring it to us, then we are really doing damage.

So it seems to me that with what the Labor Department has to work upon it is unnecessary to appropriate $750,000 more, to be spent largely here in Washington in hiring more clerks that ought to be doing something else. They ought to be producing something through regular productive labor. We do not need more buildings and rentals and more desks and more furniture and more clerks at the present time for the purpose proposed. It is true that we want shipping, but we also want food for the men that contribute to the shipping. We do not want to rob the farms of this country through agencies of the Government to furnish men to certain employments of the Government. Let supply and demand govern this proposition.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, before this amendment is voted upon I want to say just a word.

The committee gave very careful and full consideration to the estimate sent down in reference to this particular item. This division in the Department of Labor was created for the purpose of finding employment for men out of employment. I think the legislative bill this year carried $19,000 for the clerical force in Washington; and out of the funds of the Immigration Bureau I think they spent or had available $135,000 for the purpose of finding employment for men out of employment.

That condition in the country has changed now. There are, practically speaking, no men out of employment to-day who want jobs. There may be some men out of employment because they do not want jobs, or there may be some men out of employment because they are physically or otherwise unfit to do the work, but in the case of the capable man, physically fit, who wants to work, there is no difficulty whatever in finding work to do, in finding it himself, in having hundreds and thousands of men finding the place for him. So the purpose is to turn this division over and not find work for the unemployed, but to make it an agency to find men to fill Government places. That is the only justification for this appropriation of $750,000. It was less than $200,000 when it came here for the purpose of finding employment for idle men, but it is proposed now to spend $750,000 to employ men who are not idle.

Of course the basis of the argument to sustain this appropriation is the proposition that the Government needs men, and that it is necessary for the Congress to make this appropriation in order that we may have the men to carry on the Government work. Now, as a matter of fact, the Government is getting all the men that it needs up to the present time, because the Government is paying higher wages for men, offering more attractive positions, and it is getting the men.

The question of the Shipping Board, the Shipping Fleet Corporation, having enough money to do this work has been advanced here as an argument why this appropriation should be passed. As a matter of fact, this Congress has either appropriated or carries in the folds of this bill, which will ultimately pass, appropriations amounting to $1,090,000,000 for the Shipping Board, and $1,090,000,000 unrestricted. If they want to get men, they have a fund of $1,090,000,000 with which they can employ agents to go from one end of the United States to the other to employ all the men they need for their own service.

That is true of practically all the governmental war agencies. These appropriations are not restricted; they are unrestricted appropriations. It may not be the best way to do business in time of peace, but war exigencies have driven your committee and the departments to appropriate money in that way. The Ordnance Bureau have unrestricted funds with which they can get labor, and all the other war functions of the Government have the funds within the folds of the pending bill to do this work themselves at the present time.

Of course it is for the Senate to say. I think myself that the gentlemen who have been doing this work in the past, and I know some of them personally, are very capable men, men who are acting from a high purpose and endeavor to work efficiently; but the Committee on Appropriations would not have turned down an appropriation of $750,000 to secure men to work for the Government in this emergency unless they knew, not that they were satisfied, but they knew that there was money within the folds of this bill sufficient to secure employment in every function of the Government.

Therefore if you pass this appropriation, to a large extent you are going to duplicate the expenditure of your money. You have bureaus created doing the work that have the money to employ labor, and they are doing it now and getting the labor. Then, in addition to that, it is proposed to spend $750,000 to establish another division of the Government for the purpose of aiding in the functions that are already being properly and efficiently carried out.

I only say that in defense of the committee's position. The committee carefully heard and investigated this question and considered it from all the angles. I do not think there is a real Government purpose that can be accomplished at this time by the appropriation and expenditure of this money.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for just a few moments, rather because, being the chairman of the committee, I did not wish it to appear that I am indifferent to the expenditure of so large a sum as three-quarters of a million dollars. It has been my purpose, and I am sure it has been the purpose of every member of the Appropriations Committee, to appropriate every dollar that is necessary for the successful prosecution of the war.

It has not been six months since Congress declared war on Germany. The resolution declaring war passed on the 6th day of April. Since that time, speaking from memory, in a general way, I believe Congress has appropriated about $20,000,000,000. Twenty billion dollars have been appropriated in about five months for the prosecution of the war. No such outlay has been made by the European countries whose very life is involved in the struggle. We have appropriated and expended money with an extravagance, or at least with a liberality, that is unknown to our allies in Europe.

It is appalling to me to see the freedom with which money is being called for by our administrative departments and is being appropriated by Congress. This bill came here from the House, and it had not been here more than three days before we received over $400,000,000 of additional estimates that had not even been presented to the House. Although the House had passed the bill carrying over $7,000,000,000, I say, in less than three days we received estimates for over $400,000,000 in addition; and I do not think I hazard anything when I say there has not been a day from that time down to this moment when additional estimates have not come to us from the administrative departments of the Government.

Mr. President, I am willing to consider all the estimates, and I am determined, so far as my vote goes, to appropriate every dollar that is necessary; but the time has come for us to scrutinize most closely the extravagant—I am almost tempted to say the reckless—estimates that are pouring in on us from the administrative departments of the Government.

There is no doubt about the desire of Congress to meet all reasonable demands. There is no doubt about the fact that even when we scrutinize the estimates we can not form a very intelligent judgment about many of them. We are compelled to shut our eyes and appropriate a great deal rather than take the hazard of denying to our soldiers something that may be necessary for the defense of the country on the battle fields in France.

But it is our duty to scrutinize them as closely as we can, and that duty becomes more intense every day and every hour that the war proceeds. We have attempted in the preparation of this bill to be guided by that principle—to give every dollar that is necessary, but to scrutinize as closely as we could and not to make any useless and extravagant appropriations. We have turned down many appropriations that have been pressed upon us by Senators who thought they were wise and proper, but exercising our judgment as fairly as we could, I say we have had to turn down quite a number of them.

This appropriation of $750,000 is among that number. After careful consideration the Committee on Appropriations did not believe and do not believe now that it is essential for the successful prosecution of the war. We have tried as far as we could to hold this bill to that single purpose. We have not undertaken to meet all the things that are desirable, but we have endeavored to appropriate every dollar that is necessary for the successful prosecution of the war, and little else. There may be a very few instances when appropriations might not come within that definition, but they are to meet some peculiar and exceptional conditions that were controlling, and we had to yield to them; but they are few and far between.

It was the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations that this appropriation of $750,000 is not necessary for the successful prosecution of the war; and I have never been more certain of anything in my life than I am here to-day when I say that it would not have a particle of influence on the prosecution of the war. It is not necessary; we do not need to appropriate the $750,000 in order that the war may be successfully prosecuted. All the departments of the Government have the power to employ labor, and they have money and use agencies for the purpose of employing labor. If we are going to set up an independent department to do everything, to perform each and all the several duties that are confided to them, they had better go out of business, and we had better have a general agency to do everything that is devolved upon them by the laws of the land.

In my opinion, Mr. President, it is not necessary. We must call a halt in extravagance. We must keep within due bounds and we must not appropriate money that is not essential. We have had quite a number of deficiency bills during this session of Congress. I hope to God this is the last. If we keep on, we had better turn the whole resources of the country without anything more than three lines over to the administrative departments of the Government and let them take what they need and spend what they choose. It has come to be a perilous situation. Over $20,000,000 in five months! At the pace we are going, if the war lasts another year $50,000,000 will be required. And where is it to come from? Is our country to be impoverished for generations? Yes; if it is necessary to prosecute the war. But in God's name do not let us do it unless it is absolutely necessary. This is an item which in my judgment is not absolutely necessary. It can be dispensed with. Its loss will not be materially felt. I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as amended. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call for a division.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Not knowing his position on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I announce my general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is necessarily absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who is absent, and I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. He is absent and I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I inquire if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withhold my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and let my vote stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am informed that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] would vote in the negative on this question and I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and do vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILMAN], caused by illness. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the negative). I did not notice the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], with whom I am paired, when I voted. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Ashurst	Hollis	La Follette	Pomerene
Calder	Husting	McKellar	Reed
Culberson	Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Robinson
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Sheppard
Curtis	Kendrick	Norris	Shields

Frelinghuysen	Jones, N. Mex.	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. ROBINSON's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 15, on page 51, insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to construct or to improve existing roads outside National Army cantonment and National Guard camp reservations now in existence, to connect systems of roads constructed within such reservations with the paved streets of nearby cities or with important State or county highways, and for this purpose he is authorized to contract obligations in an amount not to exceed $5,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN. I make a point of order on the amendment. It is general legislation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN. The point of order is not debatable. I ask for the ruling of the Chair on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 8—

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. FLETCHER. Another amendment has been offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the request of the Senator from New Jersey comes too late. We have proceeded to the consideration of another amendment. Another Senator was recognized for that purpose.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That amendment has not been stated. I ask the chairman of the committee to consider the amendment. This is a very important question, and I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I am compelled to ask that the rule be enforced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled, and the Chair is satisfied with his ruling. The Senator from Florida is recognized, and the Secretary will state the amendment which has been tendered by him.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 8, insert the following:

Enlargement and reclamation of Fort Taylor, Key West, Fla.: For the acquisition of additional land, for the filling in of such parts of land so purchased and other parts of the reservation as may be necessary, and for the construction of a sea wall, Fort Taylor, Key West, Fla., $350,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to say in reference to this amendment that the language is precisely the language used in the estimate of the department. This is an important fort at Key West. The department has recommended that this appropriation be made $100,000 for the purpose of building a sea wall, $100,000 for filling in the reservation that exists now, and $150,000 for the purchase of additional land. The fort, of course, fronts on the Gulf. The reservation now is not sufficient to accommodate the men who are needed there to man the garrison.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I have just entered the Chamber and would like to inquire whether this is an appropriation for construction in some location in Florida or not? I wish to know where it is located.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is for the purchase of land, for filling in the land, and for building a sea wall at Key West.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I suspected it, but I wanted to be sure.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator's suspicions are very well founded. I make no apology for offering the amendment. The amendment has been urged before. In 1906 the War Department recommended an appropriation of $200,000 to buy land adjoining the reservation to accommodate the needs of that fort. Congress appropriated only $100,000. They spent $100,000 in the purchase of land there, but that was not enough. Naturally they could not purchase with $100,000 the land which it required $200,000 to buy there.

In 1910 the department recommended an appropriation for the purpose of acquiring the additional land which it needs. Congress has never paid any attention to it. That recommendation has been repeated. It was a need before the war began. The need has increased. The necessity exists to-day and it is imperative, according to the report of the Quartermaster General and the War Department. You need not take my word for it. Look at the record. If you want to treat it as a joke or as a matter of indifference, you can proceed to do it. I say it is a very little business to be engaged in here in these critical times to undertake to treat these matters as ludicrous or as humorous. This is serious business.

On that island there are 20,000 people connected with the mainland by an important railway. It lies close to Cuba. It lies close to the Panama Canal. It lies close to Guantanamo, the naval base of this country.

It is important from a strategic standpoint. It is important for the Navy and the Army, and it ought to be looked after as recommended by those departments. The Quartermaster General says it is imperatively needed. The coast-defense people claim the same thing. They have asserted it before.

There are to-day only 328 men at that fort, 219 Regulars and 109 militia. Seven hundred and thirty-four men are necessary to man the fort. There are the largest guns at that fort that can be found at any post in the country along the coast anywhere. The department says it is important to train men there in the use of heavy armament. I am not an expert on that subject. I am being governed by what the heads of these departments say, the men who are charged with the responsibility of successfully conducting the war. I am basing my observations on what they say. They tell me that it takes 734 men to man that fort. We have not accommodations for more than 574, and even as to those 191 are living in tents. They have not the accommodations because they have not the land. They have been asking for this land ever since 1906. Speaking for them you can intensify it, because they want to train units there to the number of 750 men. They need to train for the use of heavy armament 750 additional men. They need accommodations for 1,346 at that fort. It is imperatively required not only for the purpose of manning the fort but for the purpose of training these units in the use of heavy armament.

I realize that under the provisions of this bill certain temporary cantonments can be constructed to accommodate the units that need to be trained there, but why construct those cantonments on rented ground or reservations where they are already cramped for room?

A part of this reservation, it may be said, is unfit for use, because it is swampy and it needs to be filled in. That is one of the items in this appropriation. It is low and swampy and needs to be filled in. The reservation would be sufficient in area if it was all available, but it is not. The department proposes to add to the reservation on the side fronting the town of Key West, taking in some buildings and improvements right up to the streets and blocks in the city, so as to give room to build proper barracks and cantonments to house the men needed in the fort.

You can disregard it if you like and take the responsibility for it. I am putting it up to you to say whether you are going to let it go or not. I understand the committee say it is not a war necessity, that it can wait. I suppose it is true of almost anything, that it can wait. It is possible that this sea wall might be postponed. I would concede to let the sea wall wait and appropriate $150,000 to acquire the absolute and necessary space of ground upon which to take care of the men; that is, $150,000; and then $100,000 to fill in this reservation on these grounds. Those items are especially urgent and necessary now; they can not wait if you are going to make use of this fort. It is an old fort; it has been there for a good many years; there is nothing the matter with it in any way; it simply needs additional ground.

As I have said, I am willing to leave out the appropriation for the sea wall, if that is thought desirable, and to make the appropriation $250,000 instead of $350,000, because the sea wall can probably wait, though the sea wall is needed, because it affords protection against storms and protection to the fort and the other Government property located there. However, the department says that this land is needed in order that they may put up the barracks and afford accommodations for the men who are needed to man the fort. The present accommodations are not sufficient to provide quarters for more than 400 men. One hundred and ninety-one of the men there now are in tents on the reservation. Accommodations are needed for 1,346 men.

I appeal to the Senate to give consideration to this matter. Let it go to conference anyway. The amendment went out in the other House on a point of order. It seems to me to have been an absurd proposition, but there was some statement made over there that these barracks on the island can accommodate 600 men. They can accommodate but 328 men. That is the situation. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, of course, if the Senate wants to appropriate all the money that is needed for all purposes in this country, it has the power to do it; but the committee thought that it was its duty to keep this bill down to the purposes for which it was intended—a war emergency measure. We tried to avoid appropriations unless they were necessary for the conduct of the war. The representative of the department who came before the Committee on Appropriations told us that this appropriation had nothing to do with the war. I asked him this question:

It has no relation to the present emergency? It has nothing to do with the present war?

The witness replied:

Oh, no. It has been asked for before, and not granted.

That is what the expert from the War Department said—that it had nothing to do with the present emergency or the present war. We left it out of the bill, not because we did not think it a desirable improvement under ordinary circumstances, but we thought when we had to use $8,000,000,000 of taxes of the people for a war emergency this matter which has been waiting for years, and which the expert of the War Department stated had no relation whatever to the war, might well be left out of the bill. We left it out for that reason.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I was not present at the time the committee had the hearing, but I finally secured about two minutes' time. I know that in the recommendation for this item in the Book of Estimates there is this language used:

This estimate is submitted in accordance with instructions of the Secretary of War. The acquisition of the land, the construction of the sea wall, and the filling in of the land are imperatively necessary to prepare accommodations for the troops to be stationed at Fort Taylor, Key West, Fla.

That is the report which is signed by the war authorities.

Mr. MARTIN. I read from the testimony of the witness.

Mr. FLETCHER. The witness before the committee probably did not quite appreciate the question that was put to him, or its significance; but I know that no longer ago than this morning a representative was sent here from the War Department to tell me that unless provision of this kind were made it would be impossible for them to train the units which they wanted to train there; that otherwise it would be impossible for them to man the guns in that fort. That is what I am told, and that is the situation to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I shall offer an amendment in a minute, and I sincerely hope that no objection will be made to it and that no point of order will be raised against it. The amendment was introduced as a separate bill in the Senate; it was unanimously recommended favorably by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs; and it unanimously passed the Senate. It has had the sanction of this body, but it is impossible to get it through the other House at this session. It is an urgent and important matter. As I have stated it was a bill, and is now offered as an amendment, to authorize the President to restore Harry Graham, formerly a captain of Infantry, to his former rank in the Army.

Briefly stated, the nature of the case is that Mr. Graham was a captain in the United States Army. He entered as a private in the Spanish-American War, and he rose by his own merits to the rank of captain. He was court-martialed and discharged from the Army on some charge of using unfair means in passing an examination. He always contended that he was innocent, and a bill was introduced in the Senate in his behalf. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs examined the matter closely; a subcommittee heard evidence on it, and came to the conclusion that Mr. Graham was right. They accepted his version of the matter that he had been unjustly removed from the Army. The full committee accepted the unanimous report of the subcommittee, the full committee unanimously voted that way, and, as I have stated, the bill passed the Senate.

Now, it seems to me almost criminal to deprive the country of the services of an efficient Army officer when we so badly need trained officers. I am sure the bill will in time pass the other House; but it may be six months or a year from now. However, the war is now on and we want officers immediately. If Mr. Graham is to be restored, it ought to be done now, and not six months or a year later.

Of course, the amendment is not mandatory, but merely proposes to authorize the President, in his discretion, to restore this man to his former rank in the Army.

If there is no point of order made, I am sure that the amendment will be unanimously adopted by the Senate, and I hope that that will be the case.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I am compelled to make the point of order against the amendment, that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to have the amendment read in order to get it into the Record and let the Senator from Virginia know what he is making a point of order against.

Mr. MARTIN. I have read the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood from the statement made by the Senator from Montana what the amendment was.

Mr. MYERS. Then I accept the ruling; but I am asking unanimous consent in this connection that the amendment may be printed in the Record in order that the matter may be properly presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that that should be done, and it will be done on the direction of the Chair.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Harry Graham, formerly a captain of Infantry, a captain of Infantry, to take rank at the foot of the list of captains of Infantry; and that no back pay or allowances shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act, and there shall be no increase in the total number of captains of Infantry now authorized by law by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. PHELAN obtained the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I offer—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has been recognized.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire at this time to offer an amendment. I must say, in justice to myself and to the committee, that I brought the matter, which I consider of very great importance, to the attention of the Treasury Department last June, and the Treasury Department, I have just learned, did not formally submit it to the committee.

The amendment relates to the question of the Government assuming the payment of premiums on fidelity bonds given by collectors of internal revenue. The fact, which is eloquent, is simply that by the legislation which we have been passing, particularly during this session, the duties imposed upon the collectors of internal revenue have greatly increased, while, as a matter of fact, their compensation has diminished, because they are required to give additional bonds; and with the addition of every new bond imposed by every new piece of legislation their nominal salary is reduced.

I have in my mind a collector of internal revenue who is receiving $4,500 a year, through whose office millions and millions of dollars pass and are collected for the Government, and yet during the time of peace, when there was no income and other legislation, he enjoyed approximately his nominal salary, whereas now his salary is reduced to about $4,000 by reason of the fact that he has to pay the growing premiums upon the fidelity bonds which are required by law. Nearly all of the States and cities—I think most of the banks of the country and also industrial concerns—pay the premiums upon the fidelity bonds which are required of their employees. My amendment relates only to the collectors of internal revenue and their chief deputies, for the very reason that it is upon that branch of the Government service that the burden has most heavily fallen.

I have here a letter, which I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record, from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Newton, under date of June 11, 1917. I will read the following paragraph from the letter:

Undoubtedly the policy of requiring Federal officials to pay the premiums on fidelity bonds imposes an increasing hardship upon them because while their salaries are not increasing, the amount of Government work, their responsibilities, their disbursements, and bonds are all the time increasing with the growth of the Government's activities. In the calendar year of 1914 the premiums paid on fidelity bonds required from Government officials was $22,499.48. This was on a total of 2,274 bonds. In 1915 the premiums paid amounted to $61,141.04, and in 1916 the premiums amounted to $57,104.34.

My amendment simply provides for the addition of $75,000 for that purpose. I ask that the Secretary report the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert on page 10, after line 8, the following:

Provided further, That not more than $75,000 of the total amount appropriated herein shall be used by the Secretary of the Treasury for the payment of premiums on fidelity bonds required by law from district collectors of internal revenue and their chief deputies.

Mr. MARTIN. I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill and that it proposes an appropriation that has not been estimated for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under Rule XVI, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PHELAN. I submit the letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as intimating an estimate.

Mr. MARTIN. Of course the Senator from California does not consider that an estimate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. Does the Senator from California desire the letter published in the Record, or did he send it to the desk merely for the information of the Chair to guide the Chair in his ruling?

Mr. PHELAN. I have read the principal part of the letter, and therefore I do not ask that the remainder be published in the Record.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to propose an amendment to the bill on page 75. I could take the time of the Senate to discuss the amendment now and point out the reasons that I have for submitting it, but the chairman of the committee has informed me that he will have to make the point of order against it, and so I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss it. I ask, however, that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The SECRETARY. On page 75, after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

Indian Service: For continuing construction and enlargement of the irrigation and drainage system, increase the food supply of the country, and to make possible the utilization of the water supply provided for 40 acres of each Indian allotment on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., and such other water supply as may be available or obtainable for the irrigation of a total of 120,000 acres of allotted Indian lands on said reservation, $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the entire cost of said irrigation and drainage system shall be reimbursed to the United States under the conditions and terms of the act of May 18, 1916.

Mr. MARTIN. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to change the amount from $2,000,000 to $750,000, which is the amount recommended by the department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington desires to perfect his amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. I raise the point of order against the amendment. It is plainly out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment, I desire to call his attention and that of the Senate once more to the language of the committee amendment in the middle of page 45, and I have in mind offering a substitute for that paragraph, which lies between lines 12 and 18. The Senate will note that the paragraph to which I refer reads:

During the present emergency the appropriations for mileage for officers of the Army shall be available for the purpose of paying mileage at the statutory rates to officers of the armies of the allies of the United States who may be on duty in the various bureaus of the War Department or at other places within the continental limits of the United States for travel performed by them under competent orders.

On September 13, Mr. President, I introduced a bill which had a very similar purpose. My attention had been called by officers of the War Department to the fact that at least one of the allied Governments had agreed very generously to send some officers and enlisted men to the United States, chosen for their qualifications as instructors based upon their experience in this war, to assist in instructing the men in our cantonments and mobilization camps, but that the War Department hesitated to send for them to come—

Mr. MARTIN. I ask the Senator to send the amendment to me and let me read it. I may be willing to accept it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will send it to the desk. I have no intention of occupying the time of the Senate, but I had understood that the Senator from Virginia was not ready to accept the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. Instead of having the Secretary read the amendment I will ask the Senator a question: Does he simply propose to add to the amendment recommended by the Senate committee a provision for the pay of the enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to move to amend the committee amendment by substituting the text of the bill which I introduced on September 13, and which passed this body I think on September 14, which covers all the ground, as contrasted with the amendment of the committee which only makes allowance for mileage.

Mr. MARTIN. It makes allowance for other things. I will have to read the amendment to understand its full purport.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the committee amendment on page 45, between lines 12 and 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such regulations and in such manner as he may prescribe, to employ such portion of the appropriations made for transportation of the Army and its supplies as in his judgment may be necessary to defray the expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States during the present emergency, and that those officers and enlisted men, who may have been performing duties in this connection, be reimbursed from this appropriation for the expenditures they have already been obliged to make.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, although I have had no opportunity to consider the amendment and I do not mean to give it unqualified approval until I think more about it, it seems to me to be all right, and I am very willing for it to be adopted and to go to conference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may say, in conclusion, that the Secretary of War recommended the passage of that legislation in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs under date of September 7.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. KIRBY. Does the amendment relate only to foreign officers and men who come to this country, or does it cover also foreign officers and enlisted men with our Army on the other side? I can not tell from the reading of the amendment at the desk.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The amendment relates to officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States.

Mr. KIRBY. In this country?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it is not confined to this country.

Mr. MARTIN. The amendment can be perfected in conference if it shall prove necessary. I am willing that it be adopted and go to conference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is exactly what the Secretary of War wants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee found on page 45, between lines 12 and 18, was agreed to. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York as a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, do I understand the bill is now open to amendment generally, the committee amendments having been finished?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is open to amendment, the committee amendments having been disposed of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 53 of the bill I desire to call attention of the Senate to an item carrying $1,240,000, under the heading of "Civilian military training." The Senator from Virginia has stated—and I think the principle which he sets forth is entirely correct, as a theory at least—that this bill is for the purpose of meeting war emergencies, but this item under the heading of "Civilian military training" meets no war emergency whatever. As I read it, it is a continuation, by means of the appropriation provided, of the old-time Plattsburg civilian military training camps, not to be confused with the officers' training camps that are now being held at the city of Plattsburg, at Fort Myer, at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and at other places, but to be identified as a continuance of the old military training camps for whatever citizens of the United States may agree to attend upon those camps for a period of four or five weeks, and who at the end of that period are under no obligation whatsoever for further military service.

The training camps held at Plattsburg and elsewhere prior to 1917 were, in my judgment, of tremendous value to the country in arousing the interest of the public generally in the necessity for preparedness; but now that we are at war and straining every effort to instruct the men who are to be actually officers in the Army, and to instruct something like 1,200,000 enlisted men who are gathered in cantonments and mobilization camps, and, furthermore, in view of the fact that the shortage of officers competent to train either officer candidates or enlisted men is so very great as to be an exceedingly heavy handicap in our war preparations, it seems to me to be upon the edge of folly to attempt to hold these semiofficial, as it were, civilian military training camps, to which a man may go for four or five weeks, and be clothed and fed by the Government and given some instruction for that short period, with no further military obligation, as I understand, held over him.

In the first place, Mr. President, we have not the clothing; we have not the rifles; we have not the shoes; we have not the ammunition; and we have not the officers to do the instructing; and yet this bill carries $1,240,000 for that purpose, when every article of clothing, every rifle, every cartridge, every instructor should be devoted solely and entirely to training the Army of the United States. It was my purpose, unless the chairman of the committee could tell the Senate of a genuinely good reason for the continuance of this policy and for the appropriation of this large sum of money, to move to strike out the entire paragraph; and I make that motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves to strike out from the bill on page 53 the matter found between lines 5 and 24, inclusive.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the language used in this paragraph is the same as the language used in the act of June 13, 1915, making provision for this same purpose, although it is headed "Civilian military training." The following language was added to the language originally used in establishing Plattsburg camps:

Under such terms of enlistment and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

At the Plattsburg camps the men instructed were not enlisted men; they had a right, after the term of training, to go back home; but when the matter came up in connection with the great appropriation bill of last June words were inserted requiring them to be enlisted men.

It is true that the Secretary of War, under the rules prescribed, requires them to enlist for the purposes of the camp, and if they are selected as officers they have to remain in the service; while if they are not selected as officers, they are discharged; but the Secretary can, under rules and regulations prescribed, make the enlistment permanent if he so desires. So the young men who have been recently trained in the camps at Fort Myer and other places to become officers of the new army have been trained under the appropriation in the act of June last, and the men who are now in those training camps are being trained under the appropriation of June last. This clause in the pending bill follows the language identically of the clause under which the training in the present camps is being carried on.

The reason for this appropriation, as indicated by the Secretary of War, is that it is desired to have further training camps for officers. My understanding from the testimony is that the department will probably to a large extent limit those to go to the next training camp to enlisted men in the Army; but the Senator from New York is mistaken when he says that this item is for the purpose of carrying on the Plattsburg camps for civilian training. It is not for that purpose; it is for the purpose of furnishing officers for the Army that is now being prepared for the field, and the men in these camps are required to be enlisted.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. KIRBY. Is the Senator in possession of the regulations prescribing that that is what this appropriation is to be used for? Is there any regulation already made?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the statement; that the authorization was for that purpose. The committee was requested to insert it for the purpose of having another training camp, and, as I have said, my understanding is, although I do not state that definitely, it is proposed probably to have the next training camps largely filled by men taken from the ranks; that is, men from the enlisted force of the Army are to be sent to these training camps for officers, and not men appointed from civil life.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the Senator if he does not think it would be well to word this provision a little differently? According to the language of this appropriation it does not apply to the training of officers.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The original provision was amended by the Senate earlier in the session. The language of the original Plattsburg training-camp provision was retained in the bill of June last, with the intention of training officers for the Army under that appropriation, but the Senate changed the language so as to require the men to enlist in the United States Army. That is the only change, and that is in this provision.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think that the Senator's use of the term "enlisted" in that respect is not quite accurate. I think the Senate put in the word "enlisted" with the idea that the men should be enlisted in the camp and not in the Army.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No. As I myself took part in framing the amendment when it was added, I recall very clearly the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, you can not enlist men in the Army of the United States for only five weeks.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A man can be enlisted under such rules and regulations as the Secretary shall prescribe; and, as a matter of fact, the young men—and it was so stated before our committee—who have gone to these camps and the men who are there now occupy the status of enlisted men, except that the Secretary of War has adopted a rule that if a man is not chosen for an officer—and, of course, if the Secretary does choose a man for an officer he can not get away from the enlistment—but if he does not choose a man to become an officer he is then discharged. However, I will say to the Senator from New York that I happen to know that the men in the training camps do occupy the status of enlisted men, for I had the matter investigated technically. A young man from my section of the country, serving in the camp at Fort McPherson, near Atlanta, went to town and was accidentally run over by a street car. I made inquiry as to what his status was, because he or his family wanted to know whether or not he had a pensionable status, and I was advised that the question as to whether he was entitled to a pension under the circumstances was an indeterminate fact at this time, but that his status in the Army was that of an enlisted man. So that I am satisfied there can be no question about that, as in a case involving a pension they held that he was an enlisted man.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, of course it would be farthest from my desire to attempt to cripple the officers' training camps now being conducted; but I still believe that this language is applicable only to what might be termed the old-fashioned Plattsburg summer camp. For instance, there is nothing here which authorizes the payment of these officers $100 per month.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that that was a subsequent statute. Subsequently to the enactment of the appropriation bill of June last there was a statute passed authorizing the payment of $100 a month to them during the time of service, and that is still on the statute books.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is not to be taken out of this appropriation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Whether it comes out of that appropriation of the pay of the Army, I am not sure; but I think it comes out of the pay of the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Alabama explain this language, also? I have read it hastily, and I may be utterly mistaken. I refer to the language commencing on line 14, reciting the purposes for which this money may be used:

for such expenditures as may be deemed necessary for water, fuel, light, temporary structures, not including quarters for officers nor barracks for men, screening, and damages resulting from field exercises, and other expenses incidental to maintaining said camps.

The thing is very much mixed up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Are they not to have quarters?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To be sure. This legislation, like Topsy, just grew up. It was originally intended for the Plattsburg camp; and when the appropriation came along last June in the large bill for training officers, the department sent in an estimate along the same lines as the original wording for the Plattsburg camp, but for a larger sum, stating that they desired to train officers for the Army; and then it was that the Senate injected the language requiring them to be enlisted, but otherwise adopted the old Plattsburg language. With the exception of the change of language requiring them to enlist, the Senator from New York is correct about the language being the same as used in the Plattsburg camp legislation; but under the act of June last the appropriation was used for the training camps that are now being run, and the purpose of this appropriation is for the training camps that will come hereafter for officers in the United States Army.

I confess that the language is not as clear as it might be; but so far as the appropriation is concerned, we know the purpose of the appropriation—that it is going to carry on just exactly the same kind of training camps that we have had for the last two or three months.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, with the assurance of the Senator from Alabama that this is not to apply to what might be termed an old-fashioned Plattsburg summer camp, I withdraw my motion to strike out the paragraph; but I also desire to make a motion to strike out the word "not" at the end of line 15, and the word "nor," after the word "officers," on line 16, and to insert a comma after "officers," in order that these men will have some barracks to live in when they are gotten together.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They are provided for. The barracks have already been built and they have the barracks now. That has been provided for in other provisions of the law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How about the screening?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That has all been done. The old language is not affected, but it has been provided for at each one of these training camps. The barracks have been built, they have been screened, and they have been properly cared for, as the Senator knows himself. Of course, he has been out at Fort Myer and has seen the papers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This money will be expended in those camps.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then no part of the $1,240,000 can be used for barracks or screening or damages to property in the neighborhood?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; but that has already been done. The camps are built. These new camps will just take the place of these old forts, where the other camps have been.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a rather dangerous situation not to make any appropriations for barracks, for if one burned down we could not build another one.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the explanation made by the Senator from Alabama, but his explanation, while it may embody the intention of the department thus requesting this appropriation, is not only not borne out by the wording of the paragraph itself, but is directly contradicted by it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I stated to the Senator the reason of that. I stated to the Senator from New York that the department had originally sent down the language of the old Plattsburg camp provision, expecting to train the officers under that. The only change made by the Senate was to require them to be enlisted men, and the purpose of this language is to carry on these camps.

Mr. FALL. Yes; the purpose of it is evidently, under the language itself, to carry on the old camps, because an enlisted man is enlisted under the law, not under regulations adopted by the Secretary of War. Whether he is a voluntarily enlisted man in the Regular Army of the United States or whether he is a conscript, it is under the terms of the law. The people who are to be trained here are citizens who are to be enlisted, and, of course, voluntarily, necessarily, under rules and regulations to be adopted by the Secretary of War.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. FALL. Pardon me a moment. Let me explain my interpretation. Not only that, but under the terms of this provision itself it would preclude teaching the enlisted man at any such camp, so that you could not take the enlisted man and use one dollar of this $1,240,000 appropriation for teaching him in the training camps to be established under this paragraph. Now, to me, and I think to the Senate itself, that is clearly the construction of the paragraph; but the Senator says the paragraph does not mean what it says.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; it is not clear to me. I did not prepare the original language, nor is the committee responsible for the language that was carried in the bill heretofore. I do not agree with the Senator at all that this will exclude an enlisted man, and it is not the purpose of the department to exclude an enlisted man. It is really their purpose, as I understand, to give an opportunity in this appropriation for an enlisted man to get the training necessary to become an officer. That is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. FALL. May I ask the Senator if he knows of any provision of law which will allow the Secretary of War to enlist any enlisted man in any other service than that for which he was enlisted or conscripted under the law itself? If so, then the Secretary of War can change the law of Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; but the Secretary of War can discharge any enlisted man when he gets ready. It is entirely optional with him. He has some rules and regulations.

Mr. FALL. I was not speaking of the discharge. I spoke of the enlistment of an enlisted man and not the discharge of an enlisted man.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, of course; but these men, under the law, are enlisted like other soldiers, as soldiers of the United States Army. They occupy the status of enlisted men at these training camps. Now, the Secretary has agreed, as I understand, that although heretofore these civilians have enlisted regularly in the Army, if they are not selected as officers then they are discharged by his order, as he has a right to discharge them; and he has given them to understand in the beginning, when they go in, that if they do not pass and become officers they shall be discharged. Of course, that is according to his rules and regulations, which he can do. He has a right to discharge them; but the enlistment, as he construes it under this law that requires them to be enlisted, is the enlistment in the Regular Army.

Mr. FALL. Then the language of this provision precludes the expenditure of this money for teaching such men in these camps. Just let me read it a moment:

For the expense of maintaining, upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training—

Of whom?—

of such citizens—

Not enlisted men—of such citizens physically capable of bearing arms as may be selected under such terms of enlistment—

Not as provided by law—

and under such regulations—

Not as provided by law—

as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Clearly, to my mind, that excludes the enlisted man, enlisted under the terms of the law, from any training at this camp; and, if you propose to use this money for such training, then you must change the wording of this paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not construe the paragraph as the Senator does, and I do not construe it to mean that it excludes an enlisted man. I am sure that the War Department do not construe it in that way, or they would not have asked this appropriation on the terms they desire it.

I am free to say, as I said to the Senator from New York, that the adoption of the old Plattsburg amendment really is not apt to the appropriation that we have in hand, nor was it apt to the appropriation last June; but the purpose of the appropriation is to train citizens and enlisted men to be officers. As to the language, if the Senator has a suggestion that will improve it, it might be agreed to by the committee. I have not consulted with the chairman.

Mr. FALL. I have no desire to attempt to improve on anything that is presented by the committee further than to give them an opportunity to make the improvement themselves and carry out the purpose which they say is the purpose of the appropriation.

I therefore renew the motion of the Senator from New York to strike out the paragraph on page 53, under the head of "Civilian military training," from lines 5 to 24, inclusive. That will let it go to conference, and they can arrange it there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I merely desire to say to the Senate, as to striking out this provision, that there is now an $800,000 deficiency. Part of this item is carried to make up that $800,000 deficiency from the existing camps.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if it had not been for the explanation made by the Senator from Alabama to the Senator from New York as to the purpose of this, I should have said that it must undoubtedly have been intended, in a deficiency bill, to pay a deficiency incurred under the old appropriation for the Plattsburg training camp.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not for a deficiency in the Plattsburg training camp, but it is for a deficiency in the training camps that have been in operation this last summer.

Mr. FALL. I mean what we have known as the Plattsburg camps, whether held at Plattsburg or not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The deficiencies are for the first training camp and the second training camp; but part of it is for a future training camp.

Mr. FALL. Then it is all the more necessary—that is, from my standpoint—that the language should be changed so as to convey the meaning which is given to it by the committee or by the Senator representing the committee, because it undoubtedly does not convey any such meaning at this time. It is neither for the payment of a deficiency already incurred nor is it for any other purpose under heaven than to continue the old Plattsburg civilian training camp.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I remind the Senator from Alabama that of course there is no one on the floor of the Senate that wants to destroy this legislation; but it can be arranged in conference with proper language, and then we will legislate for what we want. I am still of the opinion, although I yielded my opinion to the Senator from Alabama, that this does not do anything, more or less, than continue the old-fashioned Plattsburg camp; and I know, from knowledge of simple English, that it forbids the use of any of this money for the building of a barrack or the placing of screens in a barrack; and if a barrack should burn down at Fort Myer you could not put it up again. Now, you do not want to do that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from New York, as far as barrack purposes are concerned, that there are other appropriations in this bill to cover that matter. This is not intended for barracks anyhow, nor for screens. All those items, if they be necessary, are carried in another appropriation, and an appropriation without limitation, that could be used for that purpose. This money is only intended to take care of the soldiers in barracks that have already been erected, that are already provided for; and there is nothing to do with the additional amount over and above the deficiency except to provide for their keep, their board, and whatever are the incidental expenses.

The committee had before it from the Quartermaster General's office a statement on the subject of attendance at officers' training camps that referred to this item, in which Gen. Sharpe, the Quartermaster General, said:

For the purpose of furnishing data for hearings on the urgent deficiency bill for the years 1917-18, about to be submitted to the Secretary of War, it is requested that this office be furnished at the earliest possible moment with information as to the attendance at the officers' training camps, listed in your circular of May 22, 1917, as follows:

Camps at Plattsburg Barracks, Madison Barracks, Fort Niagara, Fort Myer, Fort Oglethorpe, Fort McPherson, Fort Benj. Harrison, Fort Sheridan, Fort Logan H. Roots, Fort Snelling, Fort Riley, Leon Springs, Tex., Presidio of San Francisco; also the Engineer officers' training camps at Belvoir, Va., Fort Leavenworth, and Vancouver Barracks.

Showing that the department, in asking for this appropriation, clearly had no other purpose than to carry on the training camps, or a third edition of the training camps, that are now going on for officers in the United States Army. Therefore I do not think anything can be hurt by continuing this language.

As the two sets of training camps we have had heretofore have been conducted under this language, the third undoubtedly will be, although I am free to say and confess to both the Senator from New York and the Senator from New Mexico that the language is not clearly worded as to the subject for which the money is going to be used. That is because it is old language, used for a new purpose.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the object of my motion is simply that the matter may be sent back to the committee, in order that the language may be made appropriate. I have no desire to interfere with the object the committee desires to accomplish.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment which relates to a matter which has very often had the approval of the membership of this body. It relates to the claim of Mrs. Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., to compensation for her outlay of time and money and supplies in connection with the construction of the Corbett tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project in Wyoming.

I will state in just a very few words why I offer this amendment, and I hope it will not be objected to. This body has many times, and sometimes unanimously, gone on record in favor of all of Mrs. Macdonald's claims to compensation for her time and labor here in getting legislation through, as well as her claim for money paid out and services rendered; but the House never would agree to it, and Mrs. Macdonald has never yet been compensated in any just degree for the just claim that she holds on account of the construction of this tunnel. She never has been compensated to the extent of one penny for her thousands of dollars of time and labor in getting the legislation through Congress for the benefit of other claimants. She has really received no compensation of any consequence. The little compensation she has received is a small percentage of the claims for money that is due her.

A few weeks ago, when another bill was before the Senate, I offered an amendment to require the Secretary of the Treasury to pro rate, out of the allowance of claims paid by him, sufficient money to compensate Mrs. Macdonald for her time and efforts in getting legislation through Congress for the benefit of other claimants. The Senate adopted that amendment unanimously. There was not a word against it. It was subject to a point of order, too, if it had been made, but it was not made. The Senators, in the goodness of their hearts, recognized the justice of the amendment, and no objection was made to it, and it was adopted unanimously; but it proved to be too late, because just a few days before that time the last of the money had been paid out by the Secretary of the Treasury, and there was no money there to pro rate. I did not know it at the time I offered the amendment, but I found it out the next day.

Mrs. Macdonald had a large number of claims filed with the Secretary of the Interior, in the sum of nearly $10,000, which were disallowed because they were claims which were held originally by other claimants, and which had been assigned for bona fide consideration to Mrs. Macdonald, and she was unable within the time allowed by law to get the affidavits of these claimants to the verity of the claims, to the fact that they were true and just claims, and therefore could not come within the rules laid down by the Secretary of the Interior, and more than $9,000 of just claims held by Mrs. Macdonald were rejected on account of that technical ruling. Now, this is an amendment requiring the Secretary of the Interior to allow those claims on the proof now filed with the department, without further proof.

I ask that the amendment may be read first, and I hope no point of order will be made against it. There never has been a point of order made against any of Mrs. Macdonald's amendments on the floor, and I hope it will not be made this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. —. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby ordered to audit and approve, on the proof now before him, without further evidence, and the Treasury Department and its officials are directed to pay to Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., claims heretofore filed by her in the Interior Department in the sum of $9,819 on account of work and labor done and performed, supplies furnished, and other services rendered in connection with the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project in the State of Wyoming.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, of course I do not know what the real claims of Mrs. Macdonald are, or what rights she really has; but I never have known a claim case to be passed through Congress without some consideration. This is purely a claim against the Government. It has not been considered by the Appropriations Committee. It has not gone to the Committee on Claims. It is clearly new legislation, and there is no estimate for it, so that it is against the rules.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement on that subject, if the Senator will yield to me for a minute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. It has been passed upon by the Department and by committees many times in substantially the same form, but not this identical paper.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I mean this particular claim.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I beg the Senator's pardon; it has been. This particular claim has been allowed by the Senate. It has passed the Senate with its approval a number of times, but it has not been paid because Mrs. Macdonald at the time was not able to produce the technical proof required to get affidavits from men in Alaska and Asia and Europe. It has been recommended by committees and passed by the Senate before.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator wants to pass it, then, without the proof that was required. That makes it a new claim. I understand from the Senator's statement that there was certain proof required.

Mr. MYERS. That may be the case as to a part only; but as to many of these claims I think the affidavits have now been procured, but they were procured too late.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure the Senator would not expect the Senate to pass on a matter of this importance, where the claimant heretofore had failed to make the proof required, and pay a $9,000 claim, without looking into the proof or considering the merits of the claim. It is not in order on this bill, of course, because it is against the rules of the Senate to put a claim on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MYERS. It has been considered many times on its merits. Of course it comes under the rule—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For that reason I am constrained to make the point of order that it is a claim, and it is an attempt to pass it on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to offer another amendment relating to the same matter in a different shape, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by inserting a new section to read as follows:

SEC. —. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,819 to Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., on account of claims held by her for work and labor performed, supplies furnished, and other services rendered in connection with the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project, in the State of Wyoming.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I make the same point of order for the same reason.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to that section contained on page 51, between lines 10 and 15, and I wish to state my reason for doing so.

At the present time, I understand, a serious state of affairs exists in and about many of the other camp sites and cantonments throughout the country. The question of transportation to these cantonments during the coming winter means a great deal for their success.

There is a cantonment at Wrightstown, N. J., in my State, which was located there by the War Department, in a remote rural district, miles away from any city. It is in a section where it is impossible for the State to build roads, because under the taxation system in operation the State pays only a portion, 33 per cent, and the county and local district or township pay 67 per cent.

This is a farming district; and to compel the local taxpayers to build the  $\frac{1}{2}$  miles of dirt roads necessary to furnish a military outlet to the nearest improved or stone road, would be a burden that that section could not bear and should not be compelled to bear.

In addition to that, there is a division or embarkation camp at Tenafly, N. J. This is located 15 miles from the ferry, the point of embarkation, at Hoboken. These roads are in very poor repair. They run through many municipalities, and it is impossible at this time for the localities in question to reconstruct and improve those highways.

Through this camp will pass hundreds of thousands of men of the National Guard and National Army who are to go to Europe. These camps must be provisioned and equipped, and the transportation must be by means of quartermasters' trucks.

This matter has been brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, and he has written a letter, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. I understand a similar letter has been sent to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, but he states to me that he has not received it. I ask that the letter to the Speaker be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEPTEMBER 24, 1917.

THE SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: It is desired to call attention to a most serious condition existing in connection with the National Army cantonments and National Guard camps, namely, the improvement of roads exterior to these cantonments and camps. The roads connecting the camp system of roads either with the paved streets of near-by cities or with important State or county highways are in many cases simply dirt roads and will, in bad weather, be practically impassable for heavy truck traffic necessary in the supply and maintenance of the cantonments and camps.

In many cases the cantonments and camps are located at a considerable distance from cities or main highways, and it is essential to the proper operation of the cantonments and camps and to assist in a considerable degree in supplying them that the roads connecting with roads therein be placed in a proper condition to adequately meet necessary military traffic requirements.

It is considered an urgent military necessity that authority of the Congress be given to improve and maintain these roads during the occupancy of the cantonments and camps by troops of the United States, and it is therefore recommended that the following provision be incorporated in the urgent deficiency bill now pending in the Senate:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to construct or to improve existing roads outside National Army cantonments and National Guard reservations to connect systems of roads constructed within such reservations with the paved streets of near-by cities or with important State or county highways, and for this purpose he is authorized to contract obligations in an amount not to exceed $5,000,000."

Similar letter has been addressed to the chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I offered that amendment and it was ruled out on a point of order. It is extremely necessary that something be done in regard to these roads. Fifty thousand of the young men of New Jersey and adjacent States will be at the Wrightstown encampment, and unless there is some provision made it practically means that there will be a breakdown there the coming winter.

Under the circumstances some power should be given, and at once, whereby the War Department may correct existing conditions before the coming winter. Therefore I offer the following amendment to the present section providing for the repair of roads. It changes in no way the appropriation, but permits the Secretary of War to use a part of that appropriation for these roads and new construction. I make this offer solely from a sense of public duty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, line 14, after the word "at" insert the words "or adjacent to," so as to read: improvement of ground at or adjacent to military posts and stations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTIN. I make a point of order on it. This is a very large appropriation. I never heard of it until it was brought in here to-day. No estimate has been sent to the committee—not a line or a word. I do not know what this money will be used for. I know there is ample provision for building this road if they want to build it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no money appropriated by the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. I thought it asked for $5,000,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; I simply ask that a part of the appropriation be used for the building of roads outside of the cantonments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is proposed to read "improvement of ground at or adjacent to military posts and stations."

Mr. MARTIN. That takes money that is necessary for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not subject to a point of order. There is not any doubt about that. It can be voted down, but can not go out on a point of order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This appropriation is made for the purpose of building roads within the cantonments. My amendment enlarges the scope of the authority of the Secretary of War and allows him with that money appropriated to build roads outside of cantonments where it is necessary. It is a very important amendment, and I hope the chairman will accept it.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I think it is one of the most vicious and dangerous amendments that I have ever known to be offered, but it is not subject to a point of order, and the Senate can do what it pleases and let it go to conference. I am sure it will not live there five minutes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator from Virginia has evidence from the Secretary of War in the letter that has just been read that it is necessary.

Mr. MARTIN. I think the Secretary of War ought to have informed the committee at an earlier day. He has never informed it up to this hour. The Senator produces a letter here that never has been received by me or by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate on this subject.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The War Department made a statement to me over the phone to-day that a copy of that letter was sent to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN. Then they should have called up and found to whom it was delivered. I never received it, and the clerk of the committee says it never came to the committee room.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that Mr. DENISON had been appointed in the place of Mr. GARLAND on the committee of conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution authorizing the Clerk to strike out the word "it" on page 21, line 20, of the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "him," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 23) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4960) entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the word "it" on page 21, line 20, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "him."

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DRAINAGE IN NEW MEXICO AND TEXAS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, in the sundry civil appropriation act of June 12, 1917, there was a sum appropriated for the purpose of continuing the work of reclamation and drainage on the irrigation project in New Mexico and Texas. Attached to that appropriation was a proviso which reads as follows:

That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for drainage except in irrigation districts formed under State laws and upon the execution of agreements for the repayment to the United States of all project investments.

It has been impracticable to form the irrigation districts for the purpose of complying with that proviso and it is necessary that the drainage work which has been going on there shall continue. For that purpose I introduced a joint resolution providing that that may be done notwithstanding the proviso attached to the previous appropriation act. This joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and was reported yesterday with the approval of that committee and it appears upon the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be taken up for present consideration. It is the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend funds in New Mexico and Texas for drainage purposes.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to provide for immediate and necessary drainage of lands in the Rio Grande reclamation project, New Mexico and Texas, the provisions of the sundry civil act, approved June 12, 1917, so far as applicable to said project, are hereby modified and amended so as to authorize and permit the Secretary of the Interior to expend not exceeding $15,000 in drainage work upon that portion of the project located within the State of New Mexico pending the formation of an irrigation district covering the lands within New Mexico under this project, and to expend upon that portion of the project located within the State of Texas such amount, within the limit of available appropriations, as the existing irrigation district may obligate itself to repay.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the unfinished business, the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is before the Senate as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, September 26, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate September 25, 1917.

ASSISTANT TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES.

William J. McGee, of San Francisco, Cal., to be assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, Cal. (Reappointment.)

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSIONER.

John Franklin Fort, of New Jersey, to be a member of the Federal Trade Commission for a term of seven years. (Reappointment.)

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

John O. Davis, of San Francisco, Cal., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 28, with headquarters at San Francisco, Cal. (Reappointment.)

NAVAL OFFICER OF CUSTOMS.

James H. Barry, of San Francisco, Cal., to be naval officer of customs in customs collection district No. 28, with headquarters at San Francisco, Cal. (Reappointment.)

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 25, 1917.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

John B. Elliott to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 27, with headquarters at Los Angeles, Cal.

POSTMASTER.

ILLINOIS.

Eber E. Bassett, West McHenry.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, September 25, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. W. J. Darby, of Evansville, Ind., offered the following prayer:

Thou, who art the giver of all good, with infinite wisdom Thou has guided Thy people through the ages to the fulfillment of their appointed mission. Believing that we have a mission as a people, we rejoice that Thou hast been our guide and helper thus far. Unto Thee we commit all our ways, that we may be divinely guided and abundantly prospered in the things whereunto Thou hast appointed us; and to this end fill these, Thy servants, with wisdom from on high, that they may do the things that are best and that will work out the purposes of Thine own will among the nations of the earth. Grant unto us Thy continual guidance and grace and blessing in all the work of our lives as a people and as individuals, through Him who has loved us and saved us by His infinite grace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS SALINE RIVER, ARK.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5431) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Saline River, at or near Suttons Ferry, Ark., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5431), of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire how long this will take?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. About half a minute.

Mr. GILLET. Reserving the right to object, has this been reported by a committee?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Yes; the bill was reported on the 26th of July last, but owing to the recesses that we have had the bill could not come up until now.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Bradley, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Saline River, at or near Suttons Ferry in the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 15, township 13 south, range 9 west, of the fifth principal meridian on the Warren and Monticello Road, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled, "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "contract" and insert "construct."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Saline River at or near Suttons Ferry, Ark."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5335 An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., authorized by an act approved January 28, 1916.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2477. An act to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2878. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Waccamaw River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CURRY of California, has been ill for 10 days. I ask an indefinite leave of absence on his behalf.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. CURRY, on account of sickness. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

EXPLANATION OF A VOTE.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, on the roll call yesterday on amending the rules I voted "yea." I was paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. LEA, and would have withdrawn my vote of "yea" and answered "Present" had it not been for the fact that Mr. LEA, if he had been present, would have voted "yea."

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve a point of order on amendment No. 127.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on amendment No. 127.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve a point of order on the same amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York also reserves a point of order on amendment No. 127.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DEWALT. Is it in order to reserve a point of order on a particular section or amendment in the bill? Must the conference report not stand or fall together? Must not the gentlemen reserve a point of order as to the entire conference report? It can not be segregated.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that the conference report shall be considered and passed on as a whole.

Mr. DEWALT. That is the point that I am making.

The SPEAKER. But each gentleman has a right to reserve points of order.

Mr. DEWALT. But they make the point of order and reserve it as to one specific thing.

The SPEAKER. If the point of order which they raise to one specific thing is sustained, the whole conference report fails. You can not take it piecemeal.

Mr. DEWALT. That is what I am aiming at—not to have it taken piecemeal.

The SPEAKER. If a point of order against any one part of the conference report is sustained, the whole thing fails. Whether it would be better form for them to say that they reserve a point of order against the conference report or against the particular thing is another matter.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against the conference report in its entirety.

The SPEAKER. That covers all points.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York having reserved the point of order as to the conference report, must he not state what his point of order is?

The SPEAKER. We want to have the report read first, so that gentlemen will know what they are doing.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my reservation on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to do it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement on the part of the managers of the House may be read in lieu of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right, if it is not too late, that does not affect the point of order in any way?

The SPEAKER. Not a bit in the world.

The statement was read.

The conference report and statement of the House conferees are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 155).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 68, 128, and 129.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 13, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 66, 69, 71, 72, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 103, 104, 106, 107, 108, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 117, 119, 121, 122, 124, 125, and 126, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the last line of the Senate amendment strike out "and private bankers"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful—

"(a) For any person in the United States, except with the license of the President, granted to such person, or to the enemy or ally of enemy, as provided in this act, to trade, or attempt to trade, either directly or indirectly, with, to, or from, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, any other person, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that such other person is an enemy or ally of enemy, or is conducting or taking part in such trade, directly or indirectly, for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an enemy or ally of enemy.

"(b) For any person, except with the license of the President, to transport or attempt to transport into or from the United States, or for any owner, master, or other person in charge of a vessel of American registry to transport or attempt to transport from any place to any other place, any subject or citizen of an enemy or ally of enemy nation, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person transported or attempted to be transported is such subject or citizen.

"(c) For any person (other than a person in the service of the United States Government or of the Government of any nation, except that of an enemy or ally of enemy nation, and other than such persons or classes of persons as may be exempted hereunder by the President, or by such person as he may direct), to send, or take out of, or bring into, or attempt to send, or take out of, or bring into the United States, any letter or other writing or tangible form of communication, except in the regular course of the mail; and it shall be unlawful for any person to send, take, or transmit, or attempt to send, take, or transmit out of the United States, any letter or other writing, book, map, plan, or other paper, picture, or any telegram, cablegram, or wireless message, or other form of communication intended for or to be delivered, directly or indirectly, to an enemy or ally of enemy: Provided, however, That any person may send, take, or transmit out of the United States anything herein forbidden if he shall first submit the same to the President, or to such officer as the President may direct, and shall obtain the license or consent of the President, under such rules and regulations, and with such exemptions, as shall be prescribed by the President.

"(d) Whenever, during the present war, the President shall deem that the public safety demands it, he may cause to be censored under such rules and regulations as he may from time to time establish, communications by mail, cable, radio, or other means of transmission passing between the United States and any foreign country he may from time to time specify, or which may be carried by any vessel or other means of transportation touching at any port, place, or territory of the United States and bound to or from any foreign country. Any person who willfully evades or attempts to evade the submission of any such communication to such censorship or willfully uses or attempts to use any code or other device for the purpose of concealing from such censorship the intended meaning of such communication shall be punished as provided in section 16 of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 4, in line 2 of the Senate amendment, strike out the word "other"; on page 4, in line 9 of the Senate amendment, after the word "otherwise" insert a comma; on page 4, in line 10 of the Senate amendment, after the word "time" insert a comma; on page 4, in line 13 of the Senate amendment, after the word "company" insert a comma, and in the same line after the word "enemy" where it occurs the second time insert a comma; on page 4, in line 15 of the Senate amendment, after the words "United States" strike out the comma and insert a semicolon; on page 5, in line 4 of the Senate amendment, strike out the words "or treaty"; in line 7 strike out the words "or treaty"; and in line 9 strike out the words "or treaty"; in line 11, after the word "act" insert a comma; in line 12 after the word "President" insert a comma; and in line 13 after the word "enemy" strike out the comma; on page 6, in line 5 of the Senate amendment after the word "company" insert a comma; in line 6 after the word "granted" insert a comma; in line 13 after the word "act" insert a comma; in line 14 after the word "President" insert a comma, and in line 22 strike out "fifteen" and insert the word "sixteen"; on page 7, in line 9 of the Senate amendment, strike out "fifteen" and insert the word "sixteen"; in line 10 after the word "or" insert "to any"; in line 18 after the word "company" insert a comma; and in line 20 after the word "pay" strike out the comma; on page 8, in line 5 of the Senate amendment after the word "custodian" insert the words "thereafter provided for"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 7, line 3 of the bill, after the word "That" insert "during the present war"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the proposed amendment after the word "Whenever" insert "during the present war"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 9, line 21, of the proposed amendment as engrossed, strike out "suspension" and insert "postponement"; on page 9, after line 23, of the proposed amendment strike out the balance of the amendment and insert the following:

"(b) That the President may investigate, regulate, or prohibit, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, by means of licenses or otherwise, any transactions in foreign exchange, export or ear-markings of gold or silver coin or bullion or currency, transfers of credit in any form (other than credits relating solely to transactions to be executed wholly within the United States), and transfers of evidences of indebtedness or of the ownership of property between the United States and any foreign country, whether enemy, ally of enemy or otherwise, or between residents of one or more foreign countries, by any person within the United States; and he may require any such person engaged in any such transaction to furnish, under oath, complete information relative thereto, including the production of any books of account, contracts, letters or other papers, in connection therewith in the custody or control of such person, either before or after such transaction is completed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 7, line 25 of the bill, after the word "President," strike out the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 9, line 13 of the bill, after the word "President," strike out the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 13, in line 11 of the amendment, after the word "Act," insert a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 11, in line 19 of the bill, after the word "President," strike out the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 10, page 19 of the amendment, strike out the words "the laws of the State" and insert "law"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 19, in line 10 of the bill, after the word "may," insert "when duly authorized by the President"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 19, in line 21 of the bill, strike out "who desires" and insert "desiring"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 20, line 4 of the bill, after the word "as," strike out "it" and insert the word "he"; on the same page, in line 5 of the bill, after the word "provided," strike out "it" and insert the word "he"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "including the fixing of prices of articles and products necessary to the health of the military and naval forces of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 21, line 23 of the bill, after the word "expiration," strike out "the" and insert "one." In the same line, after the word "thereafter," insert a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 24, in line 16 of the bill, after the word "President," strike out the comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 25, in line 3 of the bill, strike out the word "such"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 109: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6, page 29 of the amendment, strike out the words "in like manner as though he were the absolute owner thereof" and insert the following: "if and when necessary to prevent waste and protect such property and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 115: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 26, in lines 19 and 20 of the bill, strike out the words "(or such other officer as the President shall direct)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 116: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 26, in line 23 of the bill, insert the following: "during the present war."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 118: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 27, line 23 of the bill, insert the following: "during the present war."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 120: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the first line of the amendment proposed by the Senate, after the word "shall," insert "during the present war."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 123: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 28, line 23, of the bill, after the word "Stationery," insert the following: "Typewriters and exchanges thereof"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 127: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 19. That 10 days after the approval of this act and until the end of the war, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association, to print, publish, or circulate, or cause to be printed, published, or circulated in any foreign language, any news item, editorial or other printed matter, respecting the Government of the United States, or of any nation engaged in the present war, its policies, international relations, the state or conduct of the war, or any matter relating thereto: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any print, newspaper, or publication where the publisher or distributor thereof, on or before offering the same for mailing, or in any manner distributing it to the public, has filed with the postmaster at the place of publication, in the form of an affidavit, a true and complete translation of the entire article containing such matter proposed to be published in such print, newspaper, or publication, and has caused to be printed, in plain type in the English language, at the head of each such item, editorial, or other matter, on each copy of such print, newspaper, or publication, the words 'True translation filed with the postmaster at _____ on _____ (naming the post office where the translation was filed, and the date of filing thereof), as required by the act of _____ (here giving the date of this act).'

"Any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this section is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association, to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same, or to transport, carry or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage, approved June 15, 1917: Provided further, That upon evidence satisfactory to him that any print, newspaper, or publication, printed in a foreign language may be printed, published, and distributed free from the foregoing restrictions and conditions without detriment to the United States in the conduct of the present war, the President may cause to be issued to the printers or publishers of such print, newspaper, or publication, a permit to print, publish, and circulate the issue or issues of their print, newspaper, or publication, free from such restrictions and requirements, such permits to be subject to revocation at his discretion. And the Postmaster General shall cause copies of all such permits and revocations of permits to be furnished to the postmaster of the post office serving the place from which the print, newspaper, or publication, granted the permit is to emanate. All matter printed, published and distributed under permits shall bear at the head thereof in plain type in the English language, the words, 'Published and distributed under permit authorized by the act of _____ (here giving date of this act), on file at the post office of _____ (giving name of office).'

"Any person who shall make an affidavit containing any false statement in connection with the translation provided for in this act shall be guilty of the crime of perjury and subject to the punishment provided therefor by section 125 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States,' and any person, firm, corporation, or association, violating any other requirement of this act shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars ($500), or by imprisonment of not more than one year, or, in the discretion of the court, may be both fined and imprisoned."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in relation to the action agreed upon by the conference committee as to the amendments of the Senate:

On amendment No. 1: This amendment strikes out (1) all of the House provision relating to enemy insurance companies, and (2) also the definition of enemy or ally of enemy found in the proviso of the amendment; but the former portion of the amendment finds a substitute in Senate amendment No. 11, hereafter to be noticed.

On amendments Nos. 2, 3, 5, and 6: More clearly define the meaning of the word "citizen" used in the bill.

On amendment No. 4: Strikes out the same definition referred to in amendment No. 1.

On amendment No. 7: Defines more clearly what is meant by the words "end of the war."

On amendment No. 8: The definition of the words "bank or banks" is accepted by the House conferees, with an amendment excluding therefrom "private bankers."

On amendment No. 9: Enlarges the definition of "trading" to include "loans or extension of credits."

On amendment No. 10: The House recedes from its disagreement and agrees to the same with an amendment, which—

(a) Includes, comprehensively, such persons as are prohibited from trading as defined in the act, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person with whom the trade is carried on is an enemy or ally of enemy, except with license. It should be especially noted that the President is generally substituted by the Senate amendments to perform directly or indirectly the functions assigned to the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Federal Trade Commission, and other officers.

(b) This is substantially an enlargement of the House provision forbidding any person to transport or attempt to transport into or from the United States, or for any owner, master, or other person in charge of a vessel of American registry to transport or attempt to transport from any place to any other place any subject or citizen of an enemy or ally of enemy with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that such person transported or attempted to be transported is such subject or citizen.

(c) This paragraph contains two substantive provisions: (1) It is unlawful to send or attempt to send, take out, or bring into the United States any letter, writing, or other tangible form of communication except in the regular course of the mail, or to send, take, or transmit or attempt to send, take, or transmit out of the United States any letter or other writing, book, map, plan, or other paper, picture, or telegram, cablegram, or wireless message, or any other form of communication intended to be delivered directly or indirectly to the enemy or ally of enemy: Provided, however, That the act or acts forbidden may be performed if first submitted to the President, or to such officers as he may direct, and license or consent therefor obtained.

(d) This paragraph gives the President authority during the war, when the public safety demands it, to censor, under appropriate rules and regulations, communications by mail, cable, radio, or other means of transmission between the United States and any foreign country which he may from time to time specify, or which may be carried by vessel or other means of transportation, and prescribing pains and penalties for violations thereof. It should be noted, however, that the censorship does not extend in this paragraph in any way to newspapers or other publications.

On amendments Nos. 11, 12, 14, 15, and 17: Are formal in character and tend to clarify the text.

On amendments Nos. 13 and 16: Substitute the President for the Secretary of Commerce.

On amendment No. 18: (a) Elaborates the provisions of the House bill containing prohibitions against trade save and except in pursuance of licenses, and gives the President full authority over the same.

(b) This amendment contains a new subject matter, giving the President authority to investigate, regulate, or prohibit, under appropriate rules and regulations, transactions in foreign exchange, export, or earmarkings of coin, or bullion, or currency, and generally the subject of transfers of indebtedness or ownership of property between the United States and any foreign country whether enemy or neutral, or between residents of one or more foreign countries and any person in the United States; and the President may require any information in relation thereto, including the production of books, accounts, letters, etc.

On amendments Nos. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31: Are unimportant save for the substitution of the President for the Secretary of Commerce, and with the exception of No. 24, which forbids acceptance of voluntary official service.

On amendments Nos. 32 and 33: Fix February 3, 1917, as the date from which disclosures and reports of enemy stock, shares, and property shall be made.

On amendment No. 34: Empowers the President to extend the time in which such reports shall be made, as well as the inquisitorial jurisdiction of the alien property custodian and the President.

On amendment No. 35: Enlarges the scope of the invalidity of conveyances, transfers, assignments, etc., contemplated by subsection b, section 7, of the House bill.

On amendment No. 37: Expands and carries into detail the provisions of subsection c, section 7, of the House bill.

On amendments Nos. 36, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, and 51: Do not materially change the House bill save to bring the amended sections into conformity with the text of the bill.

On amendment No. 52: Is receded from and concurred in with an amendment which elaborates section 8 of the House bill, and perhaps consummates the purpose designed by the original text.

On amendments Nos. 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, and 60: Revise the interpleader rights of interested parties as provided in section 9 of the House bill.

On amendment No. 61: Is wholly stricken out.

On amendments Nos. 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 70, 71, and 72: Are mainly necessary for uniformity and clarity.

On amendment No. 68: Is wholly receded from by the Senate.

On amendment No. 73: Concurred in by the House conferees with an amendment confining the fixing of prices to articles and products necessary to the health of the Army and Navy or the successful prosecution of war.

On amendment No. 74: Provides that licenses shall be defense to suits in relation to the subject matter of such licenses.

On amendments Nos. 76 to 98, inclusive: Are necessitated by reason of the changes heretofore referred to, and to preserve unity and clarity in the text.

On amendment No. 99: Authorizes the President to keep secret and withhold publication of inventions or patents until the end of the war if the publication of such inventions may assist the enemy or endanger the successful prosecution of the war.

On amendment No. 100: Authorizes the President to place an embargo upon all imports into the United States, in pursuance of proclamation and under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving no preference, however, to the ports of one State over those of another.

On amendments Nos. 101 to 108, inclusive: Relate to the substitution of the President for the heads of the departments, and punctuation and slight verbal changes necessary for the continuity of the text.

On amendment No. 109: Deals with the powers to be exercised by the alien property custodian, and the duty of corporations, associations, companies, and trustees within the United States to transfer shares and certificates upon their books to the alien property custodian upon his demand, and under certain conditions.

On amendments Nos. 110 to 119, inclusive: Are formal in character and intended to perfect the text. The same may be said of any other amendments not specifically noted in this statement.

On amendment No. 120: Requires the collector of customs to report to the President the amount of gold or silver coin, or bullion, or other monies contained in any cargo for export, the purpose being to safeguard the delivery of such property directly or indirectly to an enemy or ally of enemy.

On amendments Nos. 121 and 122: Increase the sum of appropriation from $250,000 to $450,000.

On amendment No. 124: Strikes out section 15 of the House bill relating to penal provisions, inserting in lieu thereof section 16, covering the same subject more in detail.

On amendments Nos. 125 and 126: Relate to renumbering sections.

On amendment No. 127: This amendment is in relation to printing, publishing, or circulating in any foreign language matter respecting the Government of the United States, etc.

Its provisions are operative 10 days after the approval of this act and until the end of the war, during which time it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to print, publish, or circulate, or cause to be printed, published, or circulated, in any foreign language, news items, editorials, or other printed matter respecting the Government of the United States, or of any nation engaged in the present war, or their policies, international relations, state or conduct of the war, or any matter relating thereto. This section shall not apply where the publisher or distributor, on or before mailing or distributing the article, has filed with the postmaster at the place of publication a true and complete translation of the entire article, as provided more in detail in the amendment.

Any print, newspaper, or publication which does not conform to the requirement as to translation, etc., makes the matter nonmailable, and it becomes unlawful not only to mail but to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute such matter.

But the President is authorized to issue permits for such publications, which, however, are subject to revocation.

On amendments Nos. 128 and 129: Are receded from by the Senate conferees.

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] will state his point of order.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I will make an effort to adhere strictly to the parliamentary issue and not digress into a discussion of the merits of the proposition. I contend that the House conferees have exceeded their authority and have violated the rules of the House by consenting to Senate amendment No. 127 in the form in which it is presented to the House.

The SPEAKER. Now, the Chair would like to ask in what manner did the House conferees violate the rules of the House?

Mr. LONDON. That is what I intend to prove.

The SPEAKER. All right.

Mr. LONDON. It is a well-settled rule that the conferees can not go beyond the scope of the bill as it passed either House, that they can not assume to legislate, that they must confine themselves to the subject matter in difference between the two Houses. Now, the subject matter in difference between the two Houses, so far as amendment 127 is concerned, was the following: The Senate added an amendment, a new section, section 19, which provided:

SEC. 19. That during the pendency of the present state of war and until peace shall be concluded and the fact declared by proclamation of the President it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or association to print or publish, or cause to be printed or published in the German language any comments respecting the Government of the United States, or of any nation with which Germany is at war, its policies, international relations, the state or conduct of the war, or of any matter relating thereto, without printing or publishing in a column parallel to such matter a true and complete translation of the same in the English language.

Any print or publication in the German language which does not conform to the provisions of this section shall not be admitted to the mails, and it shall be unlawful for any person to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same.

Then it provides a penalty for a violation of this section. Now, the House conferees have agreed to amendment No. 127, with an amendment so that the entire section has been changed in scope and in character. Instead of the section applying to publications in the German language, the language of the country with which we are at war, the section is made applicable to all languages except English, so that it will strike every newspaper published in every language except the English language. Section 127, or amendment 127, as agreed to by the conferees, provides that it shall be unlawful to distribute any publication published in a language other than English, again extending the operation of the original amendment 127 so that it changes it not quantitatively but qualitatively and in substance. It changes the entire character of the section. Furthermore, the way section 19 reads now it provides that it shall be unlawful, after a publication has been excluded by the Postmaster General under the espionage law—that is, a publication in the English language—that it shall be unlawful to deliver such a publication, to transport it from place to place, to circulate it, in other words, to distribute it otherwise than by mail, thereby adding a section to the espionage law modifying the espionage law, which was not before the House and which was not before the conferees. The House conferees thus disregarded the rules of the House in three essential respects. There is nothing in the bill as it passed the House relating to publications in the German language, but on the theory that they had the right to deal with the Senate amendment which provided for certain regulations relating to publications in the language of the enemy country, they had the right to deal with this section and consent to it, but they have no right to extend the operation of that section to languages other than the language of the enemy country, and they had no right to prohibit the circulation or distribution of those publications; and the third and most important point I am raising is they had no right to add a section to the espionage law prohibiting the circulation and distribution of printed matter after the Postmaster General has excluded it from the mail. Mind you, not after a court decree, not after it had been declared by a court of competent jurisdiction that the law has been violated, not after an indictment has been brought against the person. The mere administrative act of the Postmaster General or a clerk in the Postmaster General's office makes it a crime to distribute and circulate certain publications if this section 19 is to become law. And it is on these grounds that I contend that the conferees have exceeded their authority, that they have assumed the functions of legislators outside of the legislation which was before them. They have attempted to add a section to the penal code; they have attempted to modify existing law—the espionage act—which was not properly before the conferees. I contend, therefore, that my point of order should be sustained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Now, this criminal section that the gentleman complains about is not in the Senate amendment?

Mr. LONDON. No. That is just the point.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the gentleman will read on the top of page 53, he will find it is in the Senate amendment in the very words of the two sets of conferees.

Mr. LONDON. Section 53 prohibits it—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Pardon me. The gentleman does not seem to understand the Speaker's inquiry.

Mr. LONDON. I think I do.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He asked you if the criminal provision was in the original Senate amendment. You said it was not.

Mr. LONDON. That was not the Speaker's question. It so happens that I can understand the Speaker. He asked me whether the criminal section that was added to 127 was in the original Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. I asked you if the criminal statute complained of is in the Senate amendment.

Mr. LONDON. Exactly. There was nothing in the Senate amendment which would make it a crime to distribute publications after they had been excluded from the mail by the Postmaster General. There was no reference to the espionage act or any attempt to modify it in any way. That is the point I am making. There was a provision in the original Senate amendment which made it a misdemeanor to circulate newspapers in the German language unless the publication was accompanied by an English translation. That was all there was in the Senate amendment as it emerged from the Senate originally.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] wish to be heard?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not unless the Speaker desires to hear me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better make up his mind about that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, at the suggestion of the Speaker I will ask his attention for a moment or two.

The amendment put upon the House bill by the Senate, found in section 19, page 52, was aimed at one great, substantive object. It was intended to prevent hostile comments upon our Government, its home policy, its foreign policy, whereby its efficiency in the conduct of the war would be impaired, and the respect and loyalty of the citizens of America would be diminished. That is the general object of this section. This is the paramount purpose of the section. But the hostile criticisms were confined to German newspapers by the Senate amendment and the conferees extended the prohibition to papers in any and all foreign languages.

The gentleman from New York contends that the action of the conferees is qualitative. In my judgment the converse is the case. It is quantitative pure and simple, I hold, to enlarge the inhibition from the German to any other foreign-language paper.

Second, to repeat, the chief object of the whole amendment is to prevent hostile and seditious criticisms, to prevent disloyal expressions, to prevent the stirring up of a propaganda in America that tends to give aid and comfort to the enemy and destroy American institutions. That is the general purpose. So the Senate amendment makes comments of that character nonmailable. But the conferees went further, we will assume for argument. The conferees adhered to the quantitative theory and added another quantity to it, namely, prevention of the distribution of this hostile matter not only by the mails but by any other instrumentality. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we are not to be half loyal and half disloyal. We would prevent not only access to the mails of such offending publications in foreign languages, but the Senate amendment and the conferees amendment would declare such matter nondistributable by any other means.

What further matter, if you please? Any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage. The same identical general subject matter that was in the minds of the drafters of the original Senate amendment. Now, what is that? It is found in section 2 of title 12 of the espionage act:

Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States is hereby declared to be nonmailable.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. In a moment. That sort of matter is declared to be nonmailable in the espionage act. The Senate amendment declares it to be nondistributable. Why not? We embrace another method of distribution. Why prohibit the mails to carry this disloyal, treasonable language and yet turn it over to individuals or other agencies to be carried into the minds and hearts of the people of this country? [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. The Senate, as I understand, dealt with the subject of transportation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. By mail and otherwise.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir; communication. Why is it not within the power of the conferees to enlarge upon it?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am contending for that now. As I suggested to the gentleman from New York, it is a mere matter of quantity, a mere matter of degree in the same general process. I maintain that if it is legitimate to forbid mail transportation, it is likewise legitimate to forbid express companies to transport the same offensive matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that at the bottom of page 52 the Senate amendment specifically prevents the transportation in any form of printed matter that does not conform to this amendment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That relates to the German language. But I submit to the Speaker that there can be no question that if we can forbid the transportation of such matter in the German language we can also forbid it in another language.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman why?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is not a matter of principle but of detail, dealing with the same subject matter, an addition of like matter to like matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but that is exactly what the Speaker has to pass upon in passing upon the competency of the conference report. It is a matter of detail.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I submit with great deference that that is a field that the Speaker will enter upon with exceeding reluctance.

The SPEAKER. Suppose we do enter upon it with reluctance?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Permit me to complete my sentence. Every time the Speaker undertakes to decide what is within the province of the conferees and what is not he necessarily exercises a legislative function.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman that for a hundred years—for 105 years—Speakers have decided upon conference reports to see whether they come within the rules or not. That is the only function the Speaker has with respect to conference reports.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Hinds' Precedents states this:

It is only in later years that Speakers have assumed the authority of determining whether or not the managers of a conference have transcended their powers.

The SPEAKER. Where is that citation?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Volume 5, section 6414 and section 6416.

The SPEAKER. It does not make any difference what Hinds' Precedents says. On the 28th day of June, 1812, Henry Clay knocked a conference report out and laid down the limit of the conference report. All the Speakers have followed it since, and the only thing for the Speaker to pass upon in this or any other conference report is to see whether it comes within those lines that have been laid down by the greatest Speakers this House has ever had and followed by all the rest of the Speakers, big and little. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will not enter into the field of parliamentary history with the Speaker. I simply submit it to the judgment of the Speaker that if there is an amendment prohibiting the publication of offending language in one foreign language, it is germane and competent to prohibit such matter in another foreign language. It appears to me, if I may so say with great deference, to be so obvious as to be almost axiomatic.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Would it not be as legitimate to deal with the spoken word as well as the printed word? The gentleman says the subject matter of the bill is to suppress seditious utterances. Does it make any difference in principle whether it is printed or spoken?

Mr. MONTAGUE. We are dealing with written language.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then it would be possible for this conference committee to have brought in a report which would have forbidden seditious spoken utterances under the scope of their authority?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not now dealing with moot questions; I must deal with what is before the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the gentleman to hold that the conferees would have the power, in view of the King amendment, limited only to papers published in the German language, to include not only foreign-language papers but English-language papers, so as to extend provisions of the espionage act under its provision which the House of Representatives rejected on a vote of this House? Have the conferees power to that extent that they can, on their own volition, include English-language papers under the provision of the espionage act after the House itself rejected it?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It did not reject it in the act now under consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the House had the privilege of voting directly upon it in the espionage act it did reject it; and I ask the gentleman now the direct question whether or not he contends that the conferees would have the power to include English language papers under the purview of this provision?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman is now dealing with the merits of another bill, and not with the merits of the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am now dealing directly with the merits of the point of order as to the extent of the power of the conferees to include English as well as foreign-language papers.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the conferees had the right to deal with all languages. If they had the right to deal with one language, they had the right to deal with all languages. There is no wide divergence; there is no dissimilarity in principle. There is dissimilarity only in the form of the language. And again I would answer the gentleman from Wisconsin: What are we dealing with in this espionage act?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONTAGUE. One moment. What are we dealing with in this espionage act? We are simply prohibiting the distribution of a class of matter already embraced in the Senate amendment. Written matter, published matter, printed matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or resistance to the laws of the United States. Such matter is "declared to be nonmailable." Is it possible that any Member of this House should desire that that matter should be only nonmailable, but should be distributed otherwise than through the instrumentality of the mails?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the fact that under the rules of the House—it is not a matter affecting the merits of the question now—but under the rules of the House it has been repeatedly held that if an amendment was offered to a single subject on the floor of the House it would be a violation of the rules of the House and subject to a point of order; but if offered to more than two subjects, other subjects could be added under the rules. Now, the action taken by the conferees, if offered in the House on the floor by a Member to the bill, would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Only if the Speaker ruled that they were not germane.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; not at all. It is not permissible under the rules of the House to add, even if germane, other items to one item.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is perfectly permissible in the consideration of a bill prohibiting publications in the German language to add the Austrian or Turkish or any other language.

Mr. MADDEN. If offered to a bill while pending in the House, it would not be permissible, and therefore it would be beyond the jurisdiction of the conferees to do the thing in conference which they would not be allowed to do on the floor of the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will pardon me, what is done on the floor of the House and what is done on the floor of the Senate are different things. It might not be subject to a point of order in the House. When it becomes legislative matter by addition in the Senate, it then comes within the jurisdiction of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. I agree that if the Senate offered an amendment which would be repugnant to the rules of the House we would not have the right to make a point of order against that amendment when it reached the House. But this did not get in in the Senate. It went in in conference, by the action of the House conferees, the servants of the House, and they could not do any more than what the House itself could do, and would have no greater jurisdiction than the House; and consequently I think that they overstepped their jurisdiction when they increased the scope of this language.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me right there?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will. I did not intend to occupy the floor so long.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that gentlemen will discuss this fully, because he wants this thing argued out.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest at this point a text for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] to discuss in this connection. As I understand the rule of parliamentary law which is invoked here to sustain this point of order, it is that the conferees must confine themselves to differences between the two Houses.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Nobody disputes that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then on this question of germaneness the lady from Montana [Miss RANKIN] has just handed me a very pertinent citation in the notes of Mr. Hinds to Jefferson's Manual:

The managers of a conference must confine themselves to the differences committed to them, and may not include subjects not within the disagreements, even though germane to a question in issue.

That seems to dispose of the argument of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] on this question of germaneness.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that that particular clause had not escaped my attention. I have a memorandum of it under my hand, but I do not think it militates in any way against the argument which I have submitted to the Speaker.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This cites Fifth Hinds' Precedents and gives the different sections. It is found on page 233 of the House Manual.

The SPEAKER. What section is referred to?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, sections 6417, 6418, 6407, 6408, and 6419, the last citation being the one relating to the question of germaneness.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming desire to argue the question?

Mr. MONDELL. Briefly, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Proceed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] in defending the conference report has confined himself almost exclusively to one criticism of the report on which the point of order was predicated, to wit, the question as to whether a provision relating to a certain class of newspapers may be enlarged in conference to include a much larger class of newspapers, and practically all newspapers. In the House there was no reference to any newspapers of any sort in this connection. The Senate legislated on the subject of German newspapers. The conferees seek to legislate on the subject of all newspapers, including those published in English. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] argues that the conferees have the power and authority to do that. I believe he is in error. The provision would have been subject to a point of order if presented as an amendment in the House. It is subject to a like objection as presented by the conferees. But there is another very important point raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], and that is that the conferees seek to legislate on a subject not touched upon or affected by the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Now, what is that subject?

Mr. BUTLER. That is the most important of all.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the prohibition of the transmission in any way, by express or otherwise, of prints, articles, or publications denied the use of the mails by certain provisions of the espionage act.

The SPEAKER. The trouble is that down at the bottom of page 52 of the bill, does not the Senate amendment involve that particular subject?

Mr. MONDELL. The Senate amendment does seek to prevent the distribution of German newspapers which do not have parallel columns in English and in German of articles dealing with certain subjects; but the act thus made unlawful is an entirely separate and distinct thing from the violation of the provisions of another act having to do with an entirely different matter.

The intent of the Senate amendment was to prevent the publication in the language of our enemy of statements that might be objectionable or otherwise without giving the public an opportunity to judge by having those statements set forth in the language that practically all our people can read. That was the only thought in the minds of the Senate. That is what the Senate proposed to do. That is what the Senate did. The House has not legislated on that subject at all and has not touched it. Now the conferees assume that they may make a different provision with regard to these publications. I think the conferees had the authority to do that. Instead of providing for parallel columns, the conferees provide that the editor shall file with the postmaster a translation of the article before it is published. They undoubtedly have the power to do that.

But the conferees went beyond that and prohibited the transportation of papers published in English, and then, departing entirely from what was in the minds of the Senate, and what was provided for in the Senate amendment, the conferees proceeded to legislate relative to the transmission of printed and other matter relating to an entirely different subject, and printed in English or any other language.

So far as the merits of the question are concerned, Mr. Speaker, I realize that we may perhaps agree as to the wisdom of what the conferees attempted to do; but, as the Speaker has well said, the only question is, Have the conferees exceeded their authority? Have they attempted to legislate outside of the field in which the two Houses have legislated, hence have exceeded their authority?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of the Speaker to what, in my judgment, is the crux of this whole matter. The Speaker, in interrupting the gentleman from Wyoming a moment ago, mentioned the concluding lines—21 to 24—of the bill on page 52, as the bill came from the Senate and before it went to conference. I will read them:

Any print or publication in the German language which does not conform to the provisions of this section shall not be admitted to the mails, and it shall be unlawful for any person to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same.

Those four lines, being the last paragraph on page 52, relate exclusively to publications in the German language and to their distribution. That was the way in which the bill came to us from the Senate. That was the provision to which the House disagreed. It disagreed to those four lines.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Does it not also relate only to the publication of papers in the German language where they have failed to publish their editorials with the translation in parallel columns?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; the paragraph relates exclusively to publications in the German language which do not conform to the provisions of this section. Now, I will read it once more:

Any print or publication in the German language which does not conform to the provisions of this section shall not be admitted to the mails, and it shall be unlawful for any person to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same.

This paragraph refers only to prints or publications in the German language, and it was this paragraph to which the House disagreed before it consented to a conference.

Now, the conferees have done two things; first, they have enlarged the provision so as to include not only publications in the German language, but also those in any other language, and if the Speaker will turn to page 7 of the conference report, about the middle of the page, he will find that they have done this in the following language:

Any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this section is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same—

And so forth.

This part of the conference report changes or enlarges the scope of the bill as it came from the Senate so as to make it include publications in any foreign language, makes certain of these publications nonmailable, and provides that it shall be "unlawful for any person to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same." That does not, in substance, differ from the four lines of the bill as it came from the Senate except that it now includes publications in any foreign language instead of only those in the German language. But the conferees did another thing, and again exceeded their jurisdiction when they reported a provision declaring that it shall be unlawful to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the espionage act of June 15, 1917. That is wholly a new provision relating to an act not before the conference.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The amendment 127, section 19, which we are now discussing, was written into the bill in the Senate and is a new section and involves new subject matter?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The House disagreed to the Senate amendments, did it not?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; but the gentleman is slightly in error—

Mr. ALEXANDER. Did not the House disagree to all the Senate amendments and agree to a conference?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Did not the conferees have a right to consider that entire subject matter?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But not under the usage of the House to add wholly new matter. In replying to the gentleman from Missouri, I will reply also to the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], which received so much applause on the floor. The gentleman from Virginia pleaded for legislation by conference committees. But experience amply demonstrates that conference committees should be strictly prohibited from considering subjects not committed to them. Every two years, on the 4th of March, a Congress expires by limitation. The Speaker knows that time after time conference reports have been held up until a day or two before final adjournment while the conferees were in secret session, no Member of the Senate, no Member of the House, no person in the Press Gallery, no person except those in the secret session knowing what would be brought forth. The committee comes out in the hurried hours of the closing session and sometimes we are compelled to accept their report or not pass the appropriations needed to maintain the Government.

Mr. ALEXANDER. But the gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; I do. We should not permit any violation of the practice which limits conferees to the differences between the two Houses. We do not want them to go into secret session, hold the bill as long as they please, and then report proposed legislation on a subject not committed to them.

I can answer the gentleman from Missouri by inviting his attention to language which shows that the conferees exceeded their authority. They report a provision making it unlawful to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute "any matter which is made nonmailable by the espionage act." In other words they propose to amend an act with which they had nothing to do. They propose that matter which the espionage act prohibits from being carried in the mails shall not be carried in any manner, for some of this matter is neither printed nor published.

The SPEAKER. That is in the Senate amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all; that only relates to papers published in the German language, and their transportation, distribution, and so forth.

The SPEAKER. One of the points in dispute is whether we have got to confine the conferees to papers published in the German language; whether the other languages can come in or not. That is one point. The Chair understands that the Senate amendment prohibits any kind of circulation for anything inimical in papers published in the German language. The only question left, unless there is some other objection to the report, is whether the conferees had the right to lug in papers in other languages.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If they had a right to bring in publications in other languages and make them nonmailable, they nevertheless had no right to amend the espionage law, an entirely separate act which includes not only publications in all languages but also other things which are neither prints nor publications in any language.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to confine my remarks entirely to this point of order and in no way to transgress the rules of the House by referring to the merits of the bill. I recognize, even with my limited experience in parliamentary law in this body, that the rule quoted by the gentleman from Wisconsin is entirely apropos. But there is a rule also laid down in the Precedents, which reads as follows:

Whilst the managers may perfect by germane amendments provisions submitted to them, they may not, under later practice, go beyond the differences of the two Houses in so doing.

I quote this from volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents, sections 6409 and 6413. In order to approach this subject, at least to my mind, logically, we must first determine what were the points of difference between the House and the Senate. The Senate introduced an entirely new section, which is here numbered amendment No. 127, known otherwise as section 19. When the bill came over from the Senate the House did what? It disagreed to that amendment. Therefore it follows clearly, and beyond all peradventure of doubt, that the point of difference between the House and the Senate was this amendment No. 127. Applying this rule that I have just spoken of, to wit, that whilst the managers may perfect by germane amendments provisions submitted to them they may not under later practice go beyond the differences of the two Houses in so doing; the question then confronts us, Did they go beyond the difference? What was the difference? Repeating what I have said, the difference was the introduction of this new section. The House disagreed to the introduction of that new section, and then what followed? Upon the disagreement there was a conference. When the conferees met then what followed? Then this subject of difference was taken up, this section 19, amendment No. 127. That being the point of difference, then what followed? The House insisted upon its disagreement, but finally concurred in the amendment with an amendment, and what was that amendment?

In other words, they adopted the section introduced by the Senate and added thereto, what? They added thereto a prohibition in regard to any foreign language and broadened the scope of the section. Further than that, they included in the prohibition, what? Anything that was prohibited under the provisions of the espionage act. Did they go beyond the points of difference between the two Houses? I think, with due deference to the opinion of the gentlemen who have argued against this proposition, and with deference to the Speaker's opinion, for which I shall always have the greatest respect, that I can show clearly that they did not transcend their powers and that they did not go beyond the point of difference which was then in dispute. How do I propose to prove it? First, the subject matter in section 19 was for printing or publishing or causing to be printed or published in the German language any seditious matter, or any matter in regard to the policies of the Government or the State or the conduct of the war, or any matter relating thereto. What, then, was the purpose of the section? In other words, what was the gravamen of the legislation? The gravamen, the meat of the legislation, was the prohibition of the publication of seditious matter, either by printing or in any other way. That being the meat of the matter, and the point of difference being raised between the House and the Senate as to whether or not the section should be included at all—because the House had disagreed to the inclusion of the section—the whole subject matter was open in the conference. What was the subject matter? The subject matter was the dissemination of this matter by any means whatever, because the whole matter was thrown open by the disagreement of the House to concur in the Senate amendment and by the proposition to amend section 19 by the subject matter introduced by the House in the conference. Is that true? Following the provision in regard to the German language, as the Speaker has well said, you find, on lines 21, 22, and 23, that any print or publication in the German language which does not conform to the provisions of the section shall not be admitted to the mails, and further—and it shall be unlawful for any person to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same.

Pardon me if I repeat what I have said, because I desire to emphasize this point, that the disagreement occurred upon the introduction of a new section by the Senate and the House refusing to concur. Then the House in conference, by the action of its conferees, agreed in part to the Senate amendment, but substitutes new matter by including other foreign languages instead of just the German language, and including also matters which are forbidden under the espionage act, and I hold it as a matter of law and as a matter of clear reasoning, under the rule, that while we may not transcend our powers, that we may amend by germane matters in regard to points of difference, and that we were within our rights and within our powers when we introduced the new matter, always providing that the matter was germane. Is it germane? When we speak of the gravamen of the section we say it is the prohibition of the dissemination and publication of seditious matter in any way.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. In just a moment, after I finish this, and then I shall be glad to answer any question that I am capable of answering.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to ask the gentleman a question in respect to the statement that he has just made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield at this time. If, then, my premise is correct, that the point of difference was this section, and if the further portion of the premise is also correct, that there being this point of difference the whole subject matter, to wit, the dissemination of this information, was before the conferees, then I take it as a matter of clear reasoning, following this precedent the conferees had a right to extend the powers of the section and that they were simply doing what? They were simply amplifying and enlarging the prohibition. They were not restricting the prohibition. They were amplifying and enlarging the prohibition by extending it from the German language to any other foreign language.

As to the other point, the conferees also inserted this, "that there should not be any transportation of any matter which was prohibited by the provisions of the espionage act."

Now, were the provisions of the espionage act germane to this subject? Then the query follows, as a matter of argument, What are the provisions of the espionage act? The provisions of that act in reference to this subject are as follows—

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman say about the espionage act having anything to do with this?

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to enforce upon the Speaker's attention this: That while this section would be just as valid without any reference to the espionage act, it does no harm to have the espionage act mentioned, because the subject referred to in the espionage act is the very same subject referred to in this section, and therefore germane.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the act there?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes, sir; and I want to quote from it.

Title XII, section 2:

Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind, containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, is hereby declared to be nonmailable.

Now, what are the provisions of this section 19? The provisions we have incorporated in conference are these:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation—

The SPEAKER. Where is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. DEWALT. I am reading from the bottom of page 6 of the report and at the top of page 7, the annotation covering section 19:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to print, publish, or circulate, or cause to be printed, published, or circulated, in any foreign language, any news item, editorial, or other printed matter.

Now, following are the words of the espionage act:

Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind, containing any matter advocating or urging treason.

Following are the words in this section:

Any news item, editorial, or other printed matter respecting the Government of the United States, or of any nation engaged in the present war, its policies, international relations, the state or conduct of the war, or any matter relating thereto.

That is the provision in the section. Now, afterwards, in the middle of page 7 of the report, you will notice:

Any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this section is hereby declared to be nonmailable.

The following are the provisions relating to the espionage act:

And it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, association, to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same, or to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage, approved June 15, 1917.

Now, to epitomize, Mr. Speaker, I take the ground that under these citations that I have referred to, to wit, that we have the privilege and power to perfect by germane amendment anything that is submitted to us, but we may not go beyond the points of difference of the two Houses, that this section 19 was the point of difference between the two Houses, and when the Senate introduced a new matter we refused to accept it and went into conference upon the whole subject, and it made germane what? It made germane the subject of the publication and dissemination of traitorous and seditious matter. That being so, I take it as a matter of clear reasoning that we were within our rights, and that in this the conferees did not transcend their power. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, two questions present themselves for consideration by the Speaker as to whether this report is in order. The first is whether the conferees transcended their power by including other than German-printed newspapers, namely, foreign-language papers; and, second, whether they transcended their power by extending the scope of the espionage act. Permit me at the outset to take decided issue with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] that this so-called King amendment as brought over to the House related to the printing of seditious matters. Mr. Speaker, read the King amendment, section 19, as closely as you will, and you will find that it did only one thing. It did not prohibit the printing of seditious matter. There is not a line in it, from line 10, page 52, to line 5, on page 53, that prohibits the printing of any seditious matter. What does it do? It merely requires newspapers printed in the German language—and I ask the gentleman or anyone in the House to contradict this statement—it requires newspapers printed in the German language when they contain matter commenting on the war, its policies, international relations, or any matter relating thereto, to print in parallel columns an English translation. If it had in parallel columns a translation then that paper, no matter how seditious the articles might be, it would not come within the purview of the criminal provision of this section.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. So that the purpose of the law was not, as interpreted by the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to suppress sedition, but was to deal with language?

Mr. STAFFORD. Its purpose is obvious, and no one can gainsay that it was to require a disclosure to the Post Office Department as to the character of articles which were being published in German-printed papers. You can read it as closely as you will, you can comb it as closely as you will with a fine-toothed comb, and you will not find that it relates in any way to preventing the printing of seditious matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having passed that phase to one side, I take up for consideration the question of whether the conferees have power, in view of the fact—

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to continue to the end of my argument, and I decline to yield.

That the amendment was limited only to papers printed in the German language, whether they have power to include all foreign-language papers. Mr. Speaker, it has been held as recently as the food-conservation bill in this House that in a bill providing for supervision of food, fuel, and feed, reported by the Agricultural Committee, it was not in order to add by amendment in the House cotton, iron, and other commodities.

The SPEAKER. Now, was that in the House or in the conference report?

Mr. STAFFORD. That was in the House.

You will not hold for one minute that on questions of germaneness, if the House would not be permitted to pass upon kindred subjects, that the conferees have greater latitude to pass upon extraneous questions than the House itself has.

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House do not apply to a conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the rules of the House do apply, under the decisions of the House, that the conferees are limited to germane amendments.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the holding of the occupant of the chair, when the food-conservation bill was under consideration, was that even though they brought in matters relating to three subjects, namely, food, fuel, and feed, it was not germane to include iron, steel, shoes, and other commodities.

The SPEAKER. That was in the House, was it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. That was in the House.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair has held that half a dozen times when the bill was in the House, but this bill was not up in the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. The holdings uniformly are that the conferees are limited to germane amendments, and "germane amendments" applies, in my opinion, in a more restricted sense to the conferees than to the action of the House when amendments are proposed. Because we have no power now, if we reject the conference report, to amend it, except by a germane amendment to the original Senate amendment, whereas in the House, when we are debating how extensive the bill shall be, we should have greater latitude, so far as germaneness is concerned, than the conferees have when passing upon this question.

But passing now from that point—and I am not arguing the merits, because naturally, Mr. Speaker, if I argued the merits I would argue that all foreign-language papers should be included, and not the German papers singled out, but I am not arguing that; but passing from that point, here is one question that I do not think the Speaker grasps as fully as my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], tried to present; that is, extending the powers of the espionage act by excluding not only from the mail all publications set forth in section 1 and section 2 of that act, but absolutely prohibiting their circulation entirely by any means at all.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. After I have concluded my remarks I will be glad to yield.

Mr. ADAMSON. I may forget it by that time.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has a very happy memory and he will not forget it.

Mr. Speaker, emphasis has been laid on the fact that in the King amendment the German-printed papers which did not print parallel columns in English would not only be prohibited from the mails but would be prohibited from being transported by any means at all. The Speaker is acquainted with that language, and I wish to especially direct his attention to this phraseology as found on page 7 of the conference report. If the conferees had stopped in their recommendation in the second paragraph, at the end of the word "same," which follows almost identically the language of the Senate amendment—I will read that language—then no objection could be made.

The SPEAKER. Where is that?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will read it, Mr. Speaker. It is on page 7, the first paragraph.

Any print—

And you will notice the language follows very substantially the last paragraph on page 52 of the bill down to the word "same"—

Any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this section is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same.

That is the language, substantially, of the last paragraph of the King amendment as found on page 52. But here is the covert purpose of the conferees in the language that follows, which transgresses their authority—and mark you:

Or to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage approved June 15, 1917.

Why, Mr. Speaker, that language does not refer to the exclusion by all methods of conveyance of those publications that are referred to in this amendment. That has a much broader extent and involves, what? It extends the scope of the espionage act. The espionage act was not under consideration by the conferees in this conference. That extends the espionage act so that any English-printed newspaper would not only be prohibited from the use of the mails, as the espionage act provides, but they would be denied all means of conveyance.

Does anyone claim that the conferees had the power to extend the purview and scope of the espionage act? What was the espionage act? I have it here. Title XII, section 1, forbids matter only from transportation in the mails:

Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, book, or other publication, matter, or thing—

I am going to read it in full, Mr. Speaker—of any kind, in violation of any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employee of the dead-letter office, duly authorized thereto, or other person, upon a search warrant authorized by law, to open any letter not addressed to himself.

That limits the matter to the use of the mails. But this provision, this clause I call the Speaker's attention to, says:

Or to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage approved June 15, 1917.

That extends the power so that not only it is not mailable, but it is not able to be conveyed or transported. That is the great addition to this bill, whereby they seek to extend the provisions of the espionage act so that the matter referred to is not only nonmailable but is not allowed to be conveyed at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman this question: Is there substantial difference between the language in the espionage act and the paragraph from the end of page 52—

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER (continuing). Except that the espionage act referred entirely to the mails and this part of amendment 127, the last paragraph on page 52, extends it to every other method of transportation known to man?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if my colleague will permit, the Speaker has just asked my colleague from Wisconsin if there is any substantial difference between the espionage act and the paragraph at the end of page 52 of the bill as it came from the Senate. There is, in my judgment, Mr. Speaker, a vital difference. The espionage act provides, among other things, that certain photographs, engravings, and pictures shall not be carried in the mails. But the paragraph on page 52 relates only to printed publications; that is, publications in a language. Now, pictures, photographs, and engravings are not printed or published in any language.

The SPEAKER. I do not suppose that a photograph has any language special to itself.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment. That is new legislation. And the conferees further exceeded their jurisdiction when they incorporated in their report the language next following that which I last read. It is as follows, and provides that it shall be unlawful "to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage, approved June 15, 1917." That is absolutely new matter. A photograph is not in any language. A picture is not printed in any language. An engraving is not printed in any language. And yet this conference report provides that the espionage act, which forbade the carrying of certain photographs, pictures, or engravings in the mails, shall be amended.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], if my colleague [Mr. STAFFORD] will permit me a moment, said that the two Houses disagreed on one subject. That is true, but he did not correctly state the subject. The House, when it disagreed to the last four lines of the bill, as it came from the Senate, had nothing in mind except publications in the German language. It disagreed to these four lines. Grant for the sake of the argument that the conferees could extend it so as to include publications in any language, yet the conferees could not rightfully say that the House had in mind any thought of amending the bill so as to include objects not printed in any language. Indeed, not printed at all. It is new legislation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read section 1 of the espionage act. Section 2 is limited exclusively to the prohibition of the transmission of these matters through the mails.

Mr. Speaker, if this language to which I am now directing attention was left out of the conference report, these matters covered by this report, namely, newspapers printed in foreign languages, would not only be forbidden from the mails if they did not conform to the requirements but they would be absolutely excluded from all character of transportation. But, Mr. Speaker, this clause to which I direct your attention is for one purpose, and for one purpose alone, and that is not to keep from transportation the character of matter that is covered by this amendment when printed in a foreign language, but it is to extend the provisions of the espionage act so that the matters designated in sections 1 and 2 of Title XII may not only be nonmailable but prohibited from transportation of any kind. That is the one purpose. They sought to extend the purposes of the espionage act.

Why, under that clause, Mr. Speaker, they go beyond extending the King amendment to newspapers printed in foreign languages, and extend it to all newspapers, because the espionage act is not restricted to publications alone in foreign languages. It includes all languages, and that is the vice of this conference report.

Granted that they had authority to extend it to all newspapers printed in foreign languages, they did not have the authority to extend the purpose of the espionage act so as not only to deprive the character of the matter excluded by the espionage act from the use of the mails, but from all other methods of conveyance. That can not be considered as having been in disagreement or as having been under proper consideration in any way by the conferees of the two Houses.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand the gentleman's position, the conferees did not have jurisdiction to make this agreement. The gentleman will concede, I take it, that if the bill was for the first time under consideration in the House this amendment would have been germane?

Mr. STAFFORD. Absolutely not. The gentleman could not have been following the argument, else he would not hold, after his long years of service in the Chair and his long experience, that on a bill relating only to newspapers printed in foreign languages we had the right to include an amendment amending the espionage act, which related to all character of publications, letters, and postal cards, by prohibiting them from all character of transportation.

Mr. CANNON. I can conceive how it might have been germane in the House as an original proposition to have agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment; and still in conference—

Mr. STAFFORD. Go to the extent they have done?

Mr. CANNON. I think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, the former Speaker confirms the argument that I made previously, that in the House we have a greater latitude, so far as germane amendments are concerned, than the conferees have.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman says "the former Speaker." That does not make it any more binding and it does not shed any light on it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman had eight years of experience.

Mr. BUTLER. He is entirely within his own precedents.

Mr. CANNON. After all, the gentleman must recollect that when I was Speaker I had for clerk at the Speaker's table the best parliamentarian on earth. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is undoubtedly right.

Mr. STAFFORD. I differ with the former Speaker that even in the House an amendment extending the scope of the espionage act, which is purposed here and which was not in any wise under consideration in the original Senate amendment, would have been considered for one moment. Neither have the conferees the power to legislate on a subject that was in no wise before them for consideration. They usurped power, the initiative as to which would have to be first presented formally in either House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will bear with me for just a moment, I want to emphasize one thought, and that is the wide difference between the acts and the articles dealt with and legislated on by the Senate amendment and those referred to in part by the legislation as presented by the conferees, that part being in the following language:

or to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which was made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage—

And so forth.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] erroneously, apparently through failure to read carefully the language of the Senate amendment, stated that the gravamen of the Senate amendment was a prohibition against the publication of seditious utterances. There is nothing of the sort in the Senate amendment at all. The Senate amendment is not a prohibition of any kind, except a prohibition against doing a thing unless it is done in a certain way. The Senate amendment prohibits the publication in the German language of the most patriotic utterances that it is possible for men to pen unless at the same time there be in a parallel column a translation in English of the statements so made. It is not aimed against sedition. There is no reference to sedition. There is no reference to improper language, harmful language, injurious language. The reference is to statements of any sort or kind referring to the President, the Government, or the nations at war, unless wide and general publicity is given to those utterances by an English translation in a parallel column. That is what the Senate intended. The Senate was seeking publicity, seeking to have all statements made in foreign papers printed so that all those who read and understand English might know just what was said. Let me emphasize again that this applied as well to the most patriotic, hopeful, and helpful utterances which might be printed, as to those that might be objectionable.

The conferees have assumed to legislate touching an entirely different and dissimilar matter. What is that? Touching the dissemination and transmission of those articles and publications that are denied the use of the mails in the espionage act. What are they? Photographs, printed matter, sketches, statements relative to fortifications, or containing information that might be useful to the enemy—a thousand and one things to which the Congress deemed it wise to deny the use of the mails. They are articles not treated of in the Senate amendment, not thought of in connection with the Senate amendment, the transmission of which through the mails in any form, not in a particular form, is prohibited.

I am not arguing that the proposition presented by the conferees might not be wise as a matter of legislation if it were properly presented to the House. But that is not the question. The question is whether we shall have legislation by conferees, contrary to the rules; whether the Congress itself, the House and the Senate, shall pass upon these matters or a conference committee.

The SPEAKER. The practice of the House, ever since the 23d day of June, 1812, has been that the Speaker has a right to declare a conference report bad if the conferees transcend the powers granted to them. Gov. Montague cited a footnote by Mr. Hinds. I agree with what Mr. Speaker CANNON has said, that Mr. Hinds knew more about parliamentary law than anybody else that ever lived, perhaps. Mr. Hinds said in that footnote that it is only in the later days that Speakers have passed on this question of whether the conferees have exceeded their powers or not. But in that same footnote Mr. Hinds refers to section 6407 and 6409 of the Precedents; and lo and behold, section 6407 is the very section in which Henry Clay knocked out a conference report because the conferees had exceeded their authority. That was done a good while ago. Surely that was not in the later days. So far as I have been able to find out, Henry Clay was the first Speaker of the House who gave any consistency to the rules and practices of the House. Anyhow, he is more frequently quoted than any of the others.

Of course, it is a very serious proposition for the Speaker to knock out a conference report on a big bill. I have done it half a dozen times since I have been Speaker, and once a couple of days before the end of a short session; but in that case four points of order were raised. One of them was that one proposition of the conferees was unconstitutional. Of course I had nothing to do with that. The Speaker does not pass on the constitutionality of laws or bills. But two others were so grave that I could not with any self-respect or sense of duty to the House let them go through.

The tendency of conferees has been, is, and always will be, to reach out and do things that they have no business to do. Macaulay said that Sir Robert Walpole was "avaricious of power." That is a fine phrase, and it applies to everybody on the face of the earth as well as to Sir Robert Walpole. So much for that.

The ordinary rules and precedents of the House have not a thing to do with a conference report. If I had been in the chair—which I would not have been because it would have been in the Committee of the Whole—if the question had come to me in the House whether an amendment could be offered to section 19 taking in all the newspapers in addition to the German newspapers, I would have unhesitatingly ruled it out of order. Speaker CANNON ruled out such amendments, Speaker Carlisle did it, and everybody else who has ever passed on the question has done it. I have done it three or four times. I know once the House was considering a bill to prevent gambling in cotton on the exchanges, and some gentleman arose and offered an amendment extending that prohibition to wheat, corn, and so forth. In the part of the country in which I live they are a great deal more interested in wheat, corn, and similar agricultural products than they are in cotton, but under numerous decisions of eminent Speakers I could not hold that amendment to be in order and I ruled it out.

So much for these preliminary remarks. It might just as well be understood once for all that the Speaker does have jurisdiction of conference reports for the purpose of determining whether the conferees have exceeded their powers, and for that one purpose only.

Now, what is this thing? What is the object of section 19? Whether it is wise or unwise, I am not called upon to say. If I were called upon to say, I would have a very strong opinion about it. The object of this legislation is to prohibit the publication in this country of unfriendly criticism on the President, the administration, and everybody else in authority in the conduct of this war.

Mr. KEATING. Will the Speaker permit me?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. The Speaker is in error in that statement, I submit in all deference. The Senate amendment is not to prevent the publication of unfriendly sentiments, but if the Speaker will bear with me the object is to prevent the publication of any sentiment unless there is printed with it a translation.

The SPEAKER. I understand that; but that is not the main object of this section 19 and Senate amendment 127. The reason for the requirement in this bill for the translation of editorials in the foreign language seems to be that the most of us can not read foreign languages. Evidently some of these papers are absolutely friendly. The object of the whole thing is to prevent unfriendly criticism of any part of the Government pending the war with Germany. The Chair does not suppose that there is a district attorney or assistant district attorney in this country so dense that he would undertake to harness up anyone for printing a friendly comment upon the Government. That is inconceivable. That being the case, the conferees, for some reason unknown to the Chair, and it is no part of the Chair's business to inquire into the reason why, or whether they acted wisely or unwisely, have included along with the German-language papers other foreign-language papers. In the House if that had been offered as an amendment, the Chair would have ruled it out without any ceremony, but we are not operating under the rules of the House as applied to House bills, when originally considered in the House, on conference reports.

They have lugged in the espionage bill, and the Chair's own judgment about it is that they would have done better to have shut out the reference to the espionage bill and to have inserted the words desired, but that is a question of taste. Whether the legislation is wise or unwise the Chair thinks that the conferees' substitute for Senate amendment 127 is germane and that the conferees did not exceed their authority in that regard, and overrules the point of order. [Applause.]

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MONTAGUE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXPLOSIVES.

The SPEAKER. The other day the Chair appointed conferees on the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture and use of explosives in time of war.

In naming the conferees the Chair appointed the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND]. He is not in the city, and the Chair appoints Mr. DENISON, of Illinois, in his stead.

ADMITTING FOREIGN SHIPPING TO COASTWISE TRADE.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes for the purpose of submitting a request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes in order to submit a request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 6175, a bill giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend the present provisions of the law and admit foreign-built vessels to the coastwise trade may be made a special order, not to interfere with conference reports or other privileged matters that may come up in the House. I would like to have it considered to-morrow. The hearings have not yet been printed. The bill, with the report, is before the House. The bill comes to the House with unanimous report from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. As far as I know there is no objection to it from any quarter, even not from the shipping interests that might be affected by this legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman if he names any particular date.

Mr. ALEXANDER. To-morrow; after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I did not quite hear the statement of the gentleman from Missouri. Did he say that the hearings would be printed and ready for the Members to-morrow?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is not the desire to have the bill brought up before the Members are given time to read the hearings?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would like to have it brought up to-morrow, because I think the bill should become a law before Congress adjourns, and we want to hasten that time if we can.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In a broad way, just what does the bill do?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The bill provides:

That during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter the United States Shipping Board may, in its judgment the interests of the United States require, suspend the present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States: Provided, That no such vessel shall engage in the coastwise trade except upon a permit issued by the United States Shipping Board, which permit shall limit or define the scope of the trade and the time of such employment: Provided further, That in issuing permits the board shall give preference to vessels of foreign registry owned, leased, or chartered by citizens of the United States or corporations thereof: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the coastwise trade with Alaska or between Alaskan ports.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Alaska is exempt. Does that mean that foreign ships shall come into the coastwise trade with foreign crews—Japanese and Chinese and the like?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The intent of this bill is that vessels under a foreign register may be admitted into the coastwise trade in order to meet the emergency created by the present war. Preference is given, of course, to vessels under foreign register chartered by American corporations or associations or individuals.

Mr. DILL. Reserving the right to object, does this bill give the Shipping Board power to change the regulations regarding the Panama Canal?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not. The committee submitted the bill to the Shipping Board for an opinion as to whether or not it would meet the present emergency. In its scope it is much narrower than the original bill which I introduced in the House. The Shipping Board are of the opinion that it will meet the emergency and it has their approval, as it has the approval of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. It has the approval also of the coastwise shipping interests.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Did I understand that the provisions of the bill are not applicable to the coast of Alaska?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not apply to the coast of Alaska.

Mr. HOUSTON. Why is that exception made?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Because the hearings disclosed that there was no shortage of ships in that trade, that there is no present emergency there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In addition to that, it means the admission of foreign shipping and the permission of that shipping to go into the coastwise trade between Pacific ports and Alaska, and it would at once destroy the established trade that is there.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is no emergency, in the opinion of the committee, that would warrant the extension of this privilege to the Alaskan trade.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does not the gentleman think there is more need for competition in the waters approaching the coasts of Alaska, in the shipping business there, than in any other part of the American seacoast?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would not say that is true. Under the provisions of the shipping act the Shipping Board has the power to regulate rates in our coastwise trade, and if there is any discrimination, if there is any abuse or unreasonable rates, the Shipping Board have the power to correct those abuses and regulate the rates.

Mr. HOUSTON. When can we get those hearings?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They will be available in the morning.

Mr. HOUSTON. And the gentleman wants to set this for hearing to-morrow?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would prefer to do that, if Calendar Wednesday can be dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON. I would be very glad to suggest to the gentleman, as the report has just been made, that he make his request to-morrow.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I shall make it for Thursday.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to see the bill and the report. For instance, I would like to know, in my ignorance, whether or not a Swedish ship or a Chinese ship could come over and enter into our coastwise trade with Chinese sailors; and I would like to know further whether or not our own ships, that are officered, as I understand it—I may be wrong about it—under what we may call the Furuseth Act, that being the name of the man at the head of the Seamen's Union, would be in any way affected by this bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The seamen's act applies to all ships coming into our ports by its express provisions.

Mr. CANNON. And under this act it would apply to all of these ships?

Mr. ALEXANDER. This act would not interfere with the operation of the seamen's act at all.

Mr. CANNON. I wish the gentleman would ask this on Thursday morning.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I shall ask it for Thursday morning.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let me ask one question. What foreign shipping can come here? Certainly not any from England or France or Italy. It can come from Japan and China. Are those the ships that are to compete in our coastwise traffic?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They are not. If the gentleman would do me the honor to read the report—and I am not saying that he should have heretofore read it, for it has just come in—he will find the purpose of this legislation clearly stated. Under it ships coming into our ports from Europe, our allied ships, discharge their cargo, say, in New York. Under our coastwise laws they must proceed to Gulf ports empty, if it is necessary for them to go there to load return cargo. They may not carry cargo from New York to New Orleans or to Galveston, although they are going there to load with cotton or grain for Europe; or, if they come from a Central American or South American port to a Pacific or Gulf port and discharge their cargo they can not carry a cargo from one American port to another, and it is to relieve that situation that we seek to have this bill passed, because we have already withdrawn more than 10 per cent of our ships from the coastwise trade.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is estimated that in the near future we will withdraw a million tons more. The purpose is simply to make our shipping and the shipping of our allies available to meet the emergency of the war.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does it permit coastwise ships loading at Pacific coast ports to go through the Panama Canal and finish loading in Atlantic ports or to unload?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Of course, under existing law, if they load for a foreign port they can load anywhere and go from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and they may carry cargo from a foreign port on the Pacific to the Atlantic or from the Atlantic to a foreign port on the Pacific.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Say that a Vancouver, British Columbia, vessel loaded at that port, could it finish loading at San Francisco and go through the Panama Canal and unload at New York City?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They could not do that; that is, they could not carry cargo from San Francisco to New York under existing law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They could not pick up intermediate cargo, but they could under a suspension of these rules?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They could if there was any emergency demanding it.

Mr. CANNON. I wish the gentleman would let the request go over until Thursday until we can have time to read the report and the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am sure that the gentleman will not object to it if he will read the hearings and the report.

Mr. CANNON. Probably not; but the gentleman says he would like to take it up on Thursday, and it can be taken up on Thursday by unanimous consent just as well as by unanimous consent now.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would like to have those who would like to be present when the bill is considered have notice, at all events.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose the gentleman gives notice now that he is going to ask unanimous consent to take the bill up on Thursday.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, I will accept the gentleman's suggestion. I have no desire whatever to press the matter until the Members have opportunity to read the report and hearings. The need for coal and cotton in the New England industries is one of pressing importance now, and they are urgent in their demand for relief. Our interests on the Great Lakes demand consideration. Mr. Speaker, I will now give notice that on Thursday, after the reading of the Journal, if the Chair will recognize me, I shall ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6175.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman ask unanimous consent?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I withdraw that request and simply give notice that I will renew my request then for the consideration of the bill immediately after the reading of the Journal and action on conference reports, if any are pending for consideration.

CORRECTION IN ENROLLMENT.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MONTAGUE. To ask for the present consideration of concurrent resolution 23, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4960) entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the word "it," on page 21, line 20, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "him."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he would have any objection to my discussing this matter for about 10 minutes. I had hoped to have an opportunity to discuss briefly the bill itself, but the conference report was agreed to and I did not have that opportunity. There is no objection to the concurrent resolution so far as I know.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I will state the purpose of the concurrent resolution is that the President is substituted here in place of the Federal Trade Commission, and the grammatical pronoun should not be "it," but should be "him." That is the reason for asking the correction. I do not care to take up any time of the House, and I would be very glad to accommodate the gentleman, but I do not know that I have the authority.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether the gentleman knows that the resolution describes the line according to the engrossed copy or according to the printed copy?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The enrolling clerk went over the matter, prepared the resolution at my request, and this is the manner in which he has submitted it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have just heard quite a considerable discussion on the point of order raised against the conference report on the trading with the enemy act. The conference report as adopted very widely extended the provisions of the so-called espionage act relative to the dissemination and distribution of certain articles and publications. This raises in the House the question of control over newspapers, over the press. This is the situation at the present time. The Congress has given to the President of the United States broader authority, wider jurisdiction, more power, than ever heretofore granted in a free country to an executive officer; wider authority, more power, than has heretofore been suggested or proposed as wise, necessary, or proper under our form of government. We have granted to the President possibly more absolute power and authority than is legally and lawfully lodged in the hands of any king or potentate of the earth. That is a pretty broad statement, but I believe it to be a true statement. We have done all these things almost by unanimous vote. Some of the propositions have been exceedingly startling when first presented to us, and a great many gentlemen have had to readjust their views of the limitations of our Constitution, many gentlemen have had to consider and reconsider very carefully, and in some cases I think almost prayerfully not only their views of what it is wise to do but what we have the power to do, the authority to do, as representatives of the American people. But after full consideration a very great majority of the representatives of the people in this body and Members of the Senate have come to believe that under present conditions of world-wide war, conditions affecting not only the military power and strength of the Nation but involving in a very acute way all industrial life and processes, all commerce and enterprise, every citizen, whether engaged in war or not, tremendously and vitally, it was our duty to give to the President and the executive departments generally tremendous, far-reaching power and authority.

I hope and believe we have in the main acted wisely. I hope and trust that the power and authority thus given and granted will be used wisely. We all realize, however, that we are all mortal and that men do not lose any mortal faults and frailties they may have when they become officials of the Government, when they reach high places of power and authority. The weaknesses and faults of mortal man are shared by Presidents, Secretaries, and Cabinet members as well as the balance of the world. While we have confidence in the men in high places, we realize that it has been the universal verdict of history that men intrusted with great power, vast authority, even those having the very best intent and purpose with regard to the discharge of that power and authority, are prone to fall into grievous errors, frequently make unfortunate mistakes, may even be tempted to abuse their power. It has been said, and said wisely and truthfully, that a free press and free speech are absolutely necessary and essential to the maintenance of liberty and of free institutions. If this be true in times when conditions are normal, when executive officers are not granted extraordinary power, when the representatives of the people are exerting the usual check and balance over the acts and expenditures of the executive departments, how much more clearly is it true, how much more important are these truths when applied to a condition under which the Executive and the executive authorities have vast power and authority conferred upon them.

The Congress was so convinced of the truth of this axiom with regard to free speech and a free press that when the matter was presented squarely, when it was brought before House and Senate, Congress refused to add to the other power and authority of the Executive, power and authority to control free speech and the press through a censorship. Congress acted wisely. But in former legislation, and in the espionage act, the section that was referred to frequently a short time ago, we did grant authority to deny the use of the mails under certain conditions to certain articles, certain varieties of information, certain literature and classes of publications. Under those provisions the Postmaster General has arbitrary power.

It was not intended under these provisions of law to in anywise establish a press censorship to interfere with the free expression of opinion relative to acts or policies; Congress definitely declined to do that; but under that power, under the authority assumed or claimed to have been thus conferred my understanding is that some twenty and odd papers have been denied the use of the mails. I am not personally acquainted with the character of any of them. I do not know the names of any of them, with one or two exceptions. I have nothing but a hazy notion as to where some of them are published.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHACKLEFORD). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not raising the question of the authority of the Postmaster General to do what he has done with regard to these publications, or as to the wisdom or propriety of it. I shall assume until I have further information that he has acted within his authority and for the good of the country. But many people seem to be of the opinion that the Postmaster General has acted arbitrarily and beyond his authority. There has been considerable complaint of the raiding of newspaper offices. There has been quite a bit of criticism of acts on the part of special agents of the Government in connection with meetings and publications claimed to be in the nature of acts of intimidation. I know little of the truth of these claims and complaints. I simply rise to make this observation and suggestion:

The Congress gave the President all of the power and authority he asked, save alone control over a free press and free speech. The Congress has appropriated practically every penny that has been asked for by the administration. The Congress has, by almost unanimous vote, granted men, money, means, and authority, as requested by the executive departments, in order that we may successfully bear our part in the great war in which we are engaged. And the Congress, representing the people, hopes and expects that, having withheld and declined to grant authority and control over the press and for the suppression of free speech, no legislation which it has placed on the statute books may be so used or utilized, may be so interpreted, as to give power over the press and in the suppression of free speech which the Congress did not intend. It is tremendously important that we should be successful in this war. It is tremendously important that our forces shall be victorious. It is tremendously important that we shall do our part heroically in the great enterprise upon which we are entered; and the Congress stands to a man firmly behind the administration in granting, giving, and providing all those things that may be necessary to that end. But it is also tremendously important that we shall preserve in this land of the free and home of the brave free speech and a free press, to the end that while we are fighting for democracy the world round, while we are fighting, as we hope and believe, for freedom and for the establishment of a better condition among men everywhere, we shall not be deprived of our liberties at home. Repression of the expression of opinion, repression of criticism of methods and policies, never won any victories for any people. I am one of those who believe that in times like these it is the duty of everyone to abstain from criticism, to withhold judgment, to remain silent when one can not approve, but I realize there are those who think differently, who seem to require a vent, a safety valve. I further realize that the time may come when he is the best patriot who calls public attention to what he considers excesses and abuses. Let us therefore not fall into the grievous error as a Government of attempting to muzzle free speech and arbitrarily control the press. [Applause.]

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to. On motion of Mr. MONTAGUE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

INCREASE OF NAVY RATION.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5646, and that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what it is.

Mr. PADGETT. It is to increase the commutation value of a Navy ration from 30 cents, at which it was fixed by law in 1876, to 40 cents.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent that when the bill which the gentleman from Tennessee has before the House for disposition and the bill which I understand the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs suggests he is going to offer are disposed of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. No; after they have finished those bills to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now before the House is one of unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5646.

Mr. MADDEN. I am asking unanimous consent that when this bill and the other bills that the gentleman from Tennessee has, and the bill of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], are disposed of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman wish to put it as one request?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. I do not think anybody will object to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration—

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that you put the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], that when I have finished the three bills that I have, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] has finished the consideration of his bill, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] may have permission to address the House not exceeding 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has heard the unanimous request stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]. Is there objection to it? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the bill be reported, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5646) to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 1585. Forty cents shall in all cases be deemed the commutation price of the Navy ration: Provided, however, That after January 1, 1918, the commutation price shall not exceed the average cost of the ration during the preceding six months, not to exceed 40 cents."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee whether he can inform us what the ration is in the Army?

Mr. PADGETT. The price of it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. The Navy ration is costing about 41½ cents now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am fully aware of the report which discloses that fact. I thought perhaps the gentleman could inform the House as to what the Army ration was.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] no doubt can answer that question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman from Alabama inform us what the Army ration is?

Mr. DENT. It is 40 cents to-day; raised to about 40 cents.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. FOSS. In view of the fact that the cost of the ration is 40 cents now, would it not be better to raise this a little, so as to have sufficient margin?

Mr. PADGETT. The Government furnishes the ration prescribed by law, regardless of its cost. This is only a question of commutation, where the man does not get the ration in kind.

Mr. FOSS. The difference is paid by the Government?

Mr. PADGETT. The Government furnishes the ration, regardless of its cost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose there is any desire for further discussion. I ask for a vote on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NEW RATINGS IN THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5648) to establish certain ratings in the United States Navy, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5648, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of ascertaining what the bill is, we would like to have the gentleman state its purpose to the House.

Mr. PADGETT. It is to establish new ratings in the United States Navy, to be known as engineman, first class, and engineman, second class.

Mr. MADDEN. Does that mean engineer?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. At the present time the engines are operated by what is known as the machinist's mate, and the regulations require that the machinist's mate shall not only be qualified to operate the engine, but must be qualified as a machinist or mechanic sufficiently to repair the engine.

Now, we need a great many men to operate engines without the ability to repair them, and this is to create this subordinate rating, so that we shall have a force to operate the engines without requiring that they shall also have the capacity to repair them.

Mr. MADDEN. All these so-called enginemen are really engineers?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Are they required also to obtain a license from the Government of the United States before they are permitted to operate an engine?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. MADDEN. They ought to be.

Mr. PADGETT. They are enlisted men in the Navy.

Mr. MADDEN. Private individuals throughout the United States operating steam plants, or at least steamboats, are not permitted under any circumstances to employ anybody as an engineer until he has passed an examination before a board of examining engineers and obtained a Government license, and the purpose of that is that a man in order to be qualified to do the work, which is in itself dangerous to the public unless it is done by qualified men, must demonstrate not only that he knows how to open and close the throttle of the engine, but—

Mr. PADGETT. He has to be qualified and pass an examination, but he does not have to pay a license fee.

Mr. MADDEN. He should have a license, although he may not pay the fee.

Mr. PADGETT. He has to pass an examination in order to be qualified, and when he goes from second class to first class he passes another examination. He does not pay a license fee.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know anything about the payment of a license fee, but I think that all men employed on steamboats in American waters and foreign waters operating American ships are compelled by the law of the land to obtain a license, after having taken an examination before a board of engineers, and over 99 per cent of the men who operate these engines in the United States, in fact all such men, have licenses. The truth is they must have a certain amount of experience, not only to prove their qualifications, but they must also have had a certain number of years' experience as assistant before they are allowed to prove their qualifications to take the place of the principal.

Now, are we going to do with enlisted men what we are not doing with any other men? Not that I have any objection to giving enlisted men positions. On the contrary, I would like to see them get the best positions they can obtain. What I want to know is, Are they safe?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. They have to go through very strict and rigid examinations and demonstrate their qualifications.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the pay of these grades?

Mr. PADGETT. Forty dollars for the second grade, and $45 for the first class.

Mr. MADDEN. Why, we do not employ stokers for that.

Mr. PADGETT. They get their subsistence.

Mr. MADDEN. We pay $100 a month and subsist them besides. It seems to me the Government of the United States ought not to take the skill and experience such as these men have and pay them the trifle that this indicates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand this bill, it is to provide increase of pay for a large number of the personnel on board our battleships and cruisers, and the like.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is not. It increases the present pay of machinist's mate from $55 a month for the first class and $40 for the second class, and the proposed pay in this bill for the engineman is $40 for the second class and $45 for the first class.

Mr. STAFFORD. The rate for machinist's mate at present is as stated by the gentleman. Will the gentleman state what the pay will be under the proposed bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. It is set out here. I do not think that is changed. The base pay of machinist's mate, second class, and water tenders is increased from $40 to $45.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the increase of the first class?

Mr. PADGETT. That is left as it is, at $55.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman claims that this is not a bill to increase the pay of the personnel?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not. The hearings show—

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to read from the report, if the gentleman will permit, a letter from the Paymaster General, addressed to the gentleman from Tennessee, in which he says:

Based on the foregoing, it is believed that the additional cost for the present personnel will probably not exceed $250,000 per year.

What does that increased cost comprise, except for pay?

Mr. PADGETT. He puts that in, that it might do it; yet the officers in their testimony before the committee said that by using these enginemen instead of machinists' mates they did not believe the total cost would be increased at all, but the paymaster puts an outside limit of $250,000 that it might cost.

But if you will read the hearings you will see that the officers who appeared before us said they did not believe there would be any increase at all by substituting enginemen at $40 and $45 to operate engines where we are now using machinists at $55.

Mr. STAFFORD. I direct the attention of the gentleman to a new classification found on page 2, "chief special mechanic, at $127 a month." The report shows that these positions are now being filled by chief machinists and machinists' mates who receive $55 and $40 a month.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman advise the House what is the reason for such a large increase of pay, in some instances more than double that which they now receive?

Mr. PADGETT. Because of the large increase in the Navy and the large increase in the engines and the machinery of our ships, requiring a higher class of men than have heretofore been assigned to that duty.

Mr. STAFFORD. The men to fill these position are now in the service, in the grades of machinists' mates, first and second class.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that, but this is for a chief special mechanic at $127 a month. He is to be a kind of a supervisory man, a man of high capacity in that service, to supervise and overlook.

Mr. STAFFORD. What allowances do these men receive besides the pay that is here provided, in the way of rations?

Mr. PADGETT. They get their rations and their quarters. On first enlistment they get an outfit of $60.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand, they also get increases of pay on reenlistment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman state what men in similar grades get in the British Navy and our navies?

Mr. PADGETT. They get less than our men receive.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Very much less?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. In the German Navy they get practically nothing. It is conscription there.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give us the proportionate amount of pay received by British seamen as compared with ours?

Mr. PADGETT. I could not give it to you definitely; but before the beginning of the war I made some investigation into that, and they received about 60 or 65 per cent of the pay received by our men.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give us any information as to what would be the maximum pay on successive reenlistments, of say for instance a special mechanic whose base pay is stated in this bill at $80?

Mr. PADGETT. I think that under the existing law upon each four-year reenlistment they get an increase of $5 a month. I have not looked it up for years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does that continue as long as they are eligible for service?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not certain whether it is limited to four reenlistments or not.

Mr. FOSS. Did the hearings disclose how many men would be affected by this?

Mr. PADGETT. I think only a small number. I do not remember how many.

Mr. FOSS. It would mean an increase in pay to most of them, would it not?

Mr. PADGETT. It creates a new rank, and it will substitute men at $50 and $45 for men who are now getting $55.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill (H. R. 5648) to establish certain new ratings in the United States Navy and for other purposes, was read as follows:

*Be it enacted, etc., That the ratings of engineman, first class, engineman, second class; blacksmith, first class, blacksmith, second class; coppersmith, first class, coppersmith, second class; pattern maker, first class, pattern maker, second class; molder, first class, molder, second class; chief special mechanic and special mechanic, first class, be, and they are hereby, established in the artificer branch of the Navy with the following rates of base pay per month: Engineman, first class, $45; engineman, second class, $40; blacksmith, first class, $65; blacksmith, second class, $50; coppersmith, first class, $65; coppersmith, second class, $50; pattern maker, first class, $65; pattern maker, second class, $50; molder, first class, $65; molder, second class, $50; chief special mechanic, $127; special mechanic, first class, $80: Provided, That the base pay of machinists' mates, second class, and water tenders be, and it is hereby, increased from $40 to $45 per month: Provided further, That all the aforesaid rates of pay shall be subject to such increases of pay and allowances as are, or may hereafter be, authorized by law for enlisted men of the Navy: And provided further, That appointments or enlistments in the said ratings may be made from enlisted men in the Navy or from civil life, respectively, and the qualifications of candidates for any of said ratings shall be determined in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.*

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Will the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee state whether these new ratings or ranks that have been created are to apply to men in the service who are to operate craft propelled by gasoline motors?

Mr. PADGETT. This applies anywhere where they can be assigned.

Mr. WALSH. Was that one of the reasons for creating this new position?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I think so.

Mr. WALSH. To assign them to craft now being operated under the control of the naval reserve?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that is a part of it.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, on May 31 last I made a few remarks on the subject of freedom of speech and of the press, which I desire to supplement by a few authorities, and will therefore ask leave to extend my remarks made upon that occasion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks made in May last on the freedom of the press, and to cite certain authorities. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized for about two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the right to the first five minutes, if he wants to use it.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not care to occupy the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take just a few moments to call the attention of the House to House joint resolution 153, which I introduced some days ago, to authorize the appointment of a committee of Members of the House of Representatives and Senate to visit Europe for the purpose of investigating and examining into the conditions and progress of the war being waged by Germany and her allies against France and her allies. This resolution provides for the appointment of a committee by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, consisting of 50 Members of the House and 25 Members of the Senate. There is already before the House an invitation from the Speaker of the British House of Commons, inviting all the Members of Congress to visit the western battle fronts of Europe, so that they may obtain better information as to the actual conduct and progress of the war. There is also before the House an invitation that was extended personally by Deputy Henri Franklin Bouillon some days ago. That is an invitation to the House to send 17 Representatives to the Interparliamentary Union. This union is made up at the present time of representatives of France, England, and Italy. The purpose of this Parliamentary Union is to co-operate and advise as to the best methods of financing and conducting the war. The union is to have only to do with the work and progress of the present war and is to dissolve at the close of the war.

My idea and object in introducing this resolution and proposing the committee of the House was that Members, as many as can conveniently accommodate their business to join this committee, should go over to Europe and go out on the battle front and observe the actual war conditions. I think what we need more than any other one thing in this country in order to have the war carried on enthusiastically and effectively is first-hand information as to the progress of the war in Europe.

The President, it is said, recently proposed to have the Members of Congress after the adjournment of this session to make a series of addresses in their respective districts, and in this way disseminate information concerning the war to the people in the various congressional districts. I believe that such is a splendid idea. I know that conditions exist in this country at the present time that indicate that people are not as enthusiastically in support of the war as they would be if they had fuller information in regard to its progress and its purposes. Personally I am heartily and unreservedly in favor of the war program being carried on by our Government. I want to do everything I can in and out of Congress to aid my country to conduct this war vigorously and to bring it speedily to a successful conclusion. I do not know of any better plan that can be carried out to secure the enthusiastic interest and support of all the country for this war than to have a large number of Members of this House and the Senate first go over to Europe and view the real war conditions there, and then to come home and tell of these conditions to our people and explain fully to the people of this country the conditions and the things needed for the most vigorous and successful prosecution of the war.

I recall that a few days ago at Atlantic City, N. J., Lord Northcliffe, in speaking to representatives of the commercial organizations of the country, emphasized his words and prefaced his remarks by the statement that he was speaking as a man who had been at the front, that he had seen how the war was actually being conducted, and that he had seen the needs of the officers and soldiers in the camps and in the trenches. With that explanation of his personal experience at the front he was able to more effectively impress his audience by his address than he would have been had he not personally observed the things and conditions of which he spoke.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am entirely in sympathy with the object which the gentleman seeks to accomplish, but does not the gentleman think that we ought not to pass any resolution unless we first accept the invitation extended by M. Bouillon?

Mr. NORTON. I believe the invitation should be accepted, because I feel that body is a very important and useful body of men in the conduct of this war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If we were to refuse to accept that invitation it would hardly seem proper to send Representatives abroad in any official capacity, especially after having declined to accept an official invitation.

Mr. NORTON. I do not agree with the gentleman as to that. I believe that the House and Senate, this Congress, has the right within itself to send an official committee of its membership to the battle fronts of Europe.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We could hardly ask from the French and English Governments the courtesies of being shown the battle fronts if we had refused to accept their official invitation and join them.

Mr. NORTON. I do not think the proposition of refusal to accept the invitation extended by Monsieur Bouillon and the sending of an official committee of the Congress to Europe to examine into the conduct and progress of the war are at all incompatible.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think there is anything more important for this House to do than to make it possible this next winter to have on the floor of the House and the Senate men who are personally qualified to talk about the conditions on the battle fronts.

Mr. NORTON. I am not so much interested to have men on the floor of the House or of the Senate as I am to have Members of Congress who have visited the war scenes and conditions in Europe to go out through the country and carry first-hand information to the people concerning this war. That is why I believe it is highly important.

I have here a newspaper clipping taken from the Washington Post of last Sunday, speaking of Representative McCormick's visit to Europe. Representative McCormick has written a letter to the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, in which he says that he has enjoyed a wonderful experience over there. In the 15 days he had then spent in Europe he said he had gained a great deal of valuable information as to the war which he could not have gained in any other way. He strongly advised in favor of a committee from Congress being sent to Europe at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the House further on this at this time. I merely wish to emphasize the importance as I view it, of having an official committee of the Members of the House and Senate sent not only to the Interparliamentary Union, but sent to Europe to view and examine into the real conditions of the countries and the people where the war is being actively carried on. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REIMBURSEMENT OF OFFICERS AND MEN IN NAVAL SERVICE FOR PROPERTY LOST.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5647, to reimburse officers and men in the naval service for property lost.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5647) to provide for the reimbursement of officers, enlisted men, and others in the naval service of the United States for property lost or destroyed in such service.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. WALSH. To object to the unanimous consent for consideration.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. HICKS. I was going to ask the gentleman to reserve his objection in order that I may send to the desk a proposed amendment to the bill. I merely want to get it into the Record; and, Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The proposed amendment is as follows:

Mr. HICKS offers the following amendment: At the end of line 3, on page 5, add:

"And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply to the personnel of the Coast Guard in like manner as to the personnel of the Navy, whether the Coast Guard is operating under the Treasury Department or operating as a part of the Navy, and all of the duties, which, under this act, devolve upon the major general commandant of the Marine Corps with reference to the personnel of that corps, shall devolve upon the captain commandant of the Coast Guard, and in cases involving persons in the Coast Guard reimbursement in money shall be made by a disbursing officer of the Coast Guard from the appropriation 'Coast Guard' and reimbursement in kind shall be made by the captain commandant from the appropriation 'Coast Guard.'"

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts object?

Mr. WALSH. I think this matter had better be deferred, and for the present I object.

AIRCRAFT BOARD.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2705) to create the Aircraft Board and provide for its maintenance, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2705. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska to be kind enough to explain the scope of the bill before we consent to its consideration.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The bill proposes to constitute by legislative enactment an Aircraft Board and have it constituted and empowered practically as the board is operating at present under Executive order.

Mr. MADDEN. How many men are there to be on the board?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Nine members; three to be officers of the Army, three to be officers of the Navy. The Army officers are to consist of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army and two other officers to be appointed by the Secretary of War, and the naval officers to consist of the Chief Constructor of the Navy and two naval officers to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, and three civilians to be appointed by the President, a civilian to be chairman of the board.

Mr. MADDEN. How much do the civilians get?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The civilian officers serve without pay.

Mr. MADDEN. Will there be any addition to the compensation paid to the Army and Navy officers?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No additional pay.

Mr. MADDEN. This board is in existence—in effect now?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is not this board under the general-defense act now in existence in control of aeronautics?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Only by Executive order and without legislative authority, which they consider it desirable to have.

Mr. ROBBINS. Does it not have the same authority that all of these boards that are sitting down here in the Munsey Building and other places have?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It has the position and authority of an advisory board only, but it is the opinion of the Military Committee and those who are associated in this work that it would give this board a great deal of additional prestige and authority in dealing not only with matters in this country but also in dealings with foreign nations to have this board constituted by act of Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the necessity for dignifying this board when we are not recognizing the War Munitions Board and other boards in this same way, which have control of a number of the activities of the Government so far as its war affairs are concerned?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The Aircraft Board and the production of aircraft has become such a tremendous part of the efforts of this Nation in this war that it has been thought by some people that a separate department of government might well be constituted to deal with this matter of aircraft.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not mean to claim that it has greater authority or more need than the War Munitions Board?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Nebraska permit me to answer that question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. DENT. It was stated before the committee, I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], that this board has been dealing with similar boards in England, France, and Italy; that the boards in England, France, and Italy are creatures of law, whereas this board is simply an advisory committee of the Council of National Defense, and therefore they were greatly embarrassed, and have been, in dealing with these boards of other countries because not a creature of law, with the same dignity as the boards over there. I do not think the same situation applies to the other advisory committees connected with the Council of National Defense.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman believe that the War Munitions Board deals with boards representing other countries?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Not in the way that this board does.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not in the identical line, but still in matters pertaining to activities of the Army.

Mr. DENT. That is done through the Secretary of War, and the Chief of Ordnance, and the Secretary of the Navy, and the chief of that department. The board has no power to act finally without the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, but its dealings are had directly with those that are created in England, France, and Italy by law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Without intending in any way to have any secrets divulged, is it the purpose of this board to visit foreign countries and confer with other boards or that those other boards come here and confer with this board?

Mr. DENT. That is the purpose. They intend to do that before they finish their work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any provision in the bill limiting the existence of this board to the war?

Mr. DENT. Six months after the termination of the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as this bill has just been reported and was not available I ask that before consent is given it be read.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would like to state also that the bill has already passed the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill has already passed the Senate, but the committee of the House has stricken out all of the Senate bill and substituted a new provision, although it may be largely similar to the Senate provision.

Mr. DENT. Largely similar, but I might state to the gentleman that the bill as reported by the House Military Committee is the bill as recommended in a letter to me by the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, with this exception, that they ask for a board of 11 members and the committee thinks that 9 are sufficient.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in the Senate bill provision was made for the salary of the civilian members at $7,500 per annum. Did I understand the gentleman to say a moment ago that each civilian member is to serve without pay?

Mr. DENT. That is true under the House bill, and that is the recommendation of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course their expenses will be paid undoubtedly, if they are obliged to go abroad or while serving in this capacity?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is contemplated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve the right to object until the bill is read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a question. Do I understand that section 5 is inserted in order to authorize this board to employ necessary clerks and assistants. It carries an annual appropriation not to exceed $100,000 for clerks and other employees which may be necessary for the conduct of the business of the board. Has the board no authority now to employ any such clerks?

Mr. DENT. It has not. As I understand it, the board now is using the clerical force of the War and Navy Department, and it has depleted that force to a very large extent.

Mr. MONDELL. Then a rather important feature of the legislation is an appropriation of $100,000 under section 5, authorizing the building up of quite a bureau.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman will observe that the $100,000 is not appropriated, but it only authorizes them to use $100,000 of money already appropriated for this department. It is not a new expenditure.

Mr. MONDELL. It makes it available for purposes for which it is not now available for the employment of such clerks and other employees as the board may desire?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is the point.

Mr. MONDELL. If we are to do that in regard to this board, will it not become necessary to take the same action relative to all the other boards that are now dealing with various matters of construction?

Mr. DENT. Well, I will state to the gentleman that I do not think so. I think this board occupies a peculiar position. At first I was not inclined to favor this bill, which has been pending before the committee for some time, until I was finally convinced that this board occupies a peculiar position in dealing with our international relations in this war different from any other board that has been called to the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs. Of course I can not speak for all the different boards that are in existence down there. It is certainly different from any other board that has been called to the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs answer a question I would like to ask on section 5? This section authorizes the employment of experts and fixes their salaries. Now, we voted $640,000,000 for the construction of aeroplanes. Why do they want to employ more experts, which calls for the payment of more salaries, when we have made provision for the whole matter of aeroplanes in that appropriation?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that it is not the purpose of this bill to employ any more than are already being used by this board, and I will state, furthermore, for the benefit of Members of the House, that when the $640,000,000 appropriation bill was pending we had a provision similar to this in that bill in order to take care of this situation. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee asked that it be stricken out of the bill on the idea that it would be taken care of in the deficiency bill which is still pending in Congress, and we put it in this bill now because we do not know when that bill is going to be passed. I really think it ought to have passed in the $640,000,000 bill which was passed some months ago.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. HELM. There is now in existence a section of the Signal Corps in which there is an aviation organization in the Army, is there not?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. HELM. And the same applies to the Navy, does it not?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Is it the purpose to create a third organization now?

Mr. DENT. No; the purpose of this is to coordinate in the beginning the aviation work in the Army and the Navy so that when the Chief Signal Officer gets a proposition he does not have to go through red tape and go around to the Chief of the Bureau of Naval Construction and wait for a week or 10 days before they get anything done. This board meets every day, practically, I am told, and the Chief Signal Officer and the Chief of the Bureau of Naval Construction, who are members, meet with them each day and they practically work out these things without going through the red tape. The board itself has no power.

Mr. HELM. I understand this is a consolidation of two branches or sections of the Aviation Service in the Army and Navy.

Mr. DENT. It is a coordination, I would say, rather than a consolidation, because, after all, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy must act independently in approving the contracts that they make, and must be individually responsible.

Mr. HELM. And this has the approval of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. DENT. It has the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the President of the United States in a letter to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HULL of Tennessee). The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House be read instead of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the Senate bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of expanding and coordinating the industrial activities relating to aircraft, or parts of aircraft, produced for any purpose in the United States, and to facilitate generally the development of air service, a board is hereby created, to be known as the Aircraft Board, hereinafter referred to as the board.

Sec. 2. That the board shall number not more than nine in all, and shall include a civilian chairman, the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, and two other officers of the Army, to be appointed by the Secretary of War; the Chief Constructor of the Navy and two other officers of the Navy, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; and two additional civilian members. The chairman and civilian members shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 3. That said board and tenure of office of the members thereof shall continue during the pleasure of the President, but not longer than six months after the present war. The civilian members of the board shall serve without compensation.

SEC. 4. That the board is hereby empowered, under the direction and control of and as authorized by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, on behalf of the Departments of War and Navy, to supervise and direct, in accordance with the requirements prescribed or approved by the respective departments, the purchase, production, and manufacture of aircraft, engines, and all ordnance and instruments used in connection therewith, and accessories and materials therefor, including the purchase, lease, acquisition, or construction of plants for the manufacture of aircraft, engines, and accessories: Provided, That the board may make recommendations as to contracts and their distribution in connection with the foregoing, but every contract shall be made by the already constituted authorities of the respective departments.

SEC. 5. That the board is also empowered to employ, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, such clerks and other employees as may be necessary to the conduct of its business, including such technical experts and advisers as may be found necessary, and to fix their salaries. Such salaries shall conform to those usually paid by the Government for similar services: Provided, That by unanimous approval of the board higher compensation may be paid to technical experts and advisers. The board may rent suitable offices in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, purchase necessary office equipment and supplies, including scientific publications and printing, and may incur necessary administrative and contingent expenses, and for all of the expenses enumerated in this paragraph there shall be allotted by the Chief Signal Officer of the Army for the fiscal year 1917 and 1918 the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, from any appropriation now existing for or hereinafter made to the Signal Corps of the Army, and such appropriation is hereby made available for these purposes: Provided further, That except upon the joint and concurrent approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy there shall not be established or maintained under the board any office or organization duplicating or replacing, in whole or in part, any office or organization now existing that can be properly established or maintained by appropriations made for or available for the military or naval services.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be considered in the House—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in what way it affects the aviation section of the Advisory Council of National Defense?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It simply creates them by legislative enactment rather than by Executive order. It changes the number in the Senate bill from 11 to 9.

Mr. MAPES. The Advisory Council of National Defense has an organization—

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Which they call the Aircraft Board.

Mr. MAPES. The Aircraft Board. Does this bill add to or supplement or take the place of that Aircraft Board?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It takes the place of it and practically gives them no additional power but gives them the dignity and status of existing by authority of legislative enactment, which they feel would assist them greatly in dealing with foreign nations.

Mr. MAPES. The last proviso of the bill, I notice, says:

There shall not be established or maintained under the board any office or organization duplicating or replacing, in whole or in part, any office or organization now existing.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The object of that particular part of the bill is to prevent duplication and additional expense to the Government in the expenditure of this $100,000. It does not refer to taking away from the present board any authority, because it is by the special request of the board that we are passing this bill, to give them the authority that they think they ought to have.

Mr. MAPES. Does the Aircraft Board, headed by Mr. Coffin, request it?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. He indorses it, and he was before our committee, and it was at his request largely that we reported the bill.

It is also indorsed by the Secretary of War and by the President. I will say to the gentleman that the members of the Aircraft Board, Mr. Coffin, himself, as chairman, the Chief Constructor of the Navy, and the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, Gen. Squiers, appeared before us in a long hearing, urging the adoption of this bill, and it meets with their approval.

Mr. MAPES. I understand that there was a reorganization of the Aircraft Board in the last few weeks and that certain civilians who were working with it were given commissions. Would this affect them in any way?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. This bill provides that the three members shall be civilian members. Mr. Coffin is a civilian. It may be that some of those members who are now commissioned officers would be affected by that.

Mr. MAPES. Was not Mr. Coffin given a commission as colonel?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No, sir; he has not been given a commission. He specifically stated to the committee that he thought it inadvisable.

Mr. DENT. I would like, if the gentleman from Nebraska will allow me to interject a remark, to make this statement, that there have been some civilians drawn into this aircraft board, and they have been appointed reserve officers of the United States Army, but under this bill they would be appointed as officers of the United States Army. Under this bill there would have to be three civilian officers. The commissions have hitherto been issued to—

Mr. MAPES. To some of those who are working under the general jurisdiction of Mr. Coffin?

Mr. DENT. Working with this aircraft board. Those commissions have already been issued. Those that hold them are in the Army, and they can only be members of this board as military members and not as civilian members.

Mr. MAPES. This bill would not affect them in any way?

Mr. DENT. This bill would not take away their commissions, if that is what the gentleman means.

Mr. MAPES. Does it affect their status on the aircraft board?

Mr. DENT. Not at all, because they are appointed under the general law authorizing the appointment of reserve officers of the United States Army. They may remain as members if the appointing power so desires.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me that this is a very large appropriation for overhead expenses for the aviation branch of the Signal Corps. Can the gentleman tell the House about what this board is now costing the Government per month?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The civilian members of the board are serving without any pay whatever, and of course military and naval officers serve without additional expense to the Government. The additional pay that is caused in the way of clerk hire is very negligible, for the reason, as the chairman has stated, they have drawn from the different departments of the Army and Navy the clerk hire they needed, and thereby depleted the force there, and it was the opinion of the committee that it would be well to authorize them to engage their own clerks.

Mr. NORTON. The appointment of this board would release a good deal of work of the Army and Navy. They would take over practically absolutely the supervision of aviation and the buying of all things necessary for aircraft.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman, if he will permit, the bill does not contemplate changing the number of members of the board in any way. It gives them no additional authority. They can not make a contract either for the Army or Navy without submitting it to those departments, and it must be perfected and ratified and signed by the naval or the military authorities. The only power it gives them would be the one the gentleman suggests, that they might engage clerks out of this authority and pay them out of this fund, rather than to take them from the Army and Navy.

Mr. NORTON. That would give for the Army and Navy for additional clerks, or distribute in other departments, $100,000?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORTON. That means that $100,000 more is available for clerk hire?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No.

Mr. NORTON. I have no disposition to be penurious in this matter, but there seems to be quite a mania for increased clerical forces in the various departments. They are building up tremendous forces, and in some cases giving it out to the country that they are doing the work gratuitously. The most part that I have investigated—and I am free to say that I have not made a thorough investigation—but where I have investigated they are all receiving very good compensation. I have no objection to having a sufficient force, but I do not want to have all of the strength of the country centered in clerical forces and only a small amount of it stationed at the front.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will state to the gentleman that the activities of this board have been tremendous, and the Committee on Military Affairs is satisfied that they have accomplished great things for this Nation in a short time, and this money that we have set aside here is not a new appropriation, but it provides only that out of the tremendous sums of hundreds of millions that have already been appropriated they shall be allowed to use for clerical and similar purposes an amount up to $100,000.

One of the reasons for authorizing this somewhat generous appropriation was the fact that it was brought to the attention of the committee that there was no provision at present whereby men of talent and ability who could not afford to donate their services, as some of these men have done, could be reimbursed for their services.

Mr. NORTON. I am in favor of having the work done, but I am opposed to a multiplicity of clerks where they are not needed. We provided $640,000.000 for aviation. Here is $100,000 additional made available.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is not additional, but we simply authorize that they can use $100,000 of the money already appropriated for this specific purpose.

Mr. NORTON. That is, to be made available?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORTON. I find in connection with my work on Indian affairs that some time ago—two years ago—$10,000 was appropriated to purchase some land for Indians out in California, and that it cost about $9,000 to purchase a thousand dollars' worth of land. Of course, that condition, or any condition approaching that, will not, I hope, exist here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it proposed to take over the entire service now employed in the aviation branch of the National Council of Defense, and housed largely in the Southern Building, and put that service under the jurisdiction of this board?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the purpose that this $100,000 will be all that will be required to pay the clerical force during the fiscal year 1917 and the fiscal year 1918, as provided in this bill for the force now employed in the Southern Building in connection with the Aviation Service?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We were assured, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, that this will probably be a great deal more than they will have to use for that purpose. But we gave them this sum for the additional reason that I started to explain to the gentleman from North Dakota. As the Senate bill proposed $7,500 a year to pay the civilian members of the board, we thought that if we gave them blanket authority to pay this money to experts and civilians whose services were essential to the Government, and yet could not afford to donate their services to the Government, as some wealthy men have done, we could accomplish the same thing, and perhaps not uniformly pay that salary, but only when it is necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman has received the assurance that the entire personnel and the office expenses and all the overhead charges connected with the aviation branch of both the Army and Navy will be less than $100,000?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; not the personnel in the Army and Navy, but the clerk hire and the office force and all the incidental expenses incident to this particular Aviation Board will not exceed that amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let us have an understanding. Is there going to be any clerical force engaged in the Aviation Service other than in connection with this administrative board?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. There certainly will be in the service of aviation. There will be a hundred thousand men in the field engaged in the Aviation Service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am speaking of the clerical force in Washington in connection with the Aviation Service.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Not in the Aviation Board. Men will be assigned to the Signal Corps.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this to be confined to clerks now detailed from the War and Navy Departments in the Aviation Service, or are these clerks to be relieved, so that they can go back to their original employment and have other clerks assigned to this work?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. All Army and Navy clerks now assigned to the Aviation Board will be relieved to go back to the Army and the Navy, and it is believed that this sum will furnish all the clerks necessary for service with the Aviation Board.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that all the clerks now in the Southern Building under the jurisdiction of the Aviation Service will be paid out of this sum?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. As to those who are employed by the board constituted by this bill, it is contemplated that the $100,000 will pay them.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to get some idea as to whether we are going to have one central administrative board for the Aviation Service or whether we are just singling out a little, small board and dignifying it by law as differing from other military boards, and then allowing other branches of the Aviation Service to have clerks that will be detailed from the Navy and War Departments.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman will understand that this Aviation Board is a board constituted for a special purpose, not for the handling of the aviation forces of the Army and Navy in the field, but for purposes of conducting and promoting and purchasing and manufacturing—a great aviation department, to arm the Army and the Navy with these machines—and the particular part of purchase and manufacture of the machines is in the hands of this board.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the $100,000 will be the maximum that will be utilized for the upkeep of that special board?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Exactly.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman if this bill has the approval of the department?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes. It has the approval of the War Department, and there is a letter of the Secretary of the Navy in the report.

Mr. FOSS. Was the Chief Constructor, Admiral Taylor, there?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes. He agreed to this board as it is drawn in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. In this $100,000 is there anything to prevent the employment of somebody at $10,000 or $15,000 a year? Is there any limitation?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; that is left to the discretion of the board.

Mr. STAFFORD. I direct the attention of the gentleman to lines 11 and 12, on page 5:

Such salaries shall conform to those usually paid by the Government for similar service: Provided, That by unanimous approval of the board higher compensation may be paid to technical experts and advisers.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. With the limitation that the gentleman from Wisconsin has read, it is practically left to the discretion of the board.

Mr. CANNON. That is the only limitation?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is the only limitation.

Mr. CANNON. Can the board give us a roster? Was any inquiry made as to how high these salaries might go in the employment of experts, real or alleged?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The general statement was that the pay would be similar to the pay given to men in similar departments of the Army and Navy, and the permission, with the unanimous consent of the board, to pay higher rates to experts was to meet the one point which I have explained here, that it was thought there might be men of talent, ability, and expertness who could not afford to devote their time to this work without higher compensation, and therefore the board should be allowed discretion to pay them more liberally, if found necessary, in a new business like this.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, following out the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I wish to say that in the deficiency bill where we authorize the employment of clerks, it is required that the heads of the departments shall report at the opening of Congress the salaries that are paid to the respective clerks and employees. Would the committee consider such a limitation in this bill, requiring a report to be made to Congress, so that we may know whether these salaries are reasonable or whether they are extravagant?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that we did not consider that part of it, but I presume that rule would apply.

Mr. STAFFORD. That rule would not apply unless there is a special provision in this bill, because this will be a law by itself, and the limitation in the war-deficiency appropriation bill applies only to clerks paid out of the lump-sum appropriations carried in that bill.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. When this particular point that you are making was brought to the attention of the Chief Signal Officer he stated to us that he considered that the amount of money they were asking was very modest, very small, in proportion to the tremendous amount of money that they are expending, and the great work that they are doing for the Government.

Mr. CANNON. What limit is there on the $640,000.000 that has already been appropriated, as to its expenditure?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. There was no permission to use it for the purpose that is now asked for in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to know whether that $640,000.000 can be used to pay salaries and to employ scientists?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It can not.

Mr. CANNON. What is the limitation?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is to be used only for the production, manufacture, and purchase of aeroplanes and for the personnel of the Army.

Mr. CANNON. Is there any other appropriation available now for the employment of experts or the payment of a clerical force?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Not for this board, so we are told.

Mr. CANNON. For the whole Aviation Service?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. There is for the Aviation Service; yes; for that part of the personnel that has to do with the Navy.

Mr. CANNON. There is a Bureau of Aviation in the Army.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And one in the Navy also.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And it is thought important now to organize this board, in addition to the bureaus in the respective departments, with power to contract—

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They have no power to contract.

Mr. CANNON. You do not propose to authorize these people to contract?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; we do not propose to authorize them to contract.

Mr. CANNON. The Army and Navy do the contracting, the Secretaries being responsible, so that they have the real power. Frankly, I am not going to object, but I do not see why this additional machinery is necessary. Still, it may be. I am pretty modest about objecting after a great committee like the Committee on Military Affairs has investigated a subject. There is an old maxim that fools rush in where angels fear to tread; but I do not know. I am just a tenderfoot, and I do not know the necessity for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman will allow me, I do not think he was here when the purpose of the bill was explained. It is to coordinate the work between the Army and the Navy, so as to prevent all the red tape of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army sending communications to the Chief of the Bureau of Naval Construction. These two men are members of the board, and they meet daily with the board and transact the business right there. In addition to that, they deal with some boards in England, in France, and in Italy that are creatures of law in those countries. This board now is merely an advisory committee of the Council for National Defense, and is dealing with boards abroad that have higher dignity.

Mr. CANNON. Then this is a question of dignity?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Partially.

Mr. CANNON. I do not object to the Regular Army and Navy officers meeting daily and having an understanding. They do not have to exchange formal notes and all that kind of thing, and so far as meeting foreign Governments is concerned, I was under the impression that in those relations the State Department, which I think is very efficient, would carry on all the diplomatic work that was required.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman certainly does not mean to say that this board is to carry on diplomatic negotiations. It is to carry on contractual negotiations for the purpose of coordinating the work of our allies and ourselves in this particular branch of the service.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; if I understand it aright, they can not make any contracts.

Mr. DENT. They can suggest contracts, and they can suggest what ought to be done in the way of aircraft production, and they can suggest what new contracts should be made. In other words, they lead up to the contracts. They have dealings with similar boards in other countries for the purpose of determining what is best for all these nations to do.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I suggest, unless the gentleman from Illinois wants to continue his thought—

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that, with the billions of dollars that we are appropriating and which I am for, this $100,000 is a mere bagatelle, and yet I would like to know how it is to be used. I suggest that the gentleman add to his bill a direction that this board, which is created and becomes an official board for some purpose—just what its jurisdiction would be I do not know—that it be required to report to Congress once a year as to the roster of the civil employees, what the civil employees get, what the experts get, what the clerks get, and how much is paid for rent. We are constituting a great many organizations for the expenditure of money. I wish that that provision, or a similar one, could be put on every bill that creates a new set of officers to expend Government money.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that after all this bill does not create any new function or agency of functioning in the conduct of the aircraft business or the industrial aspects of aviation in the present war. All the agency contemplated by the bill, all authority granted apparently in the bill are now exercised under Executive order, under the blanket provision in the national-defense act, which provided for a Council of National Defense. As the gentleman knows, there is a certain unavoidable looseness about that designation by Executive order and the formation of committees, one dependent on another. It is found to be peculiarly embarrassing when these men make contracts with other agencies of foreign countries, when it is found that they are not recognized and identified with a positive legal status.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, it gives them—

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. "A local habitation and a name."

Mr. CANNON. A local habitation and a name, without any additional power. I say it with the highest respect that it gives them a status in society.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, the word "dignity" can be grossly abused, either facetiously or otherwise. The word "dignity" as recently employed on the floor was to signify that recognized identity of a legal status which in and of itself is dignity. It is not for formal effect, but practical effect, in order that there may be assurance between the parties to the contract that there is reciprocity not only in authority but in power to carry it into effect.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Is not the Committee of National Defense a committee under authority of law?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. It is a committee under actual authority of the statute.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; as far as the words "Committee of National Defense," but as far as the bureaus or committees and their functions and agencies into which it has resolved itself, they were not named in the statute, but are changed from time to time as the exigencies of the situation require. The personnel also changes with them. The foreign Governments do not want to deal with intangible things, although based on the law and made with men acting in good faith.

Mr. NORTON. The men in the Aviation Department in the Council of National Defense go to foreign countries and have back of them a council of the national defense. It seems to me that this is what the legislation does for the most part. Does the gentleman know the number of men at the present time who have been assigned from the Army or the Navy to work in the Aircraft Section?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not.

Mr. NORTON. Well, let us say there are a hundred men down there in the Aviation Section.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I hope the gentleman does not confuse this with the regular administrative agency in the Department of War, which has in charge the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps?

Mr. NORTON. No; I mean the section that Mr. Coffin is in charge of. About how many men are there in the bureau that is to take the place of this?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. NORTON. For illustration, we will say there are 100.

Mr. DENT. There is nothing like that number.

Mr. NORTON. Well, make it 50. When this legislation is enacted these 50 men are sent back to the Army and the Navy, and under this appropriation 50 other men are placed in their stead.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is if the gentleman's hypothesis is correct, but I do not like to argue a question upon hypothesis.

Mr. NORTON. But the gentleman can not give us any information, and somebody ought to have it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That question is not altogether involved here. There was to be no particular change in the constituted identity of the people. These committees will exist whether we enact this legislation or not. The President has authority to administer these functions in the Navy and War Departments in such a manner as occasion requires for the practical needs of the service. We are only putting the legal approbation upon a certain body which up to this time has been of a desultory character, and any change in the personnel hinges upon such considerations as the necessities seem to demand.

The work is already being done and authority is already being exercised, and no more authority is being granted by this statute.

Mr. NORTON. If there is no change in the personnel a number of these men employed by the Navy and the other bureau will be employed by this new board?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No; I think I am quite safe in stating to the gentleman that they do not contemplate either a change in policy or, doubtless, with practically the same effect, any change in personnel, except the incidental changes. Without wearying the House any more, I think the general effect is, after all, simply in substance the same as putting a twin coupler on a hydrant, so that the water out of one stream can be put to two uses much better than to try to draw from two hydrants for the purpose. The Army and the Navy can buy together, can contract together, and can make arrangements together in this kind of way, and the two streams will be put to their separate uses, having been drawn from one source. It is a standardization, a systematization. One of the functions which this board is to exercise abroad, which was rather lightly touched upon here as being diplomatic, is a practical one and one that I know our business experience would suggest must have some basis in real authority. Our Government is trying to standardize the aircraft used in its European work as much as may be possible under the circumstances, and to do that means entering into not only official but business relations in which, as the gentleman and I know, every man sitting down at the table inquires right off what the other man's authority is and how far it is binding and whether he can trust to it. That is the only reason.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, in order to meet the suggestion, which I think is a good one, made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I ask unanimous consent to amend section 5 by striking out the period after the word "services," in line 8, on page 6—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that the gentleman might offer his amendment for information in advance of consent being secured.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the bill so that at the end of section 5 strike out the period after the word "services" and insert a semicolon in its place and add the following proviso:

Provided: That said board shall annually report to Congress the expenses incurred or contracted under this section.

Mr. NORTON. Would the gentleman have any objection to putting in there the words "in detail"?

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman have any objection to this amendment:

Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress on the first day of each regular session of the salaries paid from this appropriation to clerks and employees by grades and the number in each such grade.

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to that, but I think it ought to go further and show how much rent is paid and how much other expenses. I thought my language covered it all.

Mr. STAFFORD. The only question is whether it would require them to make a report in detail.

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to that, and I have no pride of opinion about my language.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of expanding and coordinating the industrial activities relating to aircraft or parts of aircraft produced for any purpose in the United States and to facilitate generally the development of air service, a board is hereby created to be known as the Aircraft Board, hereinafter referred to as the board.

The board shall be composed of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, the Chief Constructor of the Navy, and not more than seven other members of recognized capacity and achievement along industrial lines, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The board shall elect one of its civilian members as president thereof, and said board and tenure of office of the members thereof shall continue during the pleasure of the President, but not longer than six months after the present war. The civilian members of the board shall receive a compensation of $7,500 each per annum.

The board is hereby empowered to supervise and direct, in accordance with the requirements prescribed or approved by the Departments of War and Navy, respectively, the purchase, production, and manufacture of aircraft, engines, and all ordnance and instruments used in connection therewith, and accessories and materials therefor, including the purchase, lease, acquisition, or construction of plants for the manufacture of aircraft, engines, and accessories.

The board is also empowered to employ, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, such clerks and other employees as may be necessary to the conduct of its business, including such technical experts and advisers as may be found necessary, and to fix their salaries. Such salaries shall conform to those usually paid by the Government for similar service: Provided, That by unanimous approval of the board higher compensation may be paid to technical experts and advisers. The board may rent suitable offices in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, purchase necessary office equipment and supplies, including scientific publications and printing, and may incur necessary administrative and contingent expenses, and for all of the expenses enumerated in this paragraph there shall be allotted by the Chief Signal Officer of the Army for the fiscal year 1917 and 1918 the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, from any appropriation now existing for or hereinafter made to the Signal Corps of the Army, and such appropriation is hereby made available for these purposes: Provided, That, except upon the joint and concurrent approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, there shall not be established or maintained under the board any office or organization duplicating or replacing, in whole or in part, any office or organization now existing that can be properly established or maintained by appropriations made for, or available for, the military or naval services.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That for the purpose of expanding and coordinating the industrial activities relating to aircraft, or parts of aircraft, produced for any purpose in the United States, and to facilitate generally the development of air service, a board is hereby created, to be known as the Aircraft Board, hereinafter referred to as the board.

Sec. 2. That the board shall number not more than nine in all, and shall include a civilian chairman, the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, and two other officers of the Army, to be appointed by the Secretary of War; the Chief Constructor of the Navy and two other officers of the Navy, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; and two additional civilian members. The chairman and civilian members shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Sec. 3. That said board and tenure of office of the members thereof shall continue during the pleasure of the President, but not longer than six months after the present war. The civilian members of the board shall serve without compensation.

Sec. 4. That the board is hereby empowered, under the direction and control of and as authorized by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, on behalf of the Departments of War and Navy, to supervise and direct, in accordance with the requirements prescribed or approved by the respective departments, the purchase, production, and manufacture of aircraft, engines, and all ordnance and instruments used in connection therewith, and accessories and materials therefor, including the purchase, lease, acquisition, or construction of plants for the manufacture of aircraft, engines, and accessories: Provided, That the board may make recommendations as to contracts and their distribution in connection with the foregoing, but every contract shall be made by the already constituted authorities of the respective departments.

Sec. 5. That the board is also empowered to employ, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, such clerks and other employees as may be necessary to the conduct of its business, including such technical experts and advisers as may be found necessary, and to fix their salaries. Such salaries shall conform to those usually paid by the Government for similar service: Provided, That by unanimous approval of the board higher compensation may be paid to technical experts and advisers. The board may rent suitable offices in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, purchase necessary office equipment and supplies, including scientific publications and printing, and may incur necessary administrative and contingent expenses, and for all of the expenses enumerated in this paragraph there shall be allotted by the Chief Signal Officer of the Army for the fiscal year 1917 and 1918 the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, from any appropriation now existing for or hereinafter made to the Signal Corps of the Army, and such appropriation is hereby made available for these purposes: Provided further, That except upon the joint and concurrent approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy there shall not be established or maintained under the board any office or organization duplicating or replacing, in whole or in part, any office or organization now existing that can be properly established or maintained by appropriations made for or available for the military or naval services.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Insert at the end of the amendment the following:

"Provided further, That a report shall be made to Congress on the first day of each regular session of the salaries paid from this appropriation to clerks and employees by grades and the number in each such grade."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I shall withdraw my proposed amendment, and I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer as a substitute the following:

Provided, That such board shall make a detailed itemized report to Congress of its expenditures under the appropriation hereby authorized on the first Monday of December of each year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have to reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If we use the language suggested and compel a detailed report, there may be some item that for military necessity it would be unwise to print. I think the gentleman better specifically enumerate the kind of items he wants reported upon.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition upon my amendment to the amendment. It is desired, I believe, by the chairman of the committee that there should be some report as to the expenditure of this $100,000. All that we have attempted in prior bills is to have a report made as to the amounts paid to clerks and employees. The amendment I propose covers that purpose, no more, no less. It is not a burden upon the board to make that report, and it will safeguard the Government to make the report so that we may know whether any extravagant salaries have been paid.

Mr. DENT. I have stated to the gentleman I am perfectly willing to accept his amendment.

Mr. Sisson. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield.

Mr. Sisson. I do not care to whom I direct the inquiry, either to the gentleman who offers the amendment or the chairman of the committee, but in this particular case the amount of money expended will be very much greater in other lines than in the classified service employees. The gentleman's amendment is all right in so far as it goes, but in the expenditure of this vast amount of money that will be spent by this board Congress would like to have—

Mr. LONGWORTH. This only applies to the $100,000.

Mr. Sisson. Oh, it only applies to the $100,000. I suppose most of that would go to salaries?

Mr. STAFFORD. It would be largely used in the employment of salaried employees, including technical experts. The phraseology is broad enough to bring them into those positions.

Mr. Sisson. Well, the only one suggestion I have to make is that the gentleman should put in the words "and rents paid."

Mr. STAFFORD. We get that information anyway, without any provision, and I do not think it is really essential.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NORTON as a substitute to the amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: After the period, line 8, page 6, insert the following:

"Provided, That said board shall annually make to Congress a detailed itemized report of the expenditures made under the appropriations authorized for said aircraft board."

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we all agree that the report should be made. I find that in many of the departments, unless a detailed report is required to be made, the report is made in gross of the total amount expended. Such a report gives little or no information to the Members of Congress or to the committees to which the subject is usually referred. I believe this report, if made at all, should be made in detail.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I will.

Mr. HULBERT. What provision is made for a detailed report respecting the $640,000,000 carried in a previous bill for aviation?

Mr. NORTON. Well, there was not any.

Mr. HULBERT. Does the gentleman feel it is more important to require a detailed statement of an item involving $100,000,000 than it was to provide for a comprehensive report in regard to the expenditure of $640,000,000?

Mr. NORTON. I think it is well Congress should know in detail how this $100,000 is spent for clerical work and hire.

Mr. HULBERT. Even though no provision is made as to how the $640,000,000 is spent?

Mr. NORTON. I do not think there is any analogy between that case and the one under discussion.

Mr. DENT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. DENT. I have no objection either to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota or the gentleman from Wisconsin, except that I would suggest to the gentleman from North Dakota that his amendment should be limited to expenditure under section 5, because that is the only appropriation carried in this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the phraseology might require a report of expenditures under the $640,000,000 appropriation, which would certainly not be to the interest of the Government.

Mr. NORTON. If the gentlemen think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin will bring to the Congress the report that all seem to agree we should have, and I feel we should have it, I will move to withdraw my substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from North Dakota withdraws his substitute, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the committee amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHALLENBERGER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, as the author of House bill 7615, which is the counterpart of the bill just passed, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, under general debate on the soldiers' insurance bill the gentleman from New York [Mr. Landon] expressed his belief that the war in Europe would soon end. He gave as his reasons the attitude of the Reichstag toward peace as reported in the press. To an interrogatory which I propounded as to what significance should be attached to an expression by resolution of that body of a well-defined desire for peace, his reply was that recent events in Germany showed that the Government did not dare to prevent the people from discussing international questions.

Mr. Speaker, this interrogatory and its answer must be judged in the light of the German system of government. It at once accentuates the President's reference to the Imperial Government as an irresponsible government, a statement from the standpoint of political science entirely true, but which is not generally understood. There is no parallel in the past from which we can study this system. It is unique, or as the logician would call it, sui generis. It is called a constitutional government because its organic law is the lengthy constitution of 78 articles proclaimed the last day of the year 1870. Yet its authority is neither from the people, nor from the States, but from the monarchs of the States composing the confederation. It is spoken of as the German Confederation, but in reality it is not a confederation at all, nothing more than a union of rulers, not one of whom holds his position by the will of the people over whom he rules, and held together not so much by any instrument of government as by the cementing influence of personal necessity.

The German Empire, as it has been known since 1871, is composed of 25 States, 22 of which are purely monarchical, and 3 free cities called Republics.

Political thinkers are not agreed on the historical evolution of the Empire. One school contends the Empire was established by act of the people. Another, by act of the States. It is nearer the exact fact to declare it the act of the hereditary sovereigns of the people, acting as heads of the States. In thinking of the Empire we do not think of citizens, but of States, and in thinking of the government of the Empire we think neither of the citizens nor the States, but of the heads of the States totally irresponsible to the people over whom they reign. While some authorities hold that the Empire is not a league of princes, but a confederation of States, it will not be seriously contended that the government is expressed in the will of the princes, and neither by the people of the confederation nor of the States.

A study of the confederation raises the question age old, whether there is a double sovereignty here. The Empire must be sovereign in some matters if not all. Are the States individually sovereign in any matters? Here is the speculative field that produced in our own country in its early days Hamilton and Jefferson, and later Webster and Calhoun. It is generally conceded that Imperial German sovereignty is lodged in the Empire to the total exclusion of State sovereignty. However, national sovereignty in Germany is but an evolution of State sovereignty in Prussia, since the Empire is but an overgrowth of Prussianism, as will be noted. As Bismarck declared, Germany is but an expanded Prussia. The basis of confederation was neither national nor federal, although it is a make-believe of both. It is not national since the people are not the source of authority. It is not federal in that the States are unequal, the 24 subject to the rule of Prussia.

The Constitution recognizes the three functions of government—legislative, executive, and judicial—but does not separate them either in function or organization, as is done in this country. As is well understood by all students of political science, the difference in forms of governments is not in the functions recognized, since in function all are alike, but in the authority permitted or assumed by the various departments exercising the function. All governments exercise what Blackstone was pleased to designate intelligence, good will, and power; intelligence to make the laws, good will to interpret them, and power to enforce them. The despotisms combine all these powers, legislative, judicial, and executive, in the monarch. The pure democracies concentrate them in the people, while the republican governments, like our own, zealously maintain a separation of functions. This one feature is the most distinguishing item in the American system, which differentiates us from all other governments in the world.

Germany has the three functions, but not the three separate organizations. There is no such thing as the President, the Congress, or the Supreme Court.

There is an executive, the Prussian King, the German Kaiser, who is vastly more than a mere executive.

There is no congress or parliament, but there are two entirely separate bodies, the Bundesrath and Reichstag, as separate in both organization and function as are the President and Congress in this country.

There is no such thing as a separate constitutional judiciary as the Supreme Court of this country, but there is a statutory institution called the imperial court, created by law six years after the constitution was proclaimed.

A study of the American republican system will throw little, if any, light upon the study of the German monarchical system. First in importance will come the Kaiser, who is not the Emperor of Germany in the sense that he was selected by the Empire as its head, or has any authority as the Kaiser over the various States which make up the confederation. He is King of Prussia, with the title of German Kaiser, to represent the Empire before the world with specific powers specified in the constitution, which make him responsible to no one. These powers were all found in the head of the North German Confederation of 1866, of which Prussia was the chief and dominant State. In 1871, when the Southern Confederation joined the Northern to form the present German Empire, the powers of the King of Prussia were given to the German Kaiser by virtue of making the King of Prussia the Kaiser of Germany.

As such the head of the German Government dominates the upper and lower houses of the imperial scheme by possessing the power incorporated in the constitution, article 12, to convene, to open, to prorogue, and to close both the Bundesrath and the Reichstag. He has the additional power continued from the Prussian régime to engross and publish the imperial law, to appoint and dismiss the chancellor, the heads of the various departments under the chancellor, to supervise the administration of the laws of the Empire. He has plenary control over both the purse of the nation in matters of taxes and customs, as well as the sword of the nation in his absolute control of both the army and the navy. He even has the power of carrying out what is called an "execution" when a State refuses to accede to imperial decrees by using the military and naval forces against the State.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the Kaiser have control of the army and navy in time of peace or only in time of war?

Mr. FESS. He has control in time of peace the same as in time of war, so far as the constitution names him.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood that he had no jurisdiction over the army and navy under the constitution of Germany except after the declaration of war, and that the army and navy were under the kings of the various States.

Mr. FESS. I think not. There is no such thing in Germany as a State army. There is an army, which is really the Prussian Army, but in the name of the Empire, and the Kaiser has the power not only over the army but he can declare war, providing that it is a defensive war, and whether it is a defensive war or not will be entirely due to his judgment. In one sense the gentleman from Illinois is correct. In times of peace he is somewhat restricted by special military treaties. He has at all times as commander in chief the right of inspection and may declare a state of siege, mobilize the army, and appoint all the officers, high and low. All legislation for the army is imperial.

All these monarchical powers appertaining to the Prussian King under the North German Bund are exercised by the German Kaiser, since the Empire is but Prussia expanded. To give them the semblance of constitutional sanction, these powers are enumerated in the constitution of 1870, but it must not be understood that they emanate from that instrument. If they did not antedate that organic law they are at least coeval with it and do not depend upon it.

One school of German writers claim that since the Kaiser is not monarch of the Empire he can not exercise any power not granted to him by the constitution of the Empire. Technically this is correct. The Kaiser is defined in the constitution and must remain within its limits. But that does not limit him as the real monarch of the Empire, whose position comes not from the constitution but from his position as head of Prussia, who is made by the constitution the head of the Empire. The King of Prussia for all imperial purposes antedates the constitution.

It is claimed that the constitution did not give Prussia as such any authority over the Empire or over the other German princes or their States. It is claimed the German Empire is a nation whose sovereignty is not in the Kaiser but in the allied States, 25 in number. It is also claimed that the voice of these allied governments is heard in the Bundesrath, which is co-ordinate with the Kaiser in the imperial scheme. In that case it is urged the Kaiser can not exercise power from his own right, but must be limited to such power as is granted him by the constitution. In other words, his powers are not original, but derivative. While this theory is technically correct, it is logically incorrect and practically untrue.

The Kaiser is neither appointed nor elected by any power. He is therefore not subject to removal. He is responsible to no one—absolutely irresponsible if not irresponsible. He is subject in no wise to any power above him. His position is supreme by virtue of his kingship in Prussia. The question of succession is not within the domain either of the people of the various kingdoms and principalities or the States which make up the confederation or the Empire itself, but wholly within the domain of Prussia, which is and has been under the house of Hohenzollerns for centuries, over which even the people of Prussia have no control. Over this house the States of the confederation have taken collectively no power. On the other hand, the constitution is so framed as to forbid any sort of interference with the ruling régime in Prussia, and expressly stipulates the right of Prussia to prevent any amendment to the constitution by allowing 14 votes to negative any amendment to the constitution.

Prussia's dominance is guaranteed in double authority; first by giving her complete control of the Bundesrath, the nearest coordinate power with the Kaiser, and to her King complete control over the purse and the sword of the Empire.

The first result is accomplished by giving Prussia 17 votes in addition to the 3 from Alsace-Lorraine under the King in the Bundesrath.

In the second place by requiring the president of the Bundesrath to be a Prussian, which makes it necessary for the chancellor likewise to be a Prussian. Again, by requiring all the chairmanships of committees, save the foreign relations committee to be Prussian, and even in the latter committee, which goes to Bavaria, Prussia is supreme, since all of its work must pass through the hands of the chancellor, who is the head of the Bundesrath, and must therefore be Prussian.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand that the Reichstag has no power in amending the constitution; only the Bundesrath?

Mr. FESS. Only the Bundesrath, and it can be defeated by 14 votes. The Reichstag has absolutely no power over the constitution or practically speaking over legislation. I will get to that later on.

Then, again, by permitting 14 votes in the Bundesrath to defeat any amendment to the constitution, as well as by allowing the Prussian vote to be decisive in certain financial and military legislation without reference to the votes of other members of the Bundesrath, no matter how numerous.

In other words, in certain matters of legislation the Prussian representation in the Bundesrath can prevent any modification in legislation, no matter how many votes are cast from the representatives of the other States.

All these Prussian guarantees and powers are embodied in the constitution of the Empire. It was Bismarck's theory of irresponsible government exercised by the monarch in whom was concentrated power necessary to maintain order and development. Prussia was his ideal, and the Empire was to be merely an expanded Prussia, an ideal many times officially declared by Germany's first and greatest chancellor.

As was said, the constitution recognizes the three functions of government—legislative, executive, and judicial—but does not separate them as in this country.

The legislative is ostensibly bicameral, but really unicameral. It is bicameral in that it recognizes an upper and a lower body in legislation. It is unicameral since the lower house (Reichstag) is totally subservient to the upper (Bundesrath).

The upper body pretends to be federal, representing entities of a confederation, but it is not so in the sense that it is either equality of influence of the States or deliberative in character. It neither represents the people nor the States, but is the puppet of the princes of the States whose delegates they are, and whose instructions they must obey in all matters of legislation.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PLATT. The Bundesrath and the Reichstag do not meet together as the two Houses of Parliament in Great Britain?

Mr. FESS. The Bundesrath can be in session when the Reichstag is in vacation, but the Reichstag can not be in session while the Bundesrath is in vacation, and, in addition, the Bundesrath members have seats in the Reichstag assembly, so that any member of the Bundesrath can go down to the Reichstag, speak in his place, and press an issue in the lower house—a very unusual performance from the standpoint of our system.

The upper chamber of the German Empire, the Bundesrath, is composed of 61 members, selected by the princes, save those from the free cities, which are selected by the cities, and the three from Alsace-Lorraine, which are selected by the Emperor.

The three members from Alsace-Lorraine since 1911 have seats in the Bundesrath, but have no opinions of their own, because they are selected by the German Kaiser.

These members are chosen from the 25 States which compose the German Empire—four kingdoms, six grand duchies, five duchies, seven principalities, and the three free cities. The representation is as follows:

Kingdoms—Prussia 17, Bavaria 6, Saxony 4, Wurttemberg 4, or a total of 31.

Grand Duchies—Baden 3, Hesse 3, Mecklenburg-Schwerin 2, Saxe-Weimar 2, Mecklenburg-Schleitz 1, Oldenburg 1, or a total of 12.

Duchies—Brunswick 1, Saxe-Meiningen 1, Saxe-Altenburg 1, Saxe-Coburg-Gotha 1, Anhalt 1, or a total of 5.

Principalities—Schwarzburg-Sonderhausen 1, Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt 1, Waldeck 1, Reuss Alterer Seine 1, Reuss Jungerer Seine 1, Lippe 1, Schaumburg-Lippe 1, a total of 7.

Free cities—Hamburg 1, Lubeck 1, Bremen 1, total 3.

In this total of 58 members should be added the three members appointed by the Kaiser from the imperial domain of Alsace-Lorraine.

This house of 61 members, it must be kept in mind, are chosen by the princes of the respective States, except those from the free cities and Alsace. They are instructed and are therefore bound in their votes. This body is not therefore deliberative, is not popular in that the people have no voice whatever. It is neither national nor federal. It allows the States to express themselves as dominated by the princes. It is not State equality as in our Senate, but each State's vote is cast as a unit. That is, Prussia's vote will never count less than 17, even though only one member is present. It will never be divided, as the unit rule prevails. This feature, in addition to the three votes selected by the Emperor and two others under his absolute control, makes Prussia supreme in the upper house.

The head of this body is the imperial chancellor, appointed by the Kaiser. He must, therefore, not only be a member of the Bundesrath but must be a Prussian member.

The chancellor is subject to removal, but only by the Kaiser. He appoints the various heads of the departments which in other countries would be called the cabinet or ministry. These appointments are made under the direction of the Kaiser, and with the chancellor are all subject to removal by the Kaiser. The constitution gives the Kaiser power over the Bundesrath to summon, open, and close it. However, in practice it has become a continuous body. The Kaiser does not initiate legislation as the Emperor, but as King of Prussia he can and does direct legislation in the upper body. As the head of this house is the chancellor, the imperial minister, the Kaiser virtually dictates legislation in this body. While a majority vote of those present carries legislation, there is one significant exception—on legislation on military and naval affairs, tariff and taxation matters, the vote of Prussia decides, no matter how few there be present or how many from other States, Prussia decides if her vote is in favor of the status quo.

That gives Prussia absolute control over the money of the country, the taxes, and the army and navy of the country. The Bundesrath has three functions. We have but one function here. But there the Bundesrath has three. It makes laws, helps to administer them, and executes them.

It is the chief legislative branch of the Government. As such it initiates most of the measures and has plenary authority in granting the sanction of the law. That is, it always gives final action, no matter whether the measure originated in the Bundesrath or the Reichstag. In either case it must be finally acted upon by the upper house. If, for example, a measure originated in the Bundesrath, went to the Reichstag, was passed with or without amendment, it must go back to the Bundesrath, which may reject it. The final action, therefore, in all legislation lies with the Prussian princes through their representatives.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes. I gladly yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. If the Bundesrath originates legislation and it goes over to the Reichstag and they amend it, is it in the power of the Bundesrath to strike out the amendment when it comes back and pass the law as originally passed by the Bundesrath?

Mr. FESS. It is.

Mr. MADDEN. So that the action of the Reichstag is nullified?

Mr. FESS. Yes. I might say to the membership that really that is why I am giving this study. There has been some misconception uttered often in this country, to the effect that the Reichstag in Germany is a legislative body of great consequence.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PLATT. The Reichstag sitting, with members of the Bundesrath sitting in their seats in the Reichstag, can pass the legislation without its going to the Bundesrath as a separate body?

Mr. FESS. No. It must go to the Bundesrath, because, as I understand it, the members of the Bundesrath sitting in the Reichstag are not regarded as constituting a session of the Bundesrath.

Mr. PLATT. Do they vote in the Reichstag?

Mr. FESS. They speak and press their measures, but the vote can not be overcome by adding the Bundesrath vote to that of the Reichstag. The vote is left with the Reichstag members.

Mr. PLATT. Their votes are separate?

Mr. FESS. Yes. So I understand it in practice.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague permit another question?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has not the Reichstag certain powers with reference to the appropriation of money?

Mr. FESS. Not as in our case. They do not originate the bills for raising revenue nor have the control over appropriations. The laws having connection with the army and navy, taxes and customs are under the control of the Bundesrath. The Reichstag has no such powers as we have in this House; just the opposite to ours.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. LONDON. I think it would be in place to ask here whether the population of Prussia does not constitute a majority of the population in Germany?

Mr. FESS. Yes; 65 per cent.

Mr. LONDON. So that in the ordinary course of events, if the people of Prussia were united they would control in legislation?

Mr. FESS. Yes. If they could get rid of the German Kaiser, the people would have some chance.

Another very significant feature of the privileges of the members of this house is the right of each member at any time to present his measure in person in the Reichstag. The latter body has no authority to deny or even qualify this right. Thus the House of Princes under the domination of Prussia reaches down into the house of the people, so called. The competence of this upper house is not based upon the constitution, but is independent of its provisions in many respects, since it does not owe its creation to the constitution. It can not be reduced by imperial law so long as Prussia declines to allow it.

Mr. Speaker, recently much has been said about parliamentary reforms. The Emperor has been quoted as promising them. Much has also been said of the will of the German people as voiced in the Reichstag. Indeed, no mention is made in the press of the powerful Bundesrath; it is always the hopes from the Reichstag. Even in the Emperor's reply to the Pope he mentions the wish for peace as expressed in the resolution of the Reichstag of last July.

This naturally leaves the American citizen under the impression that the Reichstag is in character like the House of Commons, or the Chamber of Deputies, or the House of Representatives. This is not true. The Reichstag represents neither the States nor the people of the States. It represents the people of all the States in the sense that every citizen of the Empire who has the right of suffrage may participate in the composition of this legislative body. The citizen of Prussia may vote in any one of the 25 States in which he may be on election day. In this body no State lines are respected. Even the representative does not necessarily have to come from the State which elected him. However, that is the general practice.

It is the popular body which answered to the general demands of the forties of the last century when all Europe was in a democratic commotion.

It consists of 397 members chosen by subdistricts or election circles. Two hundred and thirty-two of the members come from Prussia. These election districts are outgrown and are consequently very inequitable.

In parts of East Prussia the average number of votes in a district is 121,000, while in Berlin it is 345,000. Twelve of the most populous districts contain nearly 2,000,000 votes, while the same number of the least populous contain less than one-sixteenth of that number.

The same inequality is shown in the character of party division which appears in the Reichstag, the only place it does appear. While there are no less than 10 groups or parties represented in the Reichstag, the normal or rational line of demarkation is that which differentiates the conservative from the radical. The latter is shown in the growth of the Social Democrats, which have exercised a powerful influence since the dissolution of the Reichstag in 1906.

The election in 1907, brought about by the recent dissolution, returned a marked increase of the more radical element in the electorate. The Reichstag elected that year terminated in 1912, when the Social Democrats increased their membership from 50 to 110. Their popular vote was considerably over one-third of the entire vote of the Empire. One of the issues in the growth of this element is that of militarism, which the Socialists opposed.

The Social Democrats and the Conservatives stand at the extremes of party divisions. The Clericals and National Liberals stand between and hold the balance of power.

You never hear of party division in the Bundesrath. There is no chance for division of opinion. They are the spokesmen of the princes who selected them to speak for them, and there is no such thing as party division in that body.

The political composition of the Reichstag as it now appears, which may be changed in the elections which are soon to occur, is as follows: Liberals, 92; Clericals, 123; Conservatives, 72; Social Democrats, 110. Of the 397 members, 243 are rural and 154 urban. As to profession, 88 are agricultural, 5 industry, 17 commerce, 21 trade, 3 unskilled labor, 250 professional, and 13 men of leisure.

Two hundred and six of the 397 have an academic education, 180 are Protestant in religion, 130 Catholic, 70 Dissidents, mostly Socialists, and 7 Jews.

This body is fairly representative, and did it possess power it would be significant. But as a body it is little more than an expression of diverse opinion with no power to embody it in legislation.

The membership of this House is elected for a term of five years. The electorate is made up of males who have reached the age of 25, with certain specified exceptions. Membership is terminated by expiration of term, by dissolution of Reichstag by Emperor, by voluntary resignation, or by accepting salaried office. Prior to 1906 there was no salary attached to this office. In that year $750, or one-tenth that of the membership of this House, was fixed by law as the salary of members, in addition to free transportation on Government railroads.

The Reichstag can not come together on its own motion. It must be summoned by the Emperor. It must be called together at least once every year. It can not sit in the vacation of the Bundesrath. The Emperor can prorogue and close the Reichstag.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. FESS. I will gladly yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. In what respect is the prorogation of the Reichstag different from that of the English Parliament?

Mr. FESS. There is no difference in the prorogation, but there is another step, I will say to my friend from Wisconsin. The English King can not dissolve the House of Commons, but the Emperor can dissolve the Reichstag. That is a vast difference.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can not the King of England prorogue the Parliament?

Mr. FESS. But prorogation is not dissolution. Prorogation is just simply giving the decree that it must desist, and if it wants it can go to the country and be reelected or defeated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. But when the King exercises that prerogative of proroguing, the same Parliament can not come into existence again unless the King convenes it.

Mr. FESS. Whenever the Government presents a Government measure, the prime minister, who presents it either in person or through the chancellor of the exchequer, knows that he will stand or fall by that measure. If the opposition to him is so powerful that the measure is defeated, then the prime minister has his choice. He can either resign—and if he resigns that is the end of it, for a new ministry will then be formed by the opposition—or he can ask the King to prorogue Parliament, which is equivalent to his doing it, for the King never refuses. And then by the prorogation he goes to the country to have a vote of indorsement or rejection, and when he comes back, if his cause is sustained by the people on the election of a majority in his support, he comes back not for seven years, but for the term simply that was unexpired when the Parliament was prorogued. In the German system, if it is prorogued it is in the same way, only it is not prorogued by the Reichstag or by the request of the Reichstag, but by the Emperor. But when it is dissolved it is totally different. Then they can never come back as members of the old Reichstag. It must be a new Reichstag, and the term is five years from election.

Mr. LONDON. Does not the law provide an election must be held within 60 days after the dissolution of the Reichstag?

Mr. FESS. Yes; and they can come back within 90 days; that is, the Reichstag must be summoned within that time.

Mr. MADDEN. And the King of England would not dare to prorogue Parliament unless asked to do so by the prime minister?

Mr. STAFFORD. History discloses where the King has prorogued Parliament without the call of the prime minister.

Mr. FESS. That was true in the past, but it has not been true since 1688.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue for twenty minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. I am very much obliged to my friend for the time. I wanted to refer to some things that I have here.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PLATT. Just to emphasize what the gentleman just said, is it not a part of the English constitution that the King has no power to prorogue Parliament at the present time?

Mr. FESS. Practically that is true. In other words, in England the power is the Commons as represented by the prime minister. The King is a nondescript; while he is the ruler in name, Lloyd-George is the real ruler just now.

Any business transacted after the prorogation of the Reichstag is void. When the Emperor dissolves the Reichstag it must be by consent of the Bundesrath, which is never refused. When once dissolved it can not again be summoned. The members can not appeal to the country for indorsement. The responsible ministry, so well known in parliamentary countries, especially in England, is unknown in Germany.

A new election will be ordered by the Emperor within two months after dissolution. The newly elected body must be called together within three months.

In recent years the power of dissolution has been frequently exercised, and in many cases to get rid of meddlesome agitators, judged from monarchical standards.

While I admit that the constitution declares that the assent of both the Bundesrath and the Reichstag is necessary for legislation, it must be conceded that the superior power of the Bundesrath in legislation and the authority of the Emperor over the Reichstag leave the latter body little more than a popular debating club, a mere outlet for attenuated enthusiasm, through popular discussion, with no final authority in the law-making function of the Government.

The composition of the Reichstag is colored by the dominance of Prussia, the same as in the Bundesrath. Of the 397 members from the 25 States, 232 come from Prussia, leaving 165 to represent 24 other States, if such can be called representation.

The Prussian idea of government therefore thoroughly permeates this lower house. The Prussian landtag is based upon the tripartite foundation—one-third of its members are chosen by the heaviest taxpayers, beginning with the highest. The second third by the next highest, and the last third by the great mass of voters.

In not fewer than 2,214 precincts a third of the direct taxes were paid by a single individual. In 1,703 precincts the first class consists of but two persons, while in most cases the last third consists of the masses. In 1907 it was stated that 3 per cent of the electorate chose the first three, less than 10 per cent the second, and the last third by 87.5 per cent. That means that at least two-thirds of the representatives were chosen by less than 10 per cent of the voters. That plan insures the control in legislation to the wealth of the Empire.

This is Prussianism as it now obtains and is sweeping over Europe, sword in hand. It is the Bismarck idea, which was inaugurated in the Empire in 1871, when King William I of Prussia was made Emperor of Germany. It was the same idea when William II, the present King of Prussia, and under the constitution, the German Kaiser, in the second year of his reign, dismissed the iron chancellor who had directed imperial affairs under William I and Frederick III, from the birth of the Empire, and who ordered Caprivi to embody his will in a continuance of this imperial régime. It is the same irresponsible theory which was carried on by Prince Hohenlohe, as chancellor, from 1894 to 1900, by Prince Buelow, his successor, from 1900 to 1908, by Dr. Bethmann Hollweg, from 1908 to 1917, and is now being enforced by the present chancellor, who at the most promises to be nothing more than an animated register.

It should not be overlooked that all the chancellors the German Empire has known have served the present German Kaiser, with whom we are at war, and whose Prussian views of government are well embodied in the system of irresponsible government as expressed in the Prussian landtag, the imperial Bundesrath, as well as in the power of the nullification of the legislative function of the nondescript Reichstag, and imperial dominance of army and navy, as well as the administration through the chancellors.

In other words, the power of the Emperor is embodied in the fact that he has not only control of imperial legislation but that he is virtually the head of the Bundesrath and nullifies the possibility of legislation in the lower house.

All of these chancellors have been his subservient agents, so well illustrated in the career of Hollweg and the present Michaelis.

All the delegates in the Bundesrath have been rendered mere babes in toy land, manipulated without interruption by an imperial hand to whom they must respond with the regularity of a Punch and Judy performance.

The representatives of the popular branch, the Reichstag, occupy positions without decisive action. Theirs is form without substance, name without reality. Their constitutional right of interpellation signifies nothing, since neither the Kaiser nor his imperial representative, the chancellor, is under any obligation to reply. When our President has come to speak to us from the desk here we have frequently heard Members discuss among themselves the question whether he would submit to interrogatories from the floor. That was not intended as an ugly reference. That was simply referring to the custom of responsible ministers, when a speech is delivered from the throne, that the membership are permitted to present leading questions for answer, and upon which action might be had by resolution. Now, as that is not done in Germany, the right of interpellation in the German Reichstag amounts to nothing, because the chancellor is not required to answer, and if he says, "I will answer next week," or refuses to answer, he is acting wholly within his authority. The power is in name only, not in reality. This technically closes the right of resolution, which is the real purpose of interpellation. The privilege of discussion of international questions such as indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], for whose ability I have great admiration, goes no further than a mere empty privilege. When I asked my friend what importance we should attach to any resolution that the Reichstag might pass, his reply was that the German Government would not dare deny to that body the discussion of international questions.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LONDON. I do not recall the exact language that I used, but I wish the gentleman would get it and quote it in his printed speech. It seems to me the substance of my answer was that when judged by German standards the assumption by the Reichstag of the right to dictate terms in international matters was revolutionary, that it was of the greatest importance, because of the fact that they had theretofore exercised no such power or prerogative. In other words, I took that very fact, that the Reichstag had assumed to speak in international relations, as being of the utmost significance, and if the gentleman will be kind enough to put in his remarks my exact answer I will be glad to have him do so. I think that was the substance of it.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will be satisfied, I will allow what he says now to go into my remarks as his position intended to be conveyed. I did not fully interpret what the gentleman said. I think, too, that if it is revolutionary it might lead to something, but my knowledge of the German character does not give me any hope that there is much revolutionary spirit in Germany.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. If in point of fact they have no real power to legislate and the only power is to organize revolutions, as I judge from what the gentleman from New York has said, why that power exists anyway without regard to the Reichstag.

Mr. FESS. Certainly. Members of the House of Representatives are apt to confuse the Russian idea with the English idea.

Mr. MADDEN. With the army under the control of the Kaiser and the revenues under the control of the Kaiser, a revolution by the 397 members of the Reichstag would not amount to much.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It would not get very far.

Mr. FESS. I agree with that statement. Now, if the membership will permit me to continue, the Reichstag contains no element of authority, but on the other hand the Emperor may, as in the past, dissolve the body to avoid embarrassing discussion, even though it is of no consequence, as I think my good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] did a while ago. They are apt to judge German development in the light of British history. They may be prone to think of the Reichstag in terms of the House of Commons.

It must not be overlooked that English constitutional development has been an evolution of centuries. For 600 years the real power was the King. It is doubtful whether any King in England ever ruled the British people as the present Kaiser rules the German people. Then, for 200 years it was the House of Lords. But for the last 300 years it has been increasingly the Commons. When I say that I mean the effectiveness of his influence over his people. This last stage, the control of the House of Commons in English history has to its credit the revolution of 1688, the great state papers, such as the bill of rights, the petition of rights, and the agreement of the people; the great events, such as the American Revolution, the best expression of which was the Declaration of Independence, and the numerous reforms since 1776.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall that about five or six years ago a struggle took place in the Reichstag for the responsibility of the chancellor to the Reichstag. As I recall it, it came very near being successful. I can not recall the details, but perhaps the gentleman may refresh my memory more fully as to what occurred on that occasion. There has been a struggle going on in the Reichstag for the recognition of the principle of the responsibility of the chancellor to the Reichstag rather than to the Kaiser.

Mr. FESS. Of course, there is no possibility of that except through revolution, because the chancellor is appointed by the Kaiser, and as such he is the head of the Bundesrath and also a member of it, as well as a Prussian. He is not a member of the Reichstag, but simply goes down to the Reichstag as the mouthpiece, not of the Bundesrath, but of the King, whose imperial representative he is.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall quite distinctly, although I do not remember the detailed facts, of the struggle going on in Germany for the recognition of the primary right to have the chancellor responsible to the Reichstag.

Mr. FESS. There is a vast amount of discussion among the Social Democrats and out among the people.

Mr. STAFFORD. It came very near to development in fulfillment.

Mr. FESS. It was because the parties were so nearly divided. There are 110 Social Democrats and the antipodes, the Conservatives, 72, and between them the Liberals and the Nationals, and each one of these parties can make terms with the middle ones. I know to what the gentleman refers, and it was at a time when it appeared that the Social Democrats would get enough support to elect one of their own members president.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Bebel.

Mr. FESS. Yes; Mr. Bebel. They were about to elect him the head of the Reichstag, and would have done it if it had not been for the influence of the chancellor working on other parties. Before the election the Government majority was 89; after the election the opposition had 14 majority.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose they had elected him?

Mr. FESS. It would not have amounted to anything. The peculiar constitution of parties offers a wide field for imperial influence in forming a coalition. In this way, the will of the people may be thwarted. In any case, so long as the present régime continues there is no hope from proposals in the Reichstag.

This democratic movement has seen kings beheaded, rulers dethroned, successions determined, lords decapitated, and commons enthroned. But this evolution must not be confused with modern Prussianism. Whatever be the mollifying and remedial legislation in Germany for the people, and candor must admit it has been stupendous, it has always proceeded from above whatever be the motive back of it. It has ever kept to the forefront the kingly idea, "Kaiser William I not only reigns, but he rules." He is the head of the Nation, the overlord of the Bundesrath, the dissolver of the Reichstag, the head of imperial legislation, with plenary power over tax and finance; the head of the army, to whom every soldier takes a personal oath; the head of the navy; and in all things responsible to no one save his will.

It must not be forgotten that every soldier in the German Army takes an oath of allegiance to the Kaiser and not to the German Empire. His position was expressed in a speech at Bremen in 1897, seven years after his accession. At least this gives the world the conception of German imperial authority as understood by the head of the German Empire. This conception is impressed upon the individual soldiers and sailors when the oath of personal allegiance to the Kaiser is administered.

In the Bremen speech in 1897 the Kaiser said:

If we have been able to accomplish what has been accomplished it is due above all things to the fact that our house possesses a tradition by virtue of which we consider that we have been appointed by God to preserve and direct for their own welfare the people over whom he has given us power.

As late as 1910 at Königsberg he said:

It was in this spot that my grandfather in his own right placed the crown upon his head, insisting once again that it was bestowed upon him by the grace of God alone, and not by parliaments and meetings and decisions of the people. He thus regarded himself as the chosen instrument of Heaven, and as such carried out his duties as a ruler and lord. I consider myself such an instrument of Heaven and shall go my way without regard to the views and opinions of the day.

Mr. LONDON. Going direct to heaven in his own way or in the opposite direction? [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, it was upon this theory the Kaiser acted when in 1914, in August, without waiting for any legislative sanction, he declared war and mobilized the mighty German Army. It is upon this basis he has ruled since that day with a rod of iron. His conception of his position has been repeated dozens of times since his impetuous nature opened the world war in addresses to his soldiers and sailors. The people of Germany may not be with him in heart, but most probably they are. If they are not, they are certainly helpless to be against him effectively.

This country in this hour should not, as in the days prior to the war, when it lulled itself into sleep by repeated assurances that there was no ground to "become nervous," proceed upon the oft-repeated statements that the war will break down by the weakness of Germany. This assurance, so oft repeated, is but a wish becoming father of the thought. The promised revolutionary uprisings have about as much significance as the strikes on the Pacific coast or in the Norfolk Navy Yard. They have no such significance as the I. W. W. movements in recent times.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield? I do not like to interrupt the gentleman's thought, and I should have asked this question before. The British House of Commons won liberty for the British people through the fact that the King had to come to it for money. Does not the Kaiser have to go to the Reichstag to get additional appropriations for the army?

Mr. FESS. No; while that is the theory, in reality the Bundesrath is supreme in all matters pertaining to taxes, customs, appropriations for the army and the navy.

Mr. PLATT. Taxes can be levied without consent of the Reichstag?

Mr. FESS. If the Reichstag does not do it, it would probably be dissolved and another elected.

Mr. PLATT. If the people are against certain increases?

Mr. FESS. No; there can be no change; the vote of the Reichstag is final if its vote is to maintain the status quo.

Mr. PLATT. But suppose an additional amount of money is wanted, it has to go through the Reichstag. It has to be got through some way; it may be prorogued, but it can not be put through if the people are against it.

Mr. FESS. That matter has never reached that point. It may have it in theory but not in reality. Just as it has two houses. The gentleman will recall a few years ago when the Kaiser was opposed by this body in his efforts to secure an increase of the Navy the opposition was militant, but the increase was made without delay.

Mr. PLATT. That is illustrated by what the gentleman said about the German people. The German people do not stand up as the British people did in the House of Commons and insist.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not that the basis of the proposed electoral reform in Prussia so as to grant the people a larger privilege in the election of their representatives in the Reichstag, so that their will may be carried out in matters of fiscal and national policy?

Mr. FESS. The difficulty is that we are talking about a theory that is not at work in practice.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, if I recollect rightly the difference is this, that whereas in England and here the House has to make appropriations and to levy taxes; in Germany, if the Reichstag does not vote any appropriations, then the previous existing appropriations remain indefinitely.

Mr. FESS. That is true, absolutely. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] wanted to know whether, if they wanted an increase—

Mr. PLATT. As they must have if there is a war.

Mr. FESS. It would be necessary for the Reichstag to act. In theory I will say to my friend that the Reichstag's assent is necessary for every measure, but in practice it is not. In theory a law may be initiated in either body and must get the consent of the other body, but that is not true in practice, since the body that refuses is subject to dissolution by the Kaiser.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In practice are the legislative acts signed by the presiding officers?

Mr. FESS. The sanction of the law is always given by the Bundesrath, and it is published by the Emperor. It would be signed by the head of the upper house and proclaimed by the Emperor.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is not signed by the presiding officer of the Reichstag at all?

Mr. FESS. It is signed either by the chancellor, who is the presiding officer of the Bundesrath, or some one deputized by him to sign it, who must be a Prussian.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The chancellor is the presiding officer of the Bundesrath?

Mr. FESS. He is the head of the Bundesrath.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So that a legislative act is not in fact signed by the presiding officer of the lower house?

Mr. FESS. Just as it passes through that body up to the other body. No signature of the lower body is required to give sanction to the law. That is by the upper body.

Mr. LONDON. In other words, a law is proclaimed by the Emperor and signed by the chancellor, who is the president of the Bundesrath, the upper body.

Mr. FESS. That is it.

Mr. LONDON. And every act of legislation must pass through the Reichstag and through the Bundesrath?

Mr. FESS. In theory that is true.

Mr. LONDON. That is true in practice. The Reichstag and the Bundesrath pass on every law, and it is promulgated by the Emperor, who has not the veto power.

Mr. FESS. The power of the Emperor to publish the law would carry with it probably the power to refuse to publish it, although that is a mooted question. The sanction of the law is given by the upper house, not the lower, and the publication of the law by the head of the nation.

The fugitive peace demands in Germany should be put on a par with the recent slogan "Out of the trenches before Christmas," the last echo of which was heard when Mayor Thompson permitted the remnant to meet in order to adjourn. The outbreaks in the Reichstag are not more significant than scenes in this Chamber when a Member differing from his colleagues on some governmental policy charges treason and demands an investigation to determine the loyalty of its membership. Personally I can see no symptoms of such weakness as is promised from day to day. The promised starvation by cutting off all imports does not materialize, and so far as it appears there is small hope of it succeeding. While Americans can not appreciate the docility of the German population toward Prussianism, the German people have not shown any symptoms of internal revolution. This fact invites caution among those of us who declare that Germany must take on more democratic principles by throwing off their monarchical practices.

Whatever be our goal in this war, this country must not make the mistake of depending upon the weakness of Germany for us to win the war. We must sooner or later awake to the fact that victory lies in our superior forces, rather than in revolution in the enemies' country. It means a fight to the finish against the most powerful foe the world has yet witnessed. The easy manipulation of the German machine, with all the appertaining methods of brutal warfare which has for three years held the world at bay, is but an intimation of its possibilities if left unrestrained to widen its sphere of operations. An understanding of this possibility points the way of duty. Whatever else may be our demands, now since we have been forced into the world conflict we must make it plain that we can not quit until the world is assured that such a thing as this world tragedy can never again take place, otherwise our loss of life and treasure is in vain.

This goal can only be reached by America aroused, united, armed, and in action in the arena of war, there to remain until our rights are restored, our ideals respected, our honor vindicated.

cated, and our future assured. To this end we are committed, to the accomplishment of which we have devoted our entire resource of man power and money power. Peace will come when we command it in the name of humanity, not only to-day but for the days to come. Until this stage is reached ambiguous peace proposals are of no avail. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to yield to me before he takes his seat.

Mr. FESS. Very well.

Mr. GORDON. I trust that the gentleman in revising his very interesting address will not omit the little incident at Runnymede about 1215, as I recall it—

Mr. FESS. In the time of King John.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; when they rung from him the great charter. The gentleman omitted that, as I recall it.

Mr. FESS. I did not go back beyond 1688, and that was in 1215.

Mr. GORDON. That is a very important incident in the history of England?

Mr. FESS. Yes; and the establishment of the House of Commons 50 years later is another important matter. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, Germany's discussion of questions in the Reichstag gives us no assurance that there is going to be any weakening in power in that country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record upon the subject of the war revenue.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record upon the subject of the war revenue. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL THURSDAY.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet next Thursday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes) the House, under its previous order, adjourned to meet on Thursday, September 27, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5819) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Elgin, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River at Elgin, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 164), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GORDON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2623) defining the status of citizens of the United States who have entered the military or naval services of certain countries during the existing war in Europe, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 165), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2858) to defray expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 166), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 6319) to provide for the construction of a road across Point Grenville on the Quinault Reservation, Wash.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHALLENBERGER: A bill (H. R. 6320) authorizing appointment of chaplains for the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JONES of Texas: A bill (H. R. 6321) granting the consent of Congress to the Gainesville Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across Red River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GLYNN (for Mr. HILL): A bill (H. R. 6328) to provide for the purchase of additional land for the enlargement of the site of the public building at Stamford, Conn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. NORTON: Resolution (H. Res. 151) providing for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into certain charges made in the statement of Hon. Thomas J. Heflin on the floor of the House and inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 21, 1917, and into certain charges made by Hon. Thomas J. Heflin and Hon. William Schley Howard in newspaper reports contained in the Washington Post and other papers on Saturday, September 22, 1917; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. DAVILA: Resolution (H. Res. 152) to translate into Spanish and print as a public document for circulation in Porto Rico the speech of Senator Broussard on the war-revenue bill; to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SNYDER: A bill (H. R. 6322) granting a pension to Anna B. Evans; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6323) granting a pension to Frances Watches; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6324) granting a pension to Rev. George W. Craig; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6325) granting a pension to Nicholas Hamersmith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 6326) granting a pension to Anna Kennedy; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6327) for the relief of Anna Kennedy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of United Spanish War Veterans, Department of California, protesting against the order of the board of managers of National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, making inmates under 62 years of age subject to detail to work two days each week upon the home farm, without pay; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CARY: Petitions of Mrs. H. Waldeck and Charles E. McLenigan, of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring creation of a woman's suffrage committee in the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Petition of 52 residents and citizens of Augusta, Ill., urging the enactment of House bill 4510, "A bill to render possible the return of the bodies of our soldier dead to their home burying grounds in a sanitary and recognizable condition"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition signed by 112 men, citizens and residents of McDonough County, Ill., for the immediate submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States in order that the women of the United States may become the political equals of those of Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, and the Scandinavian countries; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Also, petition signed by 90 women, residents of McDonough County, Ill., for the immediate submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States in order that the women of the United States may become the political equals of those of Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, and the Scandinavian countries; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania (by request): Memorial of the National Woman's Party in convention at Philadelphia, Pa., protesting against the arrest of women for asking for liberty at the gates of the White House and calling upon the President to use his influence to secure the passage of the Susan B. Anthony amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, September 26, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy divine favor for the business of this day. Guide us by Thine own unerring counsel. Prevent us by Thy grace. Go before us in all the plans that we project for the welfare of the Nation. Let Thy favor rest upon Thy servants and Thy blessing upon the labor of their hands. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2705) to create the Aircraft Board and to provide for its maintenance with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5431. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Saline River at or near Suttons Ferry, Ark.;

H. R. 5646. An act to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

H. R. 5648. An act to establish certain new ratings in the United States Navy, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF NATURALIZATION LAWS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (S. 2854) to amend the naturalization laws, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 136) thereon.

MONUMENT TO JAMES R. MCCONNELL.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I introduce a bill and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I will say that the bill has not been before a committee. It provides for the donation of two condemned cannon to be placed at the grave of James R. McConnell, the French-American flier, a North Carolina boy, who was killed March 19 in a fight with three German flying machines. The people of his native county and native town in North Carolina and other citizens of the United States have subscribed a large fund to erect a monument to this American hero boy. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered at once without reference to a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent, without referring it to a committee, for the consideration of a bill, which will be read.

The bill (S. 2920) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the State of North Carolina two brass cannon, with carriage, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate to the State of North Carolina two brass or bronze cannon, with carriage and suitable outfit of cannon balls, condemned or not needed for present service, to be placed at the foot of the monument now being erected at Carthage, N. C., in honor of James R. McConnell, an American aviator, who was killed while flying for France.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 2921) to amend the act approved July 17, 1916, entitled "An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes;" and

A bill (S. 2922) to amend the laws relating to the denominations of circulating notes by national banks, and to permit the issuance of notes of small denominations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PRINTING OF MATTER IN THE RECORD.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, yesterday I spoke for a few moments in support of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I overlooked at that time that it was my intention to ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record as a part of my remarks copious data I had prepared relating to the energies and activities of the Department of Labor. I ask consent now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Was that statement prepared by the Senator himself or by some one else?

Mr. ASHURST. It was prepared by me with documents and papers supplied by the Department of Labor and the Bureau of Immigration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would have no objection in the world to putting any data prepared by the department and matters of that kind in the Record, but my understanding always has been that it has been the custom of the Senate to require matters prepared by a Senator to be delivered here. We have not followed here the custom of extending remarks in the Record.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not think the Senator understands me. I delivered a short speech of four or five minutes yesterday upon the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. It was my intention, as an appendix to my remarks, which I had a right to ask, to insert in the Record certain copious data with reference to the activities and energies of the Department of Labor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not like to object to a request of that kind, yet I do not like the idea of matters being prepared in that way and printed in the Record. If the Department of Labor—

Mr. ASHURST. I object to the Senator's remark about its being prepared. Prepared in what way? What does the Senator refer to?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Prepared by the Senator himself in the nature of a speech. That is what it amounts to. Of course if it is data furnished by the Department of Labor, no one would object to having it printed in the Record.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the Senator where would I get such documents and data, and where would he in his omniscience get any such data and documents, unless he obtained it from the reports of the Department of Labor? Where would he get it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if I go to books and documents—

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I withdraw the request.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. ASHURST. I will read it for about three hours, and I invite the attention of the Senator from Washington to it. I think he will be illuminated if he listens to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator will not feel offended. I remember some time ago when the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] asked that matter he had prepared be printed in the Record I objected. I have heard other Senators object upon the ground that they did not desire the Record, so far as the proceedings of the Senate are concerned, to be made up like they are in another body, which I probably would not be permitted to mention here. I would have no objection whatever to have printed in the Record quotations and extracts, and all that sort of thing, and, personally, anything the Senator prepared I would be very glad to see in the Record—

Mr. ASHURST. As evidenced by this objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Because I know it would be good. I hope the Senator will not take my opposition to be personal at all. Of course, if older Senators here think this is a proper proceeding, I do not know that I am disposed to object, yet I do want to say I do not think we ought to inaugurate in the Senate the custom or practice of printing in the Record that is followed in another body.

Mr. ASHURST. It was my idea—

Mr. JONES of Washington. So I withdraw the objection.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator. I hope in my opposition to his objection I have not betrayed any feeling.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Senator from Arizona does not desire to put a speech in the Record?

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw the request.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator did not hear what I said.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the introduction of bills.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for recognition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will have recognition for the purpose of introducing a bill or joint resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not wish to do that.

Mr. MARTIN. No one is objecting to the request of the Senator from Arizona. The Senator from North Carolina merely made an inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further bills or joint resolutions, concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

AIRCRAFT BOARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2705) to create the Aircraft Board and provide for its maintenance, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That for the purpose of expanding and coordinating the industrial activities relating to aircraft, or parts of aircraft, produced for any purpose in the United States, and to facilitate generally the development of air service, a board is hereby created, to be known as the Aircraft Board, hereinafter referred to as the board.

SEC. 2. That the board shall number not more than nine in all, and shall include a civilian chairman, the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, and two other officers of the Army, to be appointed by the Secretary of War; the Chief Constructor of the Navy and two other officers of the Navy, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; and two additional civilian members. The chairman and civilian members shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 3. That said board and tenure of office of the members thereof shall continue during the pleasure of the President, but not longer than six months after the present war. The civilian members of the board shall serve without compensation.

SEC. 4. That the board is hereby empowered, under the direction and control of and as authorized by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, on behalf of the Departments of War and Navy, to supervise and direct, in accordance with the requirements prescribed or approved by the respective departments, the purchase, production, and manufacture of aircraft, engines, and all ordnance and instruments used in connection therewith, and accessories and materials therefor, including the purchase, lease, acquisition, or construction of plants for the manufacture of aircraft, engines, and accessories: Provided, That the board may make recommendations as to contracts and their distribution in connection with the foregoing, but every contract shall be made by the already constituted authorities of the respective departments.

SEC. 5. That the board is also empowered to employ, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, such clerks and other employees as may be necessary to the conduct of its business, including such technical experts and advisers as may be found necessary, and to fix their salaries. Such salaries shall conform to those usually paid by the Government for similar service: Provided, That by unanimous approval of the board higher compensation may be paid to technical experts and advisers. The board may rent suitable offices in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, purchase necessary office equipment and supplies, including scientific publications and printing, and may incur necessary administrative and contingent expenses, and for all of the expenses enumerated in this paragraph there shall be allotted by the Chief Signal Officer of the Army for the fiscal year 1917 and 1918 the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, from any appropriation now existing for or hereinafter made to the Signal Corps of the Army, and such appropriation is hereby made available for these purposes: Provided further, That except upon the joint and concurrent approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy there shall not be established or maintained under the board any office or organization duplicating or replacing, in whole or in part, any office or organization now existing that can be properly established or maintained by appropriations made for or available for the military or naval services: Provided further, That a report shall be made to Congress on the first day of each regular session of the salaries paid from this appropriation to clerks and employees by grades, and the number in each such grade.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

H. R. 5646. An act to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

H. R. 5648. An act to establish certain new ratings in the United States Navy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 5431. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Saline River, at or near Suttons Ferry, Ark.; to the Committee on Commerce.

DISTRIBUTION OF EXPORTS.

Mr. FERNALD. I introduced some time since the bill (S. 1867) to authorize the President in time of war to give direction to exports from the United States so as to insure their wise, economical, and profitable distribution to other countries. This has been covered entirely by another bill, and I move that Senate bill 1867 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE.

Mr. ASHURST. The Department of Labor was created by act of Congress March 4, 1913. The purpose, as expressed by Congress in the act, is to "foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment." While there is, of course, no authority in the expression "to foster, promote, or develop for wage earners" any special privileges, the inference, nevertheless, is irresistible that Congress did intend to conserve the just interests of the wage earners by means of the executive department specially devoted to their welfare.

Nor is there any implication that the wage earners in whose behalf this department was created consist of such only as are associated together in labor unions. It was created in the interests of the welfare of all the wage earners of the United States, whether organized or unorganized. The Department of Labor sustains intimate and friendly relations with labor organizations as in the interest of all wage earners and of the general welfare it ought to do; nevertheless this attitude is not exclusive. Similar relations with unorganized wage earners, and also with employers and their organizations to the extent to which they themselves permit, are likewise a duty of this department.

How significant it is that whenever we talk about the rights of labor objection is raised, and I am sorry to see the Senator from Washington object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I do not yield. I decline to yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I heard the Senator refer to me and—

Mr. ASHURST. I expect to refer to the Senator a good many times before I finish this speech. I hope he will remain in the Chamber.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have been here all the time. I am glad to hear the Senator. Anything the Senator has to present to the Senate is always interesting.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	New	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Hollis	Norris	Smoot
Brandeggee	Husting	Page	Sterling
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Phelan	Sutherland
Calderson	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Swanson
Curtis	King	Poindexter	Trammell
Dillingham	Kirby	Pomerene	Wardman
Fernald	La Follette	Reed	Wadsworth
Fletcher	McKellar	Robinson	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Shafroth	Williams
Gerry	Martin	Sheppard
Hale	Myers	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. KING. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] are detained on official business.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], on account of illness.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness, and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I announce the absence of the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] on account of illness.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. OWEN, Mr. RANDELL, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. FRANCE, Mr. FALL, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, and Mr. WATSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. HUSTING. I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] on business.

I desire also to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] on account of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Arizona will proceed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as I was proceeding to say when a quorum was called for, previous to the institution of the Department of Labor nine other great departments were successively created by Congress, each assuming the duty of caring for some aspect of property rights and interests. It was left for the Department of Labor to be organized especially to conserve human interests as distinguished from the interests of property. This distinction presents a master key to the activities of the department, and if borne in mind will make clear the peculiar relations which the department sustains to the general public interest and to the many human activities upon which its relations impinge.

MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION.

Primarily the Department of Labor must conserve in industrial disputes the interests of the wage earners of the United States. Such is its duty under the law of its creation, the first section of which charges it with responsibility for their general welfare, while the eighth makes this responsibility specific as to labor disputes. Those interests are exceptional in their magnitude. Not only do wage earners constitute in number more than a third of our total population but in financial respects also their aggregate interests are vast. It is doubtful if any vocational interests represented in our governmental system exceed in volume or public importance those of the wage earners of the United States.

But though the Department of Labor represents primarily the wage-earning interests in labor disputes, its ideal is to make its representation similar in character to that of the Department of State, which, while representing the interests of this country in disputes between it and other countries, does so with fairness toward all countries. Accordingly the policy of the Department of Labor, though it executes its mediation and conciliation functions as the governmental representative of wage-earning interests, is to do so without partisanship or prejudice, but with fairness to every interest concerned. The great specific duty devolving upon the Secretary of Labor is to act as mediator in trade disputes or to appoint conciliators when, in his judgment, it is wise to do so. During the brief time the new department has been in existence it has been called upon to intervene and use its good offices in adjusting scores of trade disputes, involving many thousands of workmen and very extensive property rights. In handling these cases it has been the policy of the department not to undertake to impress its viewpoint or the viewpoint of its officers upon either of the contending parties, but rather to seek some common ground upon which both may stand and which in the heat of controversy they may have overlooked. In over 90 per cent of the cases the department has been successful in bringing about a mutual understanding between employer and employee, thereby promoting their welfare and the welfare of the people at large.

In handling trade disputes the efforts of the Department of Labor have been centered in endeavoring to bring employers and employees together in order that they might mutually work out their own difficulties to a successful conclusion. That is by far the best method, if it can be accomplished. Employers and employees have a mutual interest, not an identical interest—mark the distinction—in securing the largest possible production with a given amount of labor. The more there is jointly produced the more there is to divide between them. Their interests only diverge when it comes to a division of their joint production. When that state is reached how much better it would be for both sides and for all parties concerned if, instead of strikes and lockouts, thereby cutting off all of production and leaving nothing to divide, they would, like sensible business men, sit down around the council table together and work out on as nearly correct a mathematical basis as possible the share that each is entitled to. If the Secretary fails to get trade disputants to adjust their difficulties themselves, he appoints a mediator to pass between the differing parties, get their various propositions, and make suggestions in an effort to find a basis of settlement. If that fails, the next step is to propose arbitration upon a basis for arbitration laid down in advance.

During the past 60 days the mediation service has adjusted 58 trade disputes and strikes, of which 35 arose during last month. Many thousands of workers have been restored to productive activity; some adjustments have been made without work ceasing. The service has conserved the labor of perhaps a hundred thousand workers to industry during a single month. It has saved the country in this crisis the production which means so much in the preparation for national defense, and which would have been totally lost had these strikes and lockouts not been satisfactorily adjusted. Many other cases are pending, and the good offices of the department are gradually bringing about a better feeling between employer and employees.

AMERICANIZATION.

Some 200,000 foreigners annually are inducted into American citizenship through naturalization. Until the Bureau of Naturalization of the Department of Labor recognized the necessity for inculcating into these new citizens a substantial understanding of their new estate no organized effort to train naturalized aliens for the responsibilities of American citizenship was undertaken. The Americanization service of the bureau is carried on in cooperation with the public-school systems throughout the United States. The bureau's connection with the intending citizen begins with his filing his "declaration of intention," commonly known as his "first papers." In more than 1,700 cooperating, patriotic communities special school courses are conducted, using textbooks prepared by the Bureau of Naturalization, training these new citizens in English, in our American system of government, and in the simpler educational requirements most likely to be useful to them as citizens. When it is understood that more than 90 per cent of the seekers after American citizenship are wage earners it will be realized that this bureau is executing one of the important trusts of the Department of Labor in dealing in a fundamental and practical way with conditions among our working people.

What is this campaign of cooperation which the public schools and the Bureau of Naturalization are carrying on? When an alien takes that solemn oath to become an American citizen, his name is sent by the Bureau of Naturalization to the public schools of the community in which he resides. The name of his wife also has been sent to the public-school authorities. A personally addressed form letter has been sent to each of them, telling them that the United States Government is interested in their behalf because they are soon to become American citizens; that it desires to aid them to establish themselves as such citizens and to form an American home. It points out to them the advantage that will be theirs by an attendance upon the public schools and the classes in citizenship which the schools have organized. This work has gone to communities where the public-school authorities never dreamed of teaching adults, let alone adult aliens who are candidates for citizenship.

Insistent calls came to the Bureau of Naturalization for something to teach these candidates whom the school-teachers were so eager to instruct. An outline course in citizenship was prepared in the Bureau of Naturalization. A syllabus of the naturalization law was also prepared, and these were sent out to the public schools. This outline course in citizenship has also been furnished to the War and Navy Departments for use at Army posts, naval stations, and on shipboard, to the Attorney General, and, through the Department of Justice, to Federal penal institutions and also to State penal institutions in large numbers.

Two citizenship conventions have been held under the auspices of the Bureau of Naturalization. The first was held in Washington in July, 1916, and there President Wilson commended this gigantic Federal administrative undertaking. The second convention was held in Portland, Ore. Both of these have been followed by the greatest enthusiasm by those in attendance and increased interest throughout the United States.

Mass meetings have been held by many cities for the purpose of stimulating attendance upon night classes already established and securing a greater enrollment of aliens.

For two successive years the doctrine of citizenship preparedness has been proclaimed throughout the country from the pulpits of churches of all denominations on the Sabbath nearest Independence Day. This solemn and patriotic observance was the direct result of an appeal made by the bureau to the clergy of the United States, and it is now a fixed annual institution.

A most striking feature of this humanitarian work is the amazing fact that all this vitalizing expansion of governmental administration has been accomplished without taking any additional money for the coffers of the Treasury, thus injecting the most modern business methods of money saving, if not money-making, into governmental operation. Indeed, the Bureau of Naturalization, by reason of its high efficiency and measures of economy, has turned an otherwise costly system of administration into a revenue-producing machine. This bureau is not supported from the general taxes collected by the Government. In fact, the citizens of the United States do not bear one penny of the expenses of this governmental agency. It is all paid for by the foreigner who is admitted to citizenship. In other words, from the $5 paid by each applicant for a good administration of the naturalization law all the expenses of his Americanization are paid and an average of over $65,000 a year for every year of the 10 years of Federal supervision has been turned into the United States Treasury.

WORK FOR THE CHILDREN.

One of the important bureaus in the department deals with the welfare of children. The intimate connection between wages and the infantile death rate has been impressively demonstrated by two investigations conducted by this bureau in Manchester, N. H., and Johnstown, Pa. It was found that the death rate among babies in poor families was more than four times as high as among those in the higher wage groups. Where fathers earned less than $450 a year almost three-fourths of the mothers were compelled to seek employment to aid in the support of the family, as a result of which the death rate was dire-fully increased. The bureau has concerned itself with studies upon child labor, and in the recent adoption of the Federal child-labor law the data compiled by the bureau was a most important element.

Upon the declaration of war by the United States the Children's Bureau commenced a study of the condition of children in the warring countries, that we might learn from their experience. Several brief articles have been presented through the press on the subject, and a bulletin on Child Labor in the Warring Countries is now in the Government Printing Office. Investigations show that where abroad school-attendance laws and regulations limiting the hours of labor for children were relaxed at the beginning of the war to meet the extraordinary demands for labor it is now widely recognized as a mistake, both from the point of view of the health of the workers and of efficient management. The tendency abroad at present, therefore, is toward the restoration of prewar standards or the introduction of higher standards than those attained before the war.

The European experience makes emphatic the necessity of a full realization of the provisions of the Federal child-labor law passed by the Sixty-fourth Congress, which went into effect September 1, 1917. Its enforcement has been entrusted by the Secretary of Labor, the executive under the act, to the Children's Bureau. For this purpose an appropriation of $150,000 was made for 1917. The rules and regulations for its carrying out were approved on August 14 by the Board of Secretaries, consisting of the Attorney General, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor. Issuing officers from the Children's Bureau are now at work in several States examining children for employment certificates. These rules have been prepared with a view to securing the objects of the law without injuring legitimate business interests. It is not the intention of the Department of Labor to administer the law unfairly or to embarrass the reasonable course of business. A number of conferences were held at which representatives of every affected business interest were given full opportunity to examine the proposed regulations. It is a testimonial to the patriotic spirit of American manufacturers that practically no adverse criticism of the law was heard and generally a helpful spirit of constructive suggestion shown.

In the study of the conditions of children in the warring countries four principal subjects were considered: (1) Child labor and school exemptions; (2) infant and maternity care; (3) delinquency; and (4) dependency. The relation of all these questions to the living conditions behind the lines is clear. These in turn depend in large measure upon the provisions made by the respective Governments for the care of soldiers and their dependents. Realizing that with the creation of a large army similar problems must be met by the United States, special studies were made of governmental provisions for the care of the dependents of members of the military forces. It was found that the Canadian system had been worked out in a way to be of particular practical interest to the United States, and Mr.—now Capt.—S. Herbert Wolfe, a New York actuary of recognized authority, generously went to Canada and made the report upon the "Care of Dependents of Enlisted Men in Canada," which was published by the bureau last May. A further report upon the governmental provisions in the United States and foreign countries for members of the military forces and care of their dependents, prepared under Capt. Wolfe's direction at the special request of the Secretary of Labor, is about to go to press.

The Children's Bureau is studying infant mortality and maternal and child welfare with a view to their economic and social factors.

In the course of the past four years the bureau has conducted a number of very careful studies into the conditions of the family and has published several most important bulletins conveying information of vital importance to mothers, some of which have been very widely distributed throughout the country. Recently the bureau has been studying the conditions brought about in England by the war and the result of these studies is now available for public information.

BOYS' WORKING RESERVE.

The Council of National Defense announced at the beginning of the war that labor standards should be maintained as then existent until the public interest made their alteration necessary. Explaining this policy, the Secretary of Labor stated that where "open shops" were being conducted organized labor should not during the war undertake to bring pressure to bear upon an employer to institute a "closed-shop" agreement; that where a "closed shop" was being operated the employer should not attempt to enforce an "open shop" because of the war emergency, but that all parties should be free to carry on their organizations in the ordinary manner within the limitations outlined. Great pressure early developed for a broader supply of workers. In numbers of States a lowering of the age limit at which children could be employed in industry was urged. The Department of Labor did not take the negative position that a sufficient supply of workers existed nor merely oppose a change in the established standards regarding the employment of children, feeling that affirmative action rather should be taken.

The department organized the United States Boys' Working Reserve under a national director coordinating organizations through the States, with the cooperation of the State councils of defense. The Boys' Working Reserve is now flourishing in 38 States. While exact figures can not be furnished at this time, those which I have prepared upon the basis of data furnished me by the Department of Labor indicate that there are approximately 120,000 boys in the organization. No boy can be a member who is under 16 years. There are rigid requirements as to physical condition, parental consent, oversight, guidance and protection, and health. By so organizing the Boys' Working Reserve the Department of Labor virtually established the standard for children's work in industry, constituting a reserve of labor ready to answer the call of employers and obviating any supposed necessity for lowering established standards in the effort to find such workers.

SHIPPING BOARD WORK.

When the United States Shipping Board announced its plan to construct a number of vessels to carry supplies across the Atlantic, the Department of Labor offered its services to secure shipyard workers. A representative was detailed to the Shipping Board to aid both in case of labor disputes and in supplying workers. The Mediation and Conciliation Service of the department and the regular United States Employment Service thus have been constantly utilized. At the very beginning the board desired a survey to locate skilled ship carpenters. The employment service was given two days for the preliminary and four days for a final report. By a telegraphic order to the 93 offices of the service scattered over 27 States the service in four days secured lists totaling 15,400 such workers; and within a week the actual names and addresses were in the files of the department ready for use. However, it was learned that the supply of skilled men for the different shipbuilding vocations is entirely too small; so the Department of Labor projected emergency training courses to prepare men for the essential processes. A tentative arrangement has been made with the newly created Vocational Education Board and plans are now being worked out between that board, the Department of Labor, and the Shipping Board for the installation of training schools at shipyards and in trade and technical schools, which will facilitate the training of a sufficient number of additional workers, not in theory but in practical doing of the most-needed work.

STATISTICAL ANALYSES.

Passing through numerous mutations of title and successively of departmental and of independent allegiance, the Bureau of Labor Statistics has since 1886 been a most valuable fact-gathering agency of the Government. It began by making general and special investigations upon various phases of the labor problem. The annual report carried the result of some general investigation. Bimonthly bulletins reported partially upon special subjects. On the whole the system was unsatisfactory. The preparation of a general report often consumed so much time that publication frequently actually took place long after the occasion calling for it had passed, and its value became mainly historic and not an economic and contemporaneous contribution. The briefer reports in the bulletins were too hurriedly prepared and too fragmentary to carry the authority of breadth and accurate analysis.

Recognizing the possibilities of the bureau service, it was determined to reform and modernize its procedure. A new system has therefore been adopted. Eleven series of general investigations are now carried on, as follows:

Wholesale prices.

Retail prices and cost of living.

Wages and hours of labor.

Employment and unemployment.

Women in industry.

Workmen's insurance and compensation, including laws relating thereto.

Industrial accidents and hygiene.

Conciliation and arbitration, including strikes and lockouts.

Labor laws of the United States, including decisions of courts relating to labor.

Foreign labor laws.

Vocational education.

Bulletins within these series are published as often as material is gathered and digested. A maximum of accuracy, of analysis, and scholarship, with a minimum of delay in making the facts available to the interested public, is thus secured. Important special subjects not falling within the 11 regular investigations are treated in special bulletins issued as need arises. Besides this, a monthly review has been issued since July, 1915. Investigations too brief for monographic treatment; advance notices of important legislation and of court decisions affecting labor; information concerning current work of the bureau, the department generally, and other agencies dealing with labor matters are made available by this publication. The bureau now publishes 25 to 30 monographs and 12 numbers of the review annually.

At present a special study is being made of trade agreements, which will shortly be completed. The emergent problem of the turnover of labor employed in industry, the shifting of workers into and out of employment, and the particular effect thereon of war conditions, is being given careful analysis. The forthcoming report on the subject will be especially valuable to plant executives and the employment offices in large industrial establishments, but will have great value also to all classes of employers. Preliminary figures obtained disclose the existence of a most astounding and generally unsuspected economic waste due to the shifting of workers and the cost of training workers in their room. It is hoped that this projected study may point out remedies and provide constructive suggestions looking toward reducing our present need for a supply of trained workers in industry.

THE IMMIGRATION LAW.

The new immigration law which became effective May 1 last is administered by the Department of Labor. The provisions of this act should be better understood. In broad humanity, in essential fairness, and practical protection both to the interests of the people of the United States and for the helpless strangers landing upon our shores this new law presents a wonderful advance over previous legislation. Its provisions make transportation companies largely responsible for the character and fitness of intending immigrants, and by a system of "administrative fines" means are found to prevent the importation of persons morally dangerous, mentally disqualified, or having contagious diseases. By a series of special provisions immigrants are assured hospital treatment when necessary. If refused landing, their passage money must be refunded. On return passage when rejected they have comforts equal to those enjoyed on the voyage out. While detained waiting examination comfortable and sanitary quarters are given them. Mothers are no longer separated from their children. If a bond be required of those waiting for deportation, the alien may deposit cash at the post office and draw interest thereon, instead of being compelled to pay heavy premiums to carry a penal bond. These and other humane provisions greatly ameliorate the immigrant's condition. The law strictly protects the United States from the unfit or those we can not assimilate. By geographical lines a large area of Asiatic territory is mandatorily excluded. By a simple literacy test—the mildest of such tests that are imposed by the seven countries now requiring intending immigrants to pass an educational examination before landing—many of the clearly unfit are eliminated. Taken with the seamen's law, provisions of this law care for the health and sanitation of quarters for seamen and greatly improve their conditions. The new immigration law in most of its features is one of the great remedial legislative achievements of recent years.

IMMIGRATION SERVICE.

1. Internment: As soon as Congress declared a state of war to exist it became the duty of the Bureau of Immigration to assume charge of all of the officers and seamen aboard German merchant vessels in ports of the United States. There were over 2,000 of these alien enemies to be cared for. They were cared for under the immigration law as if they were applicants for entry and also under the President's proclamation concerning alien enemies and excluded. Thereupon they were detained in immigration stations, pending the establishment of a permanent internment camp. About 600 of them have since been removed to where quarters are now being erected for the accommodation of all.

It has also been necessary to hold in internment alien enemies arrested by officers of the Department of Justice under the President's proclamation and aliens who happen to be alien enemies, arrested in regular immigration proceedings and who could not, because of their enemy status, be released under bond or paroled.

2. Arrests: It has been necessary as a measure of public safety to exercise special diligence and caution in causing the arrest of aliens of German nationality within the country in violation of the immigration law and to cause the rearrest of all such as had been released under bond or upon their personal recognizance during the time that the United States was a neutral Nation in the war.

3. Exclusions: By reason of the President's proclamation a new ground for excluding aliens from the United States has been created. No alien who is an enemy may enter this country without first obtaining from the Attorney General a permit to enter. It has been the duty of the immigration officers to detain all such applicants until their cases could be submitted, through the bureau at Washington, to the Attorney General and decided. Those refused permits are deported or interned, according to circumstances and instructions given by the Attorney General.

4. Departures: The President's proclamation also prohibits the departure of alien enemies from the country without a permit. While the conduct of the work arising from this circumstance has not been directly placed upon the immigration officers, they are under instructions to cooperate with other Government officials to the fullest extent possible.

5. Red Cross: To the full extent that the American Red Cross is charged with duties concerning the interned alien enemies, the Bureau of Immigration has been called upon to cooperate with that organization. This includes keeping the Red Cross advised with respect to the health of the interned and delivering to the interned persons money, and so forth, sent them through Red Cross channels.

6. Spies: All immigration officials since the entry of the United States into the war have been discharging the duty of rendering active aid to officers of other departments in the apprehension of spies and in preventing the entry into the United States of persons suspected of espionage.

7. Slackers: Immigration officers have also the duty of assisting the other branches of the Government in the prevention of the departure from the country of persons who are attempting to evade the selective draft.

8. Passports: With respect to the passport requirements made necessary by the war, immigration officials have had important and extensive duties to perform, both as to persons going out of the country and with regard to those attempting to enter, cooperating with the Departments of State and Commerce in innumerable ways. Another branch of this supervisory work consists of the duty imposed directly upon immigration officers of inspecting the crew of every neutral vessel leaving ports of the United States and determining whether the members thereof are entitled to depart, or whether they are suspicious characters whose departure should be prevented. This is referred to here because the plan was evolved in connection with the making of arrangements.

NEGRO MIGRATION.

For about two years there has been a steady drain of negro laborers from the South to the munitions plants and other manufacturing industries of the North and Northwest; by the resultant labor shortage, agriculture and industries in the Southern States have been dislocated. Because the negroes were not accustomed to conditions in the North there has also been much embarrassment to these migrant workers and to the population into which they have obtruded. Public disorder has followed, as at East St. Louis, Ill.; Chester, Pa.; and other points. To ascertain the facts and the cause of the very extensive movement reported, the Secretary of Labor appointed the well-known Dr. James H. Dillard, trustee of the Jeanes Fund for the Improvement of Negro Rural Schools, who, with four assistants, for several months has been making an investigation of actual conditions in the South and through the northern manufacturing regions in which the noted disturbances occurred. This investigation is about completed, and the report, which will shortly be prepared, is expected not only to reveal a vast deal of information as to what actually has occurred, but to suggest definite remedial courses where the need of improvement is shown.

PUBLIC-SERVICE RESERVE.

A most encouraging evidence of the patriotism of America when Congress declared war was the flood of offers, from every State, that poured into Washington from citizens who wished to be given some work to do for their country. They wrote, they telegraphed, they rode to the Capital on every train. They besieged every department, they bombarded the President, stormed the Capitol, and cannonaded the Council of National Defense. They were in earnest and were very welcome; but the Department of Labor did not know how to find what particular work they could do or find the right man when a job appeared and a man was needed. The department finally solved the puzzle and absorbed the congestion. The Public Service Reserve was organized—a real democratic organization. Equipped simply with a director, a staff of workers, and a set of files, the reserve has already taken over thousands of offers from the files of departments and is classifying them and rendering them available for every need of the Government. Now that it has been done, the mystery is that no one thought of doing it before. Instead of citizens going home feeling depressed and disheartened because they can find nowhere to serve the country, this service of the Department of Labor has provided a meeting place for needs and supply—a common ground where men of all degrees of capacity and attainments may unite in devoting themselves to the service of our country in winning the great war.

The utility of the Public Service Reserve will be very great. It is registering men, ascertaining their experience, training, capacity, and aptitudes for service. It is in touch with all the agencies of the Government likely to need men, whether volunteers or for compensation. It can supplement the regular employment agencies and the work of the Civil Service Commission by preparing reserves of competent workers against the time of need. Men once registered may thereafter go contentedly about their own affairs, knowing that the Department of Labor is seeking their niche and will advise them when their opportunity comes. In France, in England, in the lands of our other allies there scarcely may be found to-day a man who is not devoting his all to the cause of his country. The power of resistance of our common foe is due in large measure to the complete consecration of the individual to the service of the State. If the United States is to win the war it can not be done solely through superior resources in material and in numbers of men. To win an enduring triumph democracy must show its capacity to light the world with a purer and a whiter flame of patriotic devotion than autocracy can inspire.

UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE.

Ten years ago, as a phase of the Immigration Service's care of foreign homeseekers appearing at our ports, an office was opened in New York purposed to direct aliens to interior localities promising profitable employment and to prevent them from sinking into the city's slums. Little was accomplished until the newly created Department of Labor was given charge of immigration. Secretary Wilson saw in the toy Division of Information an opportunity for real public service. He blew into it the breath of life. He galvanized it into a reality. He made it a real tool for the benefit of society. To-day the United States Employment Service has 93 offices in 36 States and the District of Columbia, being unrepresented in only New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, West Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Wyoming. By agreement official cooperation is carried on with many State employment services. This is being done in the States of Maine, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Louisiana, Arkansas, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Texas, New Mexico, Oregon, Nevada, Arizona, and Washington. Similar cooperation is carried on with Connecticut, South Dakota, and Iowa from the nearest office of the service in contiguous States. In New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, District of Columbia, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, North Dakota, Wyoming, and Montana cooperative agreements are under discussion.

As part of the service the administration undertook in 1915 to assist the harvesters in the corn and wheat belt of the Middle West. Last season about 75,000 workers were directed to the harvest fields. This year the demand for workers from every industry, the pressure upon farmers to plant an increased acreage, and the generally diminished labor supply in the wheat belt combined to cause great national anxiety regarding the prospect of saving the crop. The Department of Agriculture made preliminary surveys, indicating an inadequacy in the labor reserve for farm work. Unless the United States Employment Service could rise to the occasion it seemed probable that the patriotic labor of the farmers, who at the President's call had seeded the greatest grain acreage ever known, would go for naught. The Employment Service called on the National Farm Labor Exchange, in which the service cooperates with the State employment offices in Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, and with the railway commissioner within that territory and other interested agencies. Realizing the serious emergency, Commissioner General Caminetti placed a special agent in the field, with headquarters at Kansas City, put special assistants at work to aid him, and by arrangement with the Post Office Department, which gave splendidly effective cooperation, instituted a drag-net search for the necessary farm workers. Telegrams recently received from the affected States, which were published in the Official Bulletin, indicate the results achieved.

Missouri—"Labor conditions quite satisfactory." Nebraska—"Labor demand and supply about equal." Iowa—"Farm labor sufficient." Kansas—"Few calls for farm help now." Utah—"All right on farm help until September 25, at least."

The regular business of the service has grown at an amazing pace. The annual reports are as follows:

	Referred to employment.	Actually placed.
Fiscal year 1915.....	18,883	11,871
Fiscal year 1916.....	84,963	75,156
Fiscal year 1917.....	361,417	276,949

May and June only.

The figures for the year 1917 are, of course, incomplete.

The monthly returns of placements in the service now show a ratio indicating that the fiscal year 1918 may total 400,000 wage earners placed in employment through this agency. When it is considered that production everywhere depends upon the labor supply and that a worker's sole capital is his skill and labor in production, the value of the service is manifest. No substitute for its aid exists. While manufacture, mining, transportation, and finance are well organized, the business of connecting workers and jobs has never been given general attention, and is utterly haphazard, disorganized, and without operating mechanics. The United States Employment Service supplies the needed machine. It is the vehicle that gives the employer skilled service in finding competent workers and assures the workers a job, if jobs exist. In the present national emergency such a service is beyond valuation. Without it our whole national structure may be endangered. It is useless to send men to the trenches of France if we can not assure a constant flow of weapons, ammunition, food, and clothing to sustain them. That assurance can not be given unless our supply of workers is so organized, trained, and mobilized that the best results shall be obtained from the effort of each worker. No days must be lost between jobs. No worker must be so overworked that he shall have to drop out of the race for production. Comprehensive, intelligent husbanding of our man power is essential. Such husbanding is entirely practical, thanks to the foresight of Secretary Wilson. The United States Employment Service is the instrument which assures a steady supply of workers in our manifold industries.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am inclined to think that the practice which I understand has always been followed by the Senate in requiring speeches to be delivered on the floor is a wise one, and it has been fully justified by the splendid speech to which I have just had the pleasure of listening. I withdrew my objection to the request of the Senator because he seemed to take it so much to heart; and I do not know why he felt that he was required to go on and read it. Yet I am very glad indeed that he did, because I want to say that the facts set out in his address are very interesting, they are very important, and the splendid diction and the eloquence with which it was delivered make a speech that every Senator here ought to have heard. I regret that all Senators did not hear it. I am glad that I had the opportunity to hear it. I want to congratulate the Senator upon the research that he has shown by gathering these facts. I am glad to say that every splendid act of legislation to which he has referred in his magnificent address has had my very hearty support.

I hope the Senator does not feel that I made the observations I did when he made his request out of any personal feeling toward him, because there is not a Senator on this floor whom I think more of than the Senator from Arizona, and there is not a man whom I admire more; but I simply made those suggestions because I did feel, and I still feel, that matters of this kind should be delivered in the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say, while I did withdraw my objection to the request of the Senator, and the RECORD will show it, I will not hereafter consent to what is equivalent to an extension of remarks in the RECORD, no matter by whom requested or under what circumstances.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think I ought to say something in explanation of my belligerent attitude. It is very easy to lead me, but there is no man in the Senate or out of it who can lecture me or drive me, and I thought the Senator was attempting to lecture me or drive me, and that can not be done by anyone.

I thank him for his generous words, and it will save trouble in the future if no one attempts to lecture or drive me. I thank the Senator for his kind remarks.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I never thought about trying to lecture the Senator or drive him in any way. That was the least in my thoughts. I did it largely because in the case of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], to whom I referred,

I raised a similar objection when he made a request of that kind some time ago. That was indeed the only reason.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, September 27, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, September 27, 1917.

Right Rev. William Lawrence, of Boston, Mass., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Father of all, Source of light and life, pour Thy Spirit upon us, we beseech Thee. May the Lord of all truth guide us; may the sense of justice move us; and in all our deliberations may Thy Holy Spirit so direct and govern that we may do our duty here, and at the last receive Thy word, "Well done." We ask it in the name of Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the Clerk in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes, to strike out the word "act," where it first occurs in the third paragraph of section 19 of the bill, as the same was agreed upon in conference, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "section"; also to strike out the word "act," where it last occurs in said paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the word "section," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MANUFACTURE AND STORAGE OF EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. PITTMAN submitted the following report:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"Sec. 2. That the words 'explosive' and 'explosives' when used herein shall mean gunpowders, powders used for blasting, all forms of high explosives, blasting materials, fuses, detonators, and other detonating agents, smokeless powders, and any chemical compound or mechanical mixture that contains any oxidizing and combustible units, or other ingredients, in such proportions, quantities, or packing that ignition by fire, by friction, by concussion, by percussion, or by detonation of, or any part of the compound or mixture may cause such a sudden generation of highly heated gases that the resultant gaseous pressures are capable of producing destructive effects on contiguous objects, or of destroying life or limb, but shall not include small arms or shotgun cartridges: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the manufacture, under the authority of the Government, of explosives for, their sale to, or their possession by, the military or naval service of the United States of America.

"Sec. 3. That the word 'ingredients' when used herein shall mean the materials and substances capable by combination of producing one or more of the explosives mentioned in section 1 hereof.

"Sec. 4. That the word 'person,' when used herein, shall include States, Territories, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and other dependencies of the United States, and municipal subdivisions thereof, individual citizens, firms, associations, societies, and corporations of the United States and of other countries at peace with the United States.

"Sec. 5. That from and after 40 days after the passage and approval of this act no person shall have in his possession or purchase, accept, receive, sell, give, barter or otherwise dispose of or procure explosives, or ingredients, except as provided in this act: Provided, That the purchase or possession of said ingredients when purchased or held in small quantities and not used or intended to be used in the manufacture of explosives: Provided further, That the superintendent, foreman, or other duly authorized employee, at a mine, quarry, or other work, may, when licensed so to do, sell or issue, to any workman under him, such an amount of explosives, or ingredients, as may be required by that workman in the performance of his duties, and the workman may purchase or accept the explosives, or ingredients, so sold or issued, but the person so selling or issuing same shall see that any unused explosives, or ingredients, are returned, and that no explosives, or ingredients, are taken by the workman to any point not necessary to the carrying on of his duties.

"Sec. 6. That nothing contained herein shall apply to explosives or ingredients while being transported upon vessels or railroad cars in conformity with statutory law or Interstate Commerce Commission rules.

"Sec. 7. That from and after 40 days after the passage of this act no person shall manufacture explosives unless licensed so to do, as hereinafter provided.

"Sec. 8. That any licensee or applicant for license hereunder shall furnish such information regarding himself and his business, so far as such business relates to or is connected with explosives or ingredients at such time and in such manner as the Director of the Bureau of Mines, or his authorized representative, may request, excepting that those who have been or are at the time of the passage of this act regularly engaged in the manufacture of explosives shall not be compelled to disclose secret processes, costs, or other data unrelated to the distribution of explosives.

"Sec. 9. That from and after 40 days after the passage and approval of this act every person authorized to sell, issue, or dispose of explosives shall keep a complete itemized and accurate record, showing each person to whom explosives are sold, given, bartered, or to whom or how otherwise disposed of, and the quantity and kind of explosives, and the date of each such sale, gift, barter, or other disposition; and this record shall be sworn to and furnished to the Director of the Bureau of Mines, or his authorized representatives, whenever requested.

"Sec. 10. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to issue licenses as follows:

"(a) Manufacturer's license, authorizing the manufacture, possession, and sale of explosives and ingredients.

"(b) Vendor's license, authorizing the purchase, possession, and sale of explosives or ingredients.

"(c) Purchaser's license, authorizing the purchase and possession of explosives and ingredients.

"(d) Foreman's license, authorizing the purchase and possession of explosives and ingredients, and the sale and issuance of explosives and ingredients to workmen under the proviso to section 5 above.

"(e) Exporter's license, authorizing the licensee to export explosives, but no such license shall authorize exportation in violation of any proclamation of the President issued under any act of Congress.

"(f) Importer's license, authorizing the licensee to import explosives.

"(g) Analyst's, educator's, inventor's, and investigator's licenses authorizing the purchase, manufacture, possession, testing, and disposal of explosives and ingredients.

"Sec. 11. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines shall issue licenses, upon application duly made, but only to citizens of the United States of America, and to the subjects or citizens of nations that are at peace with them, and to corporations, firms, and associations thereof, and he may, in his discretion, refuse to issue a license when he has reason to believe, from facts of which he has knowledge or reliable information, that the applicant is disloyal or hostile to the United States of America; or that, if the applicant is a firm, association, society, or corporation, its controlling stockholders or members are disloyal or hostile to the United States of America. The director may, when he has reason to believe on like grounds that any licensee is so disloyal or hostile, revoke any license issued to him. Any applicant to whom a license is refused or any licensee whose license is revoked by the said director may, at any time within 30 days after notification of the rejection of his application or revocation of his license, apply for such license or the cancellation of such revocation to the Council of National Defense, which shall make its order upon the director either to grant or to withhold the license.

"Sec. 12. That any person desiring to manufacture, sell, export, import, store, or purchase explosives or ingredients, or to keep explosives or ingredients in his possession, shall make application for a license, which application shall state, under oath, the name of the applicant; the place of birth; whether native born or naturalized citizen of the United States of America; if a naturalized citizen, the date and place of naturalization; business in which engaged; the amount and kind of explosives or ingredients which during the past six months have been purchased, disposed of, or used by him; the amount and kind of explosives or ingredients now on hand; whether sales, if any, have been made to jobbers, wholesalers, retailers, or consumers; the kind of license to be issued, and the kind and amount of explosives or ingredients to be authorized by the license; and such further information as the Director of the Bureau of Mines may, by rule, from time to time require.

"Applications for vendor's, purchaser's, or foreman's licenses shall be made to such officers of the State, Territory, or dependency having jurisdiction in the district within which the explosives or ingredients are to be sold or used, and having the power to administer oaths as may be designated by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, who shall issue the same in the name of such director. Such officers shall be entitled to receive from the applicant a fee of 25 cents for each license issued. They shall keep an accurate record of all licenses issued in manner and form to be prescribed by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, to whom they shall make reports from time to time as may be by rule issued by the director required. The necessary blanks and blank records shall be furnished to such officers by the said director. Licensing officers shall be subject to removal for cause by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, and all licenses issued by them shall be subject to revocation by the director as provided in section 11.

"SEC. 13. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint in each State and in Alaska an explosives inspector, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the Director of the Bureau of Mines, to see that this act is faithfully executed and observed. Each such inspector shall receive a salary of $2,400 per annum. He may at any time be detailed for service by said director in the District of Columbia or in any State, Territory, or dependency of the United States. All additional employees required in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be appointed by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

"SEC. 14. That it shall be unlawful for any person to represent himself as having a license issued under this act, when he has not such a license, or as having a license different in form or in conditions from the one which he in fact has, or without proper authority make, cause to be made, issue or exhibit anything purporting or pretending to be such license, or intended to mislead any person into believing it is such a license, or to refuse to exhibit his license to any peace officer, Federal or State, or representative of the Bureau of Mines.

"SEC. 15. That no inspector or other employee of the Bureau of Mines shall divulge any information obtained in the course of his duties under this act regarding the business of any licensee, or applicant for license, without authority from the applicant for license or from the Director of the Bureau of Mines.

"SEC. 16. That every person authorized under this act to manufacture or store explosives or ingredients shall clearly mark and define the premises on which his plant or magazine may be and shall conspicuously display thereon the words 'Explosives—Keep Off.'

"SEC. 17. That no person, without the consent of the owner or his authorized agents, except peace officers, the Director of the Bureau of Mines and persons designated by him in writing, shall be in or upon any plant or premises on which explosives are manufactured or stored, or be in or upon any magazine premises on which explosives are stored; nor shall any person discharge any firearms or throw or place any explosives or inflammable bombs at, on, or against any such plant or magazine premises, or cause the same to be done.

"SEC. 18. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying into effect this act, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

"SEC. 19. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act, or any rules or regulations made thereunder, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 20. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to investigate all explosions and fires which may occur in mines, quarries, factories, warehouses, magazines, houses, cars, boats, conveyances, and all places in which explosives or the ingredients thereof are manufactured, transported, stored, or used, and shall, in his discretion, report his findings, in such manner as he may deem fit, to the proper Federal or State authorities, to the end that if such explosion has been brought about by a willful act the person or persons causing such act may be proceeded against and brought to justice, or, if said explosion has been brought about by accidental means, that precautions may be taken to prevent similar accidents from occurring. In the prosecution of such investigations the employees of the Bureau of Mines are hereby granted the authority to enter the premises where such explosion or fire has occurred, to examine plans, books, and papers, to administer oaths to, and to examine all witnesses and persons concerned, without let or hindrance on the part of the owner, lessee, operator, or agent thereof.

"SEC. 21. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to utilize such agents, agencies, and all officers of the United States and of the several States, Territories, dependencies, and municipalities thereof, and the District of Columbia, in the execution of this act, and all agents, agencies, and all officers of the United States and of the several States and Territories, dependencies, and municipalities thereof, and the District of Columbia, shall hereby have full authority for all acts done by them in the execution of this act when acting by the direction of the Bureau of Mines.

"SEC. 22. That for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and including supplies, equipment, expenses of traveling and subsistence, and for the purchase and hire of animal-drawn or motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and upkeep of same, and for every other expense incident to the enforcement of the provisions of this act, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 shall be expended in the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles."

And the Senate agree to the same.

DENTAL SURGEONS IN THE ARMY.

MR. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have received a great many letters from students in dental colleges. I send two to the desk and ask the Secretary to read them, in the hope that the matter will be called to the attention of the War Department.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WILLIMANTIC, CONN., September 25, 1917.

Hon. Senator BRANDEGEE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am a senior student in the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery, and wish to call to your attention the fact that no provision was made for dental students in the order issued on August 29 by Gen. Crowder permitting drafted medical students to enlist in the Enlisted Reserve Corps. The War Department has thus failed to show its appreciation of the importance of dental service.

I have no desire to evade serving my country, but hope to have the opportunity to do so in the professional capacity for which I am partly trained.

May I urge you to use your personal influence with the Secretary of War to the end that action be taken?

Very truly, yours,

HARRY JOSEPH COTTER.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN., September 25, 1917.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I hereby appeal to you to write or, better still, to see Secretary of War Baker and urge him to use his influence in obtaining temporary furloughs for dental students, the same privileges as that accorded medical students, so that they can finish their courses.

England, France, and Canada have seen their folly in placing their young undergraduate medical and dental students on the firing line, and as a result there is a great scarcity of physicians and dentists, which will take a great many years to replace.

I am an eligible senior in the Thomas W. Evans Museum and Dental Institute, University of Pennsylvania, and expect to go to Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., October 4, 1917, and therefore solicit your aid in obtaining the necessary furlough.

Trusting that you will give this appeal your earnest attention, I am,
Yours, very truly,

JOSEPH P. MEEHAN,
99 Garden Street.

MR. BRANDEGEE. In order that students similarly situated throughout the country may know what the status is, I will say that I have sent a similar letter to Surg. Gen. Gorgas and a similar letter to Gen. Crowder, calling their attention to this situation, and asking them whether they contemplate recommending any legislation to correct it. I make this statement so that students throughout the country may be saved the trouble of writing thousands of such letters, which I suppose other Senators and Representatives continue to get and would have to answer.

SALINE RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 5431) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Saline River, at or near Suttons Ferry, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 137) thereon. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is interested in the bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Bradley, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Saline River, at or near Suttons Ferry in the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 15, township 13 south, range 9 west, of the fifth principal meridian on the Warren and Monticello Road, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and were referred as follows:

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 2923) for the relief of Charles M. Gourley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2924) granting a pension to Margaret Howell Butler; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 2925) granting a pension to Susan A. Hickman (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2926) granting an increase of pension to Amanda J. Hunt (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2927) granting an increase of pension to Adrian J. Hayward (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2928) granting an increase of pension to Ransom D. Ridge (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2929) granting a pension to Lawrence Fox (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 2930) granting a pension to Emma A. Hoskins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 2931) for the relief of Thomas Sevy; to the Committee on Public Lands.

NITROGEN AND NITROGENOUS MATERIAL.

Mr. SHIELDS. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read. The resolution (S. Res. 137) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the United States Senate with all information available to the Department of Agriculture concerning ammonia, nitrogen, and nitrogenous materials manufactured, imported, and used in the United States during the years, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, and the first six months of 1917, as follows:

1. The extent of the fields where nitrate of soda is found in the Republic of Chile and the probable unexhausted quantity there remaining; who owns and controls those fields, and the output mined from them and exported from that country.

2. Who owns and controls the ships and other vessels transporting Chilean nitrate of soda to the United States.

3. Who imports and purchases from the importers of Chilean nitrate of soda brought to the United States, and for what purpose and how used by such owners.

4. What number of tons have been imported in each of the years above named, what cost laid down in the ports of the United States, and what has the same sold for per ton in the markets of the United States each of said years.

5. What atmospheric nitrogen or ammonia has been manufactured in the United States for each of said years, and what has been the market value of the same.

6. The several foreign countries from which atmospheric nitrogen there produced was imported into the United States for each of said years, the quantity imported from each country, and the price for which it was sold upon the markets of the United States, and the available supplies in those countries.

7. The cost price of Chilean nitrate of soda, atmospheric nitrogen, and nitrogenous materials in the country where produced, and the cost of transportation to the United States in each of said several years, and the causes for the great increase of prices for which the same are now sold in the United States.

8. What proportion of nitrates and nitrogenous materials of all kinds imported into the United States are used for agricultural purposes in the manufacture of fertilizers, or otherwise, and what proportion is used in the manufacture of explosives for military, mining, and construction purposes.

9. What the Department of Agriculture, if anything, has done toward supplying the shortage in the supply of ammonia, nitrates, and nitrogenous materials now existing in the United States and required for agricultural purposes.

10. Whether Chilean nitrate of soda, atmospheric nitrogen, and nitrogenous materials, and the sale and disposition thereof, intended and used for agricultural purposes in the manufacture of fertilizers, and otherwise, are monopolized or attempted to be monopolized, in whole or in part, by any firms or corporations in the United States or other countries controlling the importations to the United States, and the names and residences of such parties.

The Secretary of Agriculture will, with the information herein called for, transmit to the Senate copies of all documents in his office necessary or convenient for a full explanation and understanding of all the various matters concerning which he is required to furnish information.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the subject matter of this resolution is one in which the entire country, especially that east of the Mississippi River, is now intensely interested. It is one of vast importance to the agricultural interests of that section and demands immediate attention.

Nitrogen and nitrogenous materials constitute about 40 per cent of the well-balanced fertilizer. It is absolutely necessary in the production of the great cotton and grain crops of the South. This fertilizer is used more or less all over the United States, but especially in the Southern States.

The Senate has passed a bill providing for a supply of potash, the next most important element, but nothing has been done so far to relieve the great distress upon the part of the country using fertilizers, resulting from the high cost of nitrogenous material. The cost since the war began has risen from $37 a ton to $105 a ton, and unless something is done to supply this necessity within the next year I do not think I am overestimating the case in stating that the crop of certain sections of the country will be decreased at least 50 per cent.

In view of the importance of it to the agricultural interests of the country I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not opposing the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee, but before unanimous consent is given I should like to know whether the information asked for would give any valuable military information to the enemy in the present war. I suggest that possibly the reply regarding the use of nitrogen demanded in the resolution might give information which we would not like to disclose.

Mr. SHIELDS. The information is really available to everyone who will investigate the subject; but what we want is the definite information that the Department of Agriculture has or should have. The resolution relates to the supply for agricultural purposes, and it is introduced in the interest of agriculture, to obtain facts upon which to predicate legislation to reduce the cost of fertilizers and destroy the trusts and monopolies now believed to control them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand that the resolution is in the interest of agriculture, but I did not know whether it was broad enough to cover information which might be of military service to the enemy.

Mr. SHIELDS. There is no intention of any disclosure of that kind, and none that is necessary in furnishing the information desired.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 24) of the House of Representatives, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4960) entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the word "act" where it first occurs in the third paragraph of section 19 of the bill, as the same was agreed upon in conference and to insert in lieu thereof the word "section," also, strike out the word "act" where it last occurs in said paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

MERCHANT MARINE TERMINALS.

THE IMPERATIVE NECESSITY OF ADDITIONAL TERMINALS FOR OUR GREAT MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a matter of supreme importance to the country in the present war emergency. It has been decided, I understand, as a matter of governmental policy, to divert to Gulf and south Atlantic ports virtually all movement of foodstuffs destined for export to Europe to relieve congestion of railroads and points in the East. The published reports are to the effect that the plan will be worked out by the Shipping Board in cooperation with shippers, shipowners, and port authorities; that the Shipping Board will appoint, at an early date, a general traffic director who will be put in charge of the program; and it is said the Shipping Board hopes to have the plan working by winter, before snows and bad weather have made transcontinental freight traffic still harder to move. Officials who have given the subject thought declare the proposal will add from 25 to 30 per cent to the efficiency of American railway systems and will do away with the present congestion of freight in northeastern ports. The chief advantage claimed for the arrangement suggested is that export food, largely southern, western, and middle western products, will get a shorter railroad haul, and that munitions and other manufactured products, turned out largely in the East, will not be delayed in shipment while awaiting their turns with raw products. It is further stated that under a traffic director the Shipping Board will name three shipping directors, one for trans-Atlantic trade, another for South American trade, and a third for the Pacific. In all the important ports it is planned to appoint voluntary terminal committees to assist the traffic director in expediting the loading and sailing of vessels.

I also notice in the New York Herald, of the 20th instant, page 4, column 1, an account of an inspection of the port of New York, made by the governors of New York and New Jersey in company with the New York-New Jersey Port Development Commission. The statement is made that the authorities of this great port, and the chief executives of these States declared that the improvement of the port of New York was not only a local but a national duty, since it served a national purpose. I concur in that view so forcibly expressed in the Herald. I believe that now, more than ever, Congress should recognize that the improvement of the ports of the country, in cooperation with the local authorities at the different ports, is a national duty. I go further, and I say that the Government should cooperate with the authorities at producing centers in the interior, like Kansas City, St. Louis, St. Paul, and others, so that there may be established through such cooperation, and so as to efficiently serve the people in this great national crisis, a comprehensive system of storage warehouses and terminal facilities covering the entire country.

This matter was ably presented in a leading article published in the Washington Post on the 19th instant, and, Mr. President, I ask permission to insert this article in the RECORD without reading, as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The article referred to is as follows:

[Washington Post, Sept. 19, 1917.]

LACK SHIP TERMINALS—UNITED STATES AND ALLIES' SUPPLY SYSTEM NEEDS MORE PORT WAREHOUSES—CALLED TO HURLEY'S NOTICE—DEFENSE COMMITTEE FORESEES FACILITIES NECESSARY TO OPERATE NEW FLEET—POWERFUL INTERESTS AT WORK HERE TO INDUCE GOVERNMENT TO ESTABLISH COMMERCIAL BASES AT PRINCIPAL HARBORS—PART OF GIANTIC PLAN TO SYSTEMATIZE TRANSPORTATION WHEN ADDED SHIPS ARE READY.

[By Albert W. Fox.]

Realizing the danger of a breakdown in the Nation's supply system to Europe, which will be under an increasingly greater strain as American forces in Europe are augmented, powerful interests here are urging the Government to take advance steps toward establishing commercial bases at the principal ports and cooperating with the local authorities at various producing centers.

The possibility of having no adequate means for properly making use of the increased merchant tonnage, for which Congress has appropriated $2,000,000,000, already looms up to leading men on the terminal committee of the Council of National Defense and has been called to the attention of Chairman Hurley, of the shipping board. The facilities for handling even the present limited shipping are inadequate.

The problem of keeping up a steady flow of supplies to our allies and providing perhaps 2,000,000 American troops in Europe can not be solved by simply turning out a great fleet of cargo ships.

HANDLE INCREASED TRAFFIC.

Provision must be made for handling the enormously increased traffic which these ships are to take care of by building up supply bases at the ports, providing warehouses and storage facilities at the producing and terminal centers and otherwise systematizing the whole gigantic plan of transportation. This preparatory work will take months and it is generally felt that it should be begun immediately.

Nothing is more vital to the Nation's war aims than to have assurance that there will be not even temporary collapse of our provisioning system to Europe after we are deeply involved in the struggle. No excuses such as had to be made when the trans-Atlantic transportation system broke down in New York last year can be considered. President Wilson's slogan is to be "sustained effort" when the time comes for the supreme task of the United States and the allies in Europe, and this implies a perfect and guaranteed system of supplies.

COORDINATE ALL ELEMENTS.

The President's basic idea is that all elements involved in getting supplies from the United States to Europe must be so coordinated as to begin with the man on the farm and continue automatically to the railroads, producing centers for ships, warehouses, etc. If we have terminal facilities for 600 ships which are twice as efficient as facilities for 1,200 ships the net result so far as getting supplies off to Europe is in each case the same.

A ship that can be loaded in 48 hours is worth two ships that take 96 hours to load. The efficiency or inefficiency of these facilities will depend on what the Government makes them, but the Government can not afford to wait until the ships are here and then think about building great warehouses which will take months to build.

Apparently the President's advisers on this matter are divided into two groups with men like Chairman Hurley, Morris L. Cook, Francis Lee Stuart, J. Devereux O'Reilly, and C. F. Stannford, the latter all on the terminal committee, advocating action now. The other group sees legal obstacles in the way of the plan and seems to believe that local authorities at the ports and producing centers can be depended upon to "have things ready" when the big merchant fleet puts the real test of efficiency up for trial.

MAJOR POINTS INVOLVED.

The major points involved are whether the President should have the Federal Government cooperate actively with the local authorities and even take charge of building up the necessary facilities itself and, secondly, whether the President has the legal authority for spending money in providing warehouses, storage houses, etc., to take care of the shipping that will be handled by the new merchant marine.

Under the emergency deficiency bill, passed June 15, the President is authorized "to build and operate ships." Does this authorize the President to build warehouses and other vitally necessary accessories at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and New Orleans? On one hand, opinion is advanced that it does not, while the advocates of immediate action maintain that it does. They base this on the Supreme Court decision in the case of the Philadelphia & Southern Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania (122 U. S. Rept., 326), which sustained the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Field (Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S., 196), "that the business of landing and receiving passengers and freight at the wharf in Philadelphia was a necessary incident to and part of their transportation across the Delaware River to New Jersey; that without it transportation would be impossible."

NECESSARY TO TRANSPORTATION.

On the basis of this decision, it is now contended that the United States Government's business of landing and receiving freight at the wharves in the various ports is a necessary incident to and part of their transportation across the ocean and without it that transportation would be impossible. The President having the power to build and operate ships, it necessarily follows, it is contended, as an inevitable consequence of that grant that he has the right and the duty to provide proper terminal facilities at the ports.

A preliminary survey of ports and consideration of work which might be done under Government supervision at producing centers like St. Louis, St. Paul, Chicago, etc., indicates that the facilities for putting the transport service to Europe on efficient basis and permitting it to care for rapidly expanding needs would total approximately $200,000,000.

DEPENDS ON TERMINALS.

The concrete steps which the Government may take in putting the plan into operation will be first to call attention to the vital fact that the usefulness of the new merchant fleet will largely depend on the terminal facilities of the Nation. With 50 per cent terminal facilities we will get only 50 per cent of the maximum usefulness out of the plan.

The Government may then call upon the local authorities at the principal ports and in big producing centers to make report as to what is needed while at the same time offering to cooperate on work which must necessarily be done.

RESPONSIBILITY ON GOVERNMENT.

There are already evidences that many cities believe the Government should take from them the responsibility and the burden of necessary rush construction work incidental to the prosecution of the war. If a big warehouse and other construction work are needed by the Government at Baltimore, for example, it is contended that the Government should bear the responsibility and the expense, as a matter of this kind would be strictly in line with the national business of prosecuting the war and would be a national matter.

It is now definitely known that the Government's original idea of throwing the entire business of the country on the Atlantic seaboard as a war-emergency measure has had to be abandoned. It is likewise understood that the idea of throwing the responsibility for the Nation's vitally important supply system to Europe on various localities has been given up.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, in the Baltimore Manufacturers' Record of to-day's issue there is a very interesting interview on the same subject with Mr. Arthur McGuirk, special counsel of the board of commissioners of the port of New Orleans, and the proposition which he suggests is indorsed in a very strong editorial. I ask permission to insert that editorial as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is so ordered, without objection.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

GREATER UTILIZATION OF SOUTHERN PORTS AS A HELP TO WIN THE WAR.

A vastly greater utilization of southern ports for the shipment of supplies to the American forces in Europe is of obvious necessity at this time. The terminal facilities of northern ports are inadequate for ordinary commerce, as frequent embargoes have shown. What will be the situation, then, when the hundreds of additional ships under construction by the emergency fleet commission of the United States Shipping Board are ready to take on cargoes of war supplies for delivery on the other side? In warfare continuous, enormous, and prompt shipments of food are not less vital than munitions, and with present export ports choked up, with trains unable to promptly deliver goods either to vessels or to storage warehouses, a situation may well be developed that would imperil the effectiveness of the American troops, even before the 2,000,000 men or more who will eventually form the United States expeditionary forces abroad have landed on European soil.

At the great war convention of American business men at Atlantic City last week a resolution was presented by Mr. T. C. Powell, vice president of the Southern Railway, of Cincinnati, proposing Government supervision and distribution of shipments, so that every port of the Atlantic and the Gulf might be utilized to the utmost extent. Mr. Powell's resolution recited that "the free movement of commodities to France for our own armies and to England and the Continent for our allies is a prime necessity at this time; that the concentration of these commodities and foodstuffs at a few ports leads to congestion and delay; that the movement to the ports is governed by the ships available at said ports; that it is within the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States of America to so direct and distribute available ship tonnage as to maintain free and uninterrupted movement of munitions and supplies through each one of the Atlantic and Gulf ports; that there is not now, nor has there been, any congestion on the railroads of the South, or at any of the ports on the South Atlantic or Gulf coast; that to bring back from the South to the North, East and West supplies of lumber, iron, steel, cotton needed in the manufacture of munitions of war, locomotives, cars, tools, construction of cantonments, etc., it has been necessary for the railroad war board to arbitrarily direct thousands of empty freight cars to be moved to the South for this loading northbound; that this economic loss of transportation capacity could be largely reduced and offset by opening up more freely the southern ports by sending ships to said southern ports, and that the problem of providing temporary shelter and storage space prior to the transshipment for the immense stores of food, clothing, and munitions needed in ever-increasing volume by our own troops would be largely solved by this distribution of tonnage and goods among all the Atlantic and Gulf ports, Boston to Galveston, inclusive, and by the use of the large warehouses at said ports and adjacent thereto," under which circumstances it was urged that the proper governmental authority be requested to take action on this situation.

The necessity for governmental action along these lines is further urged by Mr. Arthur McGuirk, special counsel for the board of commissioners of the port of New Orleans, in an interview printed elsewhere in this issue of the Manufacturers' Record. Mr. McGuirk takes the position that the operation of ocean shipping should be directed by the Shipping Board, just as the railroads of the country are now operated by a railroad board of five men, so that vessels would be distributed among the ports which may at the moment be the freest from congested conditions. Just now southern ports would meet the situation, if the Shipping Board, sitting as on an observation tower, were to survey the entire field and allot cargoes and distribute ships in accordance with local conditions that were found to exist.

But when the ships of the emergency fleet are put into service, and the demands for ever-increasing quantities of supplies become a seriously perplexing problem, vitally affecting the fighting strength of the armies abroad, there will be necessity for enormously increased storage capacity at the ports of the South as well as in those of the North. The situation will be so serious and the urgency so immediate, Mr. McGuirk contends, that communities will be unable to provide adequate terminals—large storage warehouses, wharves, and adjuncts—within the time required to keep the flow of food and munitions supplies up to the necessary volume. He therefore urges that the Government itself undertake the construction of warehouses, and he quotes Supreme Court decisions to prove that in empowering the Shipping Board to operate ships authority was necessarily conferred to provide adequate terminals, without which the complete operation of a fleet could not be attained.

In making a plea that New Orleans be given Government aid in storage warehouse construction Mr. McGuirk relates that after spending some $20,000,000 in recent years on grain elevators, cotton warehouses, wharves, and sheds the facilities of the port are hard pressed by shipping demands, which go hand in hand with the expansion as it occurs, so that "terminals act as trade magnets," he declares.

As an illustration Mr. McGuirk states that California made New Orleans a tender of 10,000,000 bushels of barley as soon as announcement was made of intention to double the elevator capacity.

Undaunted it would take New Orleans many years to provide the terminals that should be ready by the time the emergency fleet is in operation, Mr. McGuirk declares.

High prices of materials and inability to get deliveries impede progress at this time, and so it is urged that the Government, with its power to commandeer materials and activities, should set aside $200,000,000 or so to supplement the present terminals at various important ports of the country. These warehouses, instead of being temporary structures, as some have suggested, should be permanent, for use in building up and holding foreign trade, and for the utilization of our new merchant marine after the war. The expansion of terminals by the Government should not be an expedient, but a principle," Mr. McGuirk maintains.

A plan is suggested for amortization of bonds issued for this purpose, if the Government wishes to handle the matter on the basis of a loan, although, as in the case of land grants and bond issues to aid in the construction of transcontinental railroads, and in appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and the construction of levees and of good roads, the Government might with propriety, it is maintained, look on moneys spent for terminals as a benefit to the Nation as a whole, especially as "if victory rests on ships to be built by the United States, victory then ultimately rests upon the terminals, without which the operation of the ships will be impossible."

An interesting point is made as to the demoralization that would come to the submarine campaign of Germany if traffic were to be diverted to the ports of the South instead of continuing on the well-known lanes between New York and Liverpool and New York and Havre, for there could be no mass attack on a scattered fleet of ships sailing outside of present traveled lanes. The present bases of submarines would be useless and none could be established in the West Indies or on the Mexican Gulf.

The element of safety is thus added to all other reasons why southern ports should be utilized to the greatest possible extent.

In the emergency that exists vigorous action should be taken by the Shipping Board and local institutions in cooperation, so that the most feasible plan for insuring supplies for the troops may be worked out, and without a moment of unnecessary delay, now or in the future.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, an extensive shipbuilding and port terminal program for this country is not merely imperative now but it will be an economic necessity after the war. Congress has recognized the necessity for terminal facilities for the Army. In the urgent deficiency bill, just passed, I read, for example:

Terminal facilities: For terminal storage and shipping buildings and other facilities, including rentals and purchase of land, $10,000,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise to incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $5,000,000 in addition to the appropriation herein made.

This makes a total of $15,000,000 for terminals, and so forth, for use of the Army. Under the head of "Transportation of the Army and of supplies" there is provision in the $350,000,000 appropriation "for payment of wharfage, tolls, and ferriages." Again, in the same bill, under the heading "Barracks and quarters," expenditures are authorized for "storehouses," and under the title "Roads, walks, wharves, and drainage" an appropriation of $12,000,000 is provided "for the construction and repair by the Quartermaster Corps of roads, walks, and wharves." A large part of this $12,000,000 will doubtless go into terminals.

In the rivers and harbors bill approved August 8, 1917, we created a Waterways Commission "to bring into coordination and cooperation the engineering, scientific, and constructive services, bureaus, boards, and commissions of the several governmental departments of the United States and commissions created by Congress * * * with a view to uniting such services" with respect, among other things, to the "promotion of terminals and transfer facilities," and it is provided that there shall be "cooperation between the United States and the several States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisdiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, and with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as may be undertaken by the United States, and to the States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portions as belong to their respective jurisdiction, rights, and interests."

This is a declaration of sound public policy. It looks to coordination of effort and of facilities. Its purpose is to prevent duplication. This policy should be applied in an intelligent solution of our transportation problems by land and water. Of course a system of terminals and storage warehouses on the seaboard, on the Great Lakes, and on the great rivers of our country is a vital necessity to our success in the tremendous task we have undertaken. No half measures will suffice. The issue must be met boldly. From the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Canadian line to the Gulf of Mexico, the network of storage warehouses and proper terminals must be spread and constitute a general system. The activities of all the departments of the Government must be intelligently directed to that end, and in the expenditure of the money provided and to be provided in the establishment of this great national terminal system the rights of all concerned, both public and private, should be respected. This can readily be brought about by an observance of the rule of policy established by Congress in the rivers and harbors bill from which I have just read.

Mr. President, we have found no difficulty in times past, and we find no difficulty now, in cooperating with the local authorities in the building of good roads, levees, and other permanent improvements, and the same policy should be followed with respect to the system of storage warehouses and port terminals, so indispensably necessary to the proper service of our emergency fleet, upon which we are spending $1,749,000,000. Once again a truly American merchant marine will sail the seas, carrying the flag to every port on the globe. Our fleet will be the greatest and the best in the world. It will symbolize freedom—the freedom of the seas so inseparable from the freedom of the land. We are breathing into it the true, unconquerable American spirit. We have a clear conception of our duty to provide all things necessary for its service, and we will not fail in that duty.

Mr. President, I notice that at the great war convention of the business men at Atlantic City last week a resolution was presented and adopted which recited "the free movement of commodities to France for our own armies and to England and the Continent for our allies, is a prime necessity at this time; that the concentration of these commodities and foodstuffs at a few ports leads to congestion and delay; that the movement to the ports is governed by the ships available at said ports; that it is within the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States of America to so direct and distribute available ship tonnage as to maintain free and uninterrupted movement of munitions and supplies through each one of the Atlantic and Gulf ports; that there is not now, nor has there been, any congestion on the railroads of the South, or at any of the ports on the south Atlantic or Gulf coasts; that to bring back from the South to the North, East, and West supplies of lumber, iron, steel, cotton needed in the manufacture of munitions of war, locomotives, cars, tools, construction of cantonments," and so forth, "it has been necessary for the Railroad War Board to arbitrarily direct thousands of freight cars to be moved to the South for this loading northbound; that this economic loss of transportation capacity could be largely reduced and offset by opening up more freely the southern ports by sending ships to said southern ports, and that the problem of providing temporary shelter and storage space prior to the transshipment for the immense stores of food, clothing, and munitions needed in ever-increasing volume by our own troops would be largely solved by this distribution of tonnage and goods among all the Atlantic and Gulf ports, Boston to Galveston, inclusive, and by the use of the large warehouses at said ports and adjacent thereto," and so forth.

This resolution was offered by Mr. T. C. Powell, vice president of the Southern Railway, who is an authority upon terminals, and in the resolution the Government is urged to take action along the lines set forth. I quite agree with the spirit of the resolution, but I go a step further and say that the shelter and storage space to be provided for prior to transshipment should be permanent and not temporary in character. We have not been appalled by the gigantic expenditures we have been called upon to authorize. At the same time in all this waste of war, in all this destruction, some attention should be paid to our future after the war, and out of all these colossal expenditures some brand should be saved from the burning and some construction should be made permanent. We must, in some way, repay all the money that is now being expended, and we should, as far as possible, preserve the tools with which we must earn it. It would be improvident indeed not to build permanently when we can just as well do so.

It seems to be generally agreed that some such storage and terminal system as I have outlined is needed. It remains for us to say whether that system shall be of permanent value to the Nation or a mere temporary expedient. It seems to me that as between a permanent system and a temporary one there can be little choice, and that it is our patriotic duty to require all the departments of the Government to cooperate with the local authorities so that the system to be established shall be permanent and serve us efficiently, both during and after the war.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, in December of last year the Congress passed what is known as the stock-raising homestead law. That act provided in section 1 as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful for any person qualified to make entry under the homestead laws of the United States to make a stock-raising homestead entry for not exceeding 640 acres of unappropriated unreserved public land in reasonably compact form: Provided, however, That the land so entered shall theretofore have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as "stock-raising lands."

Section 2 provided:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, on application or otherwise, to designate as stock-raising lands subject to entry under this act lands the surface of which is, in his opinion, chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops, do not contain merchantable timber, are not susceptible of irrigation from any known source of water supply, and are of such character that 640 acres are reasonably required for the support of a family.

The bill provided further that until the lands were classified the intending entryman should not have the right to maintain exclusive possession. The result is that throughout the West a large number of people have gone upon lands which would be subject to entry under this act provided they were classified. My information is that something over 70,000 people have made entry of these lands, but under the terms of the act can acquire no legal right to maintain possession or use the lands and develop them to make them productive. In these times it is important that wherever anyone is willing to go upon lands and make them productive he should have an opportunity to do so.

There was no appropriation made during the last session of Congress which would enable the Secretary of the Interior to classify these lands, and funds for that purpose were not made available until the 1st of July of this year.

It is exceedingly important that these lands be classified at once, or, at any rate, within the next six months, so that next spring, at least, people who desire to go upon these lands may go there with some legal right.

A few weeks ago the Senate adopted an amendment to one of the food-control bills which would have remedied the situation in certain of the Western States, but the bill to which that amendment was attached was considered by the Committee on Agriculture, and that committee did not feel that it had sufficient knowledge of the situation to justify retaining it upon the bill in conference. So the amendment, which had been formally submitted by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and which was agreed to by the Senate almost unanimously, did not remain upon the bill as it came out of conference. So it became necessary to introduce a new bill, which I did some weeks ago. That bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and is now before the Senate with a favorable report from that committee, the committee suggesting two amendments, so as to include two additional States which were not named in the bill as originally introduced.

This is a matter of vital importance to many sections of the West, and is an essential measure if we intend to increase the food production of the country. It will develop the country and tend to bring about the results for which we are all seeking at this particular time. In view of the situation, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now take up for consideration the bill (S. 2776) providing for the classification of lands under the stock-grazing homestead act in certain States, and for other purposes, which is No. 117 on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HUSTING. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 117, being Senate bill 2776.

Mr. HUSTING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	New	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Husting	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Brandee	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smith, Md.
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Smith, S. C.
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Smoot
Cummins	Kellogg	Pittman	Sterling
Curtis	Kenyon	Polindexter	Swanson
Fernald	King	Pomerene	Trammell
Fletcher	La Follette	Ransdell	Wadsworth
France	McCumber	Robinson	Weeks
Gerry	McKellar	Shafroth	Williams
Gore	McNary	Sheppard
Hale	Martin	Shields

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of sickness and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have been requested by the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] to announce that he is temporarily unavoidably detained.

Mr. HUSTING. I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON]. I wish also to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] on account of illness.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIBBY], who has been called home on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2776) providing for the classification of lands under the stock-grazing homestead act in certain States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2776) providing for the classification of lands under the stock-grazing homestead act in certain States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to complete the classification or designation of lands within the States of New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, and South Dakota, as provided in the stock-grazing homestead act in cases in which application has heretofore been made to enter land under said act, within six months of the enactment of this act; and that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to complete the classification or designation of lands within the aforesaid States as provided in the stock-grazing homestead act in cases in which application may hereafter be made to enter land under said act, within six months from date of the filing of application therefor: Provided further, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall fail to so classify or designate the said lands within the time as directed in the foregoing proviso, then and in such event such lands shall be deemed prima facie classified in the manner and to the effect following, to wit:

(a) All applications for entry of public lands under the provisions of the act of December 29, 1916, known as the 640-acre homestead act, heretofore or hereafter made in the States of New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, and South Dakota, which contain in substance a verified statement by the applicant, corroborated by the affidavits of two disinterested parties, that said lands do not contain merchantable timber suitable for lumber purposes, are not susceptible of irrigation from any known source of water supply, do not contain any water hole or other body of water needed by the public for watering purposes, that the land is chiefly valuable for grazing or raising forage crops, are hereby directed to be received, if otherwise regular, by the respective land officials and given the same force and effect as if such lands embraced within such application had been classified by the Secretary of the Interior as lands subject to entry under said act prior to the date of the filing of such application: Provided, however, That the filing of any such application shall be only prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and that an individual or the Government may, within one year after the allowance of such application, institute a contest against such application upon the ground that such facts so stated are not true, and if upon such contest it shall appear that such statements are not true, then and in such case said application and any entry which may be allowed upon such application shall be canceled: Provided further, That if any application heretofore or hereafter filed for entry of lands under said act shall not contain a statement of all of said facts, they may be declared defective by any land-office official authorized to pass upon the sufficiency of such applications, and in such event the applicant shall have the right to correct his application by the filing of additional affidavits showing any or all of said facts within 30 days after he shall receive notice of any such defect in his application, and upon the filing of such additional affidavits duly corroborated showing such of said facts as were omitted from the application the said application shall then be allowed with the same force and effect as if said facts had appeared in the said application; and

(b) All applications for additional entries of public lands under the provisions of said act, heretofore or hereafter made in said States, which contain in substance a verified statement by the applicant, corroborated by the affidavits of two disinterested parties, that the land within the original filing or entry does not contain merchantable timber suitable for lumber purposes; is not susceptible of irrigation from any known source of water supply, and that the land is chiefly valuable for grazing or raising forage crops, are hereby directed to be received, if otherwise regular, by the respective land officials and given the same force and effect as if such lands embraced within such original filing or entry had been classified by the Secretary of the Interior as lands of the same character as land subject to entry under said act prior to the date of the filing of said application: Provided, however, That the filing of any such application for additional entries shall be only prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated and subject to contest in the same manner and to the same extent as provided in the foregoing section as to applications for original entries, but if any of said applications are defective such defects may be cured in the same manner, to the same extent, and with like effect as provided in the foregoing section for the curing of defects in applications for original entries of lands under said act.

SEC. 2. That hereafter no forest reservation shall be created, nor shall any additions be made to one heretofore created, within the limits of the States of New Mexico and Arizona, except by act of Congress.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico whether he would object to having the State of Washington included within the terms of the bill?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No objection whatever.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer that amendment at the proper time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE EBENEZER J. HILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL, late a Representative from the State of Connecticut, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
September 27, 1917.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL, a Representative from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That a committee of 21 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

In accordance with the foregoing resolution, the Speaker appointed Mr. LONERGAN, Mr. TILSON, Mr. GLYNN, Mr. FREEMAN, Mr. HULL of Tennessee, Mr. GILLET, Mr. GARNER, Mr. COLLIER, Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. OLDFIELD, Mr. CRISP, Mr. HELVERING, Mr. O'SHAUNESSY, Mr. CAREW, Mr. WHITE of Ohio, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. SLOAN, Mr. LONGWORTH, Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD, Mr. STERLING of Illinois, Mr. MARTIN of Louisiana, Mr. TREADWAY, and Mr. RODENBERG.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL served continuously in the House of Representatives for 23 years, with the exception of a period of two years. He was one of the great leaders of the Republican Party during that entire period. He occupied a prominent position upon many of the most important committees of the House. He was a great expert upon banking and currency, tariff questions, and all commercial questions. His name was a household word in bankers' conventions and upon political platforms in this country for many years.

At some future time I shall ask the Senate to set aside a day when proper tribute may be paid to the life, character, and distinguished public services of this great man.

I send to the desk resolutions, which I ask to have read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 138) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of the Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL, late a Representative from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That a committee of eight Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

The VICE PRESIDENT, under the second resolution, appointed Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. JAMES, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. NEWLANDS the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Saturday next.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Saturday, September 29, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, September 27, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, "in whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," constant in Thy ministrations, upholding, sustaining, guiding those who wait upon Thee, we thank Thee for past blessings and most earnestly pray that we may lean with greater confidence upon Thee, that as individuals and as a Nation we may march onward and upward in righteousness, truth, and justice.

Once more in the dispensation of Thy Providence we are called upon to mourn the loss of a Member of this House. Wise in his counsels, firm in his convictions, pure in his motives, he leaves behind him a worthy record. Comfort, we beseech Thee, his colleagues, friends, and the bereaved family with the promises of the Gospel.

We know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise;
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies—

so we trust, hope, aspire, and pray in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, September 25, was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—FOREIGN SHIPPING.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent, namely, that the bill H. R. 6175, a bill to admit ships of foreign registry into the coastwise trade, be made a special order, subject to the consideration of conference reports and other privileged matters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 6175 be made in order, subject to conference reports, privileged matters, and matters on the Speaker's table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I would like to learn from the gentleman from Missouri if this bill is brought up for consideration, if there will be ample time for debate?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why, certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall not make an objection, then.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he expects to bring the bill up for consideration to-day?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do, unless the House should adjourn out of respect to the memory of Mr. HILL.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand the House will probably adjourn.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I want to give it a privileged status, so that it may come up to-morrow if there are no conference reports or other matters to be brought up.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman desires to have the bill given a privileged status, so that it can be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is, provided we adjourn over to-day. If not, I want to take it up for immediate consideration.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if I can get, during the time for debate on the bill, five minutes out of order to talk about the proposed taking over of the Bureau of Accounts and Supplies of the Navy Department by this War Industries Board? My remarks will be purely of a complimentary character, and I want to call the situation to the attention of the House.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will give the gentleman time if I have it at my disposal.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is the debate going to be confined to the bill?

The SPEAKER. I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under general debate the gentleman would have the privilege of speaking on any matter outside of the subject matter of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] whether the hearings that we talked about the other day are available to Members?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Oh, yes. They are printed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] that this bill be made privileged as a continuing order?

Mr. MADDEN. To-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It does not make any difference whether the House adjourns to-day or not. If it does not adjourn it is privileged now.

Mr. GARNER. Will not conference reports be privileged business?

The SPEAKER. Of course, conference reports and matters of the highest privilege are always in order, no matter what is under consideration.

Mr. GILLETT. As to a report from the Committee on Rules, would that give it precedence over that?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Another thing, Mr. Speaker, would this give the consideration of this bill the right of way over the announcement of the death of a Member?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. That is, the Chair would recognize some gentleman to offer a resolution.

Mr. STEENERSON. Nor would it supersede a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair just stated it would not. It would undoubtedly supersede ordinary privileged matter.

Mr. STEENERSON. The question is whether it would supersede a privileged motion to discharge a committee of inquiry under an ordinary resolution of inquiry for information from the President? It is privileged under the rules. Whether that is included in the matters of privilege or not—

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that if he has read this bill and report, and the hearings, I think he will be impressed with the very great importance of the bill as regards the successful prosecution of this war. It ought not to give place to any ordinary privileged matter.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, well, I can not agree to that. I certainly will object if it will supersede a motion that I was about to make to discharge a committee from the consideration of a resolution of inquiry. It would not take long. It is a very expeditious matter, and it is privileged.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no objection to that if it will not take long.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is what I want to understand. It is not debatable, and it can be quickly disposed of. I wanted it understood. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I shall not object.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire if the bill to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] is referring would prevent the consideration of the resolution which was introduced here the other day by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I object. I will save time by objecting.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4960) entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the word "it," on page 21, line 20, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "him."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend funds in New Mexico and Texas for drainage purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2920) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the State of North Carolina two brass cannon, with carriages, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 5949. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2705) to create the Aircraft Board and provide for its maintenance.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2883. An act making further provision for the allotment of pay of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2705. An act to create the Aircraft Board and provide for its maintenance; and

S. 2156. An act to authorize exploration for and disposition of potassium.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on September 26, 1917, they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 5335. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., authorized by an act approved January 28, 1916.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 24.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4960) entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the word "act" where it first occurs in the third paragraph of section 19 of the bill as the same was agreed upon in conference, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "section." Also strike out the word "act" where it last occurs in said paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia to what the word "act" refers?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It refers to the whole. It should apply to the whole act.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The word "act" did not refer exclusively to the espionage act?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No. This makes it more concrete and perfects the text, as was intended by the House and by the committee of conference.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the word "act" as there used refer to the espionage act?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; to the act itself, not to the espionage act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask what would be the effect of a refusal to consent to the consideration of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. That would be a question for the House to decide.

Mr. LONDON. No action, or a refusal to the request for the consideration of this resolution at the present time, would simply delay it?

The SPEAKER. Yes. It does not kill it. I suppose it would delay it until to-morrow. If the House remained in session all day to-day, they might call it up again at some convenient season to-day.

Mr. LONDON. If that is all the damage I could do, I shall not object. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MONTAGUE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE E. J. HILL, OF CONNECTICUT.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to announce to this House the death of my distinguished colleague, the Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL, who for more than 20 years has represented his State in Congress with remarkable integrity and fidelity.

At some later day I shall ask that a day be set aside when fitting tribute can be paid to his distinguished character and to his eminent public services. At this time I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 155.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL, a Representative from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That a committee of 23 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this resolution, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the House Members of the committee to attend the funeral. The Chair would appoint the entire Committee on Ways and Means were it not for the fact that Messrs. KITCHIN, RAINY, DIXON, FORDNEY, GARNER, and MOORE of Pennsylvania are on this conference committee on the war-revenue bill. If any of them want to go, I will appoint them. I do not think they can go, and I do not think they ought to go, although, of course, everybody had great respect for Mr. HILL, and the entire House would like to go.

Mr. KITCHIN. It will be impossible, I will say, Mr. Speaker, for the first five Members to go.

The SPEAKER. I will appoint the committee as follows: Mr. LONERGAN, Mr. TILSON, Mr. GLYNN, Mr. FREEMAN, Mr. GILLET, Mr. HULL of Tennessee, Mr. GARNER, Mr. COLLIER, Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. OLDFIELD, Mr. CRISP, Mr. HELVERING, Mr. O'SHAUNESSY, Mr. CAREW, Mr. WHITE of Ohio, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. SLOAN, Mr. LONGWORTH, Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD, Mr. STERLING of Illinois, Mr. MARTIN of Louisiana, Mr. TREADWAY, and Mr. RODENBERG.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, September 28, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a petition from certain lighthouse keepers stationed in the States of Oregon and Washington for an increase in compensation, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MONTAGUE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2878) granting the consent of Congress to The Whiteville Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Waccamaw River, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 167), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GARD: A bill (H. R. 6329) to amend sections 24 and 256 of the Judicial Code, relating to the jurisdiction of the district courts, so as to save to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PLATT: A bill (H. R. 6330) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts of August 4, 1914, August 15, 1914, March 3, 1915, and September 7, 1916; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 6331) to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 6332) to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to call upon such States as received money from the Federal Government under the terms of the act of June 23, 1836, for the repayment of the same as provided in said act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 6333) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6334) authorizing men in the military and naval service of the United States to make certain affidavits required by the land laws before their commanding officers; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 6335) granting a pension to Huldah Bone; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 6336) granting an increase of pension to Robert Marshall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6337) granting an increase of pension to Robert B. Whinery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6338) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Sabine; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6339) granting an increase of pension to George Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOREMUS: A bill (H. R. 6340) granting a pension to Leo A. Kelly; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 6341) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. IGOE: A bill (H. R. 6342) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enroll Isabell Richter, née Bell Cook, and her son, Charles H. Richter, as Cherokee Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MONTAGUE: A bill (H. R. 6343) authorizing the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint John B. H. Waring, late a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, a major in the Medical Corps on the retired list, and increasing the retired list by one for the purpose of this act; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALDOW: A bill (H. R. 6344) granting an increase of pension to Beverly M. Stanton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GALLAGHER: Resolution (H. Res. 153) authorizing the Clerk of the House to pay to Myra Collins, daughter of Lewis Lepreux, late a Capitol policeman, a sum equal to six months' compensation; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. CROSSER: Resolution (H. Res. 154) providing for the immediate consideration of House joint resolution 116; to the Committee on Rules.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. FULLER: Petitions of citizens of Peru, Ill., asking conservation of public lands and other public resources; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, memorial of the American Institute of Architects, asking for an investigation of the high cost of building materials; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. TAGUE: Memorial of Division 57, Ancient Order of Hibernians, requesting that the President demand that Great Britain send the 140,000 English soldiers now in Ireland to France to aid in the prosecution of the war, and requesting that the President demand complete independence of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, September 28, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

All that is and all that is to be is of Thee, O God, our heavenly Father, and Thou art supremely good. Sanctify the hour with a sense of Thy presence. Increase our faith and confidence and create a right spirit within, that we may be instruments for the furtherance of Thy plans and purposes, in imitation of the Master who said:

"I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work."

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5431) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Saline River, at or near Suttons Ferry, Ark.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 24.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4960) entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the word "act" where it first occurs in the third paragraph of section 19 of the bill, as the same was agreed upon in conference, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "section"; also, strike out the word "act" where it last occurs in said paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate resolution 138.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of the Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL, late a Representative from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That a committee of eight Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

And that in compliance with the foregoing resolution the Vice President had appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. McLEAN, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. JAMES, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. NEWLANDS.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4960. An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 5431. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Saline River, at or near Suttons Ferry, Ark.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and a joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2920. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the State of North Carolina two brass cannon with carriage; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2883. An act to amend an act approved March 2, 1899, increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. J. Res. 89. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend funds in New Mexico and Texas for drainage purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5949, the urgent deficiency bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5949, the urgent deficiency bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice in looking over the Senate amendments that a number of them provide substantive legislation. One in particular, found on page 45 of the first print of the Senate bill, changes the law in the way of compensation to the land-grant railroads.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the number of the amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. 49, found on page 47 of the bill as printed with Senate amendments numbered. That seeks to change the compensation of certain railroads for transportation of Government troops. I have not had time to examine the original acts to see what will be accomplished by that amendment. I do not think we should insert in an appropriation bill a change in existing law as to the compensation of railroads for transportation of troops.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, when the bill was under consideration I stated that the matter had been presented to the committee in the preparation of the bill. It applies to the Missouri Pacific subsidiary roads. The matter was of such importance that the committee did not believe that it should be dealt with in an appropriation bill and declined to take any action upon it. As one of the managers on the part of the House on this bill I would be unwilling to consent to an amendment involving such a radical change of policy without the assent of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the futility of demanding a separate vote in the closing days of the session on separate amendments, and I will leave it to the discretion and good judgment of the gentleman from New York and to his confères on the conference committee. There are many amendments that ought not to be included in the bill because they involve a change of substantive law. It seems to be the policy at the other end of the Capitol that whenever an appropriation bill involving a large amount comes under consideration, they incorporate some pet scheme of legislation, expecting it to go through, but I have so much confidence in the judgment of the gentleman from New York that I shall not ask for a separate vote on any of the various amendments.

Mr. CANNON. To what amendment does the gentleman refer?

Mr. STAFFORD. I directed the attention of the gentleman from New York to amendment No. 49, which seeks to change the compensation of the land-grant railroads.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that it was the matter presented to the committee by the solicitor of the Missouri Pacific Railroad.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in reference to that matter that I listened to that hearing, and it seems, if the statement of facts is right and the Missouri Pacific Railroad is correct, that there is a real equity in its position. I have not examined the amendment critically and do not know how far it goes, but it seems to me that if the facts as stated by the solicitor are true there was a real equity that would cause the House, after a full discussion and possession of the facts, to agree to some kind of legislation that would do substantial justice to the situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. SHERLEY, and Mr. GILLET.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MANSFIELD, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of important business.

BRIDGE OVER HEADWATERS OF MOBILE BAY.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. KEHOE] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2813, reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 2813. An act to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia whether this is the bill that provides for the building of a bridge across Mobile Bay?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think it is.

Mr. STAFFORD. About six years ago there was a bill introduced providing for the construction of a bridge across Mobile Bay, which was seriously considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and had some objectionable features in it.

Mr. ADAMSON. That involved some tremendous enterprise, but I do not think this is in any way connected with that. These are the headwaters of the bay.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give us an assurance that it does not relate to that matter, to which people down there were strenuously opposed?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is my understanding that there is no connection between them. I do not think there is any connection at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says he does not "think" there is.

Mr. ADAMSON. There may be some information that I am not in possession of, but we are generally very careful to ascertain the facts, and we have had no protests.

Mr. STAFFORD. Quite frequently in these cases no protests are received until the bills have been passed because local opposition was not called to the attention of Congress.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is in doubt about that, I suggest that he ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. KEHOE]. He can answer the question definitely. Our information is that there is no connection between the bridges.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. KEHOE] whether this bridge proposition has any connection with the bridge over the outer harbor of Mobile Bay, which was involved in a bridge proposition some years ago that was considered by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee?

Mr. KEHOE. My understanding is that it has not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the committee, said that it was his understanding. I wish to know just where this bridge is located, because when I was a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce we had under consideration a project granting some rights that would have obstructed the traffic on Mobile Bay. It was seriously opposed by some interests, because it was a railroad proposition. I want to have the assurance from some one that this in no way affects that outer harbor proposition. If the gentleman can not give me that assurance, I shall have to object.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I think I recall the bill the gentleman is speaking of. It was a bill introduced by the late Senator Johnson, of Alabama, in order to connect Mobile with an island in the bay. This has nothing to do with it. This is a bridge over the headwaters of the bay.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give that assurance? The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] said he thought it related to the headwaters.

Mr. DENT. I am sure that it has nothing to do with that. That was to connect Mobile with an island in the bay, and this is a bridge over the headwaters of the bay.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the assurance of the gentleman from Alabama, I have no further objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that the committee would not have failed to discover the identity if they had been identical.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge or bridges and trestles over and across the navigable channels of the mouth of Mobile River from Bay Port, in township 4 south, range 2 east, on the east shore of the waters of Mobile Bay, in Baldwin County, Ala., on a direct line, to a point on Blakely Island, in Mobile County, on the east shore of Mobile River, opposite the municipal docks of the city of Mobile, Ala., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters, approved March 23, 1906."

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, and repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, after the word "trestles," insert the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RESIGNATIONS FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resignations from a committee, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the joint committee to investigate the matter of rents in the Department of Agriculture.

Very truly, yours,

A. F. LEVER.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I tender my resignation as a member of the joint committee to investigate the matter of rents in the Department of Agriculture.

Respectfully,

GORDON LEE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these resignations are accepted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following gentlemen to take their places.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, Mr. JACOWAY.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER, COOK COUNTY, TEX.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2816, granting the consent of Congress to the Gainesville Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2816, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, is this a report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. JONES of Texas. This has been reported by that committee.

Mr. GILLET. By unanimous report?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Gainesville Red River Bridge Co., or its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River at Sacras Ferry, Cooke County, Tex., and Love County, Okla., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes in order to ask a question about the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I observed in listening to the reading of the bill that the bridge is to be erected on the site of a ferry. Ferries charge toll. Is this to be a toll bridge?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I can not give the gentleman the information, but I understand that it is to be.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Who is to regulate the tolls?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is regulated under the general bridge act by the Secretary of War.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand that all of these bridges are toll bridges.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is regulated in the general law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Some of them are not toll bridges. One was a terminal railroad bridge.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There have been two or three passed that are to be toll bridges.

Mr. GARNER. This is to be constructed under the general bridge act, and that provides for a regulation of tolls by the Secretary of War.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does this provide that it shall be a toll bridge?

Mr. GARNER. No; but it is authorized under the general bridge act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The bill was passed.

EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to file a conference report for printing in the Record on the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The conference report and statement of the House conferees were ordered to be printed in the Record under the rule.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules, to whom several resolutions of investigation were referred, have given careful consideration to those resolutions for the past two or three days.

We have received information that for the last year and a half, and at this time, the Department of Justice has been and is now conducting an investigation of the use of funds furnished by the German Government to affect sentiment in America. The Department of Justice is conducting an investigation in every quarter of this country where they have had information that money may have been used. In view of the information received from the Department of Justice that this investigation is going on, and in view of the fact that in the opinion of the Committee on Rules no possible good could come of an investigation by this House, and in view of the further opinion of the Committee on Rules that there has been no reflection on the House or any Member thereof, the committee has decided to take no action on the several resolutions at this time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POUL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is that the view of the entire committee? Is the gentleman representing the view of the entire committee?

Mr. POUL. I will say that I think that is practically the sense of the entire committee, but I will not say that positively. There may be some member of the committee who thinks an investigation should be had.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. BRITTEN rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. POUL. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the information in the Committee on Rules as to the investigation being conducted by the Department of Justice such as to lead to the belief that their investigation is preliminary to investigations by grand juries that will act if evidence is presented?

Mr. POUL. Absolutely. The Department of Justice already has felt constrained to order action somewhat premature in view of what has occurred in this Chamber.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. POUL. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. In view of the information which the Committee on Rules has been able to obtain, do they conclude that any investigation by the House at this time would retard the progress of the department's investigation, and prevent their purposes?

Mr. POUL. That is the opinion of the committee. And probably the committee can not get the information that would justify action without granting immunity to somebody who ought not to have immunity.

Mr. GILLET, Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, and Mr. BARNHART rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. POUL. I yield first to the gentleman from Indiana, as I think he was first on his feet.

Mr. GILLET. I have been on my feet for some time.

Mr. POUL. Then I will yield first to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, I notice the gentleman said that no charge had been made against the House or any Member of it.

Mr. POUL. I said that the committee concluded that there was no reflection on any Member of the House.

Mr. GILLET. I wondered if it did not seem to the committee that there was a charge against the House or Members of it when a Member of the House makes a speech whose fair and natural interpretation is that some Members of the House have had their opinions influenced by German money. It seems to me that was a fair interpretation.

Mr. POUL. I hope I may be permitted to answer the gentleman a minute without interruption.

Mr. GILLET. It seems to me that is a subject that ought to be brought up.

Mr. POUL. I am obliged to the gentleman for that question. We had our colleague, Mr. HEFLIN, before us, and he stated and reiterated that he did not intend to reflect upon the honesty or character of any one of his colleagues, and he did not believe he had done so; that when he used the word "suspicious" he meant to say that he had had suspicions of what he considered the loyalty of certain Members to the Government, and that was based upon resolutions that they had introduced, bills that they had introduced, and public statements that they had made. He specially disclaimed over and over again that he had reflected upon anybody, and stated that he did not know of anybody who had been corrupted, and that his entire use of the words "suspicious" or "suspicion" pertained to his own suspicions of what he considered loyalty to the Government, and that his opinion was based on what everybody knows.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. POUL. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Did the committee conclude that a suspicion of the loyalty of a Member of this House to his Government did not reflect upon his honesty?

Mr. POUL. Well, I am not going to undertake to raise that issue with the gentleman. At the suggestion of the members of the Rules Committee, I am endeavoring in an informal way to report our views, that we deem it inadvisable to go dipping into something where the Government hopes to lay the foundation to send certain people to the penitentiary. That is what I mean. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Is there anybody in the House likely to be sent. There is no suggestion that any Member of this body has done anything dishonorable.

Mr. GARNER. If I understood the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the Rules Committee, the principal reason why the Rules Committee declined to make an investigation at this time, or order an investigation, is because the Department of Justice is making an investigation along the same line that the committee would naturally have to make it, and that if you make an investigation you might give immunity to some one who ought to be prosecuted under the investigation being made by the Department of Justice.

Mr. POUL. Yes; and more than that; that we could not get the evidence that would justify us in coming to a sane conclusion, probably, without taking from under the Department of Justice certain props that it is now depending upon.

Mr. BRITTEN. Did the committee give consideration to a resolution calling for the immediate expulsion from Congress of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]?

Mr. POUL. No, sir; we did not have that before us.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think that is the sort of resolution that ought to be considered here and now.

Mr. POUL. That is for the gentleman and the House to decide, Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. POUL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] first, as he was on his feet.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina if the action of the committee is based in part upon the request of the Department of Justice that no action be taken at this time?

Mr. POUL. I will say to the gentleman that it is not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Now, another question. Is it a fact that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE] stated before your committee yesterday that he had conferred with the Secretary of State, with the Solicitor for the State Department, and with certain gentlemen connected with the Department of Justice, and that those gentlemen stated that they saw absolutely no objection to this resolution being reported and an investigation being had by the House?

Mr. POUL. Mr. DOOLITTLE so stated, and I may say the same statement was made to myself and to another gentleman, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, that they would have no objection to the House ordering this investigation, but what I am stating to the House is what was drawn out by questions addressed by Mr. CAMPBELL and myself to these officials.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. And no objection to the investigation was by any official—

Mr. POUL. As officials of the United States Government they had no objection to Congress taking any action it might see fit to take in respect to the resolutions.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. POU. I do.

Mr. STEENERSON. The result of the deliberations of the Committee on Rules seems to be that the Secretary of State after having published correspondence between a foreign ambassador and his Government, which reflected upon Congress, concludes that although that reflection was given widespread publicity by one department of the Government, the other department of the Government, the Department of Justice, absolutely desires to give no publicity to it; that is, that what one department publishes to the world must be kept secret for the grand jury by the Department of Justice. This seems to me to leave Congress in rather an embarrassing position.

Mr. POU. The report of the Secretary of State does not reflect upon the House of Representatives, and I want to say to the House here and now that this $50,000, that is spoken about, is not a drop in the bucket to what is going to be uncovered before the Department of Justice is done. It is not reflecting on any Member of the House. Nobody suggests that any Member has been corrupted, but the ramifications of this fund that has been used by the German Government through its agents affects every great center of this Nation, and it would be the utmost un wisdom for us to go into a great investigation of this kind. We could accomplish very little probably and might do harm.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gravamen here is as to whether the House is prepared to purge itself of charges made against Members not named. Let me quote to the gentleman what appeared in the resolution referred to his committee, what is quoted here being from the stenographic report of the speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], as quoted by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. He quoted the official stenographer as having reported the words spoken by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], as follows:

If I were permitted to express my opinion, I could name 13 or 14 in the two bodies who, in my judgment, have acted in a suspicious manner.

That means both the Senate and the House—

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the German Government carries out that part of his suggestion. Now, then, Count von Bernstorff said he was proceeding—to do what? To use that $50,000. For what purpose? To influence the Congress of the United States. Now, then, has that been done? Where was that money spent? Whose pocket did it reach? I must admit that the conduct of some that I know has been suspicious.

Now, with all respect to the gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on Rules, and with all respect to the gentleman from Alabama, who is quoted last Monday on the floor of the House as having made this statement, is not the question before the House which the Committee on Rules should have presented not that there is a dispute as between the Department of Justice and Congress but that there is a dispute between Congress and one of its Members who has accused his fellow Members? [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Well, I can only say—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time—

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from North Carolina be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. In response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say, of course we all know that in the heat of debate here men get worked up on this floor. [Cries of "Ah!"]

That is all right. When I am trying to make a sincere report, authorized by both sides of the Committee on Rules, it is not fair to treat me with any such response as that. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. If there is any more applause in the galleries the Chair will have the galleries cleared without any more ceremony at all. The occupants of the galleries are guests of this House, and they have to behave themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that so far as the investigation is concerned, if you want that investigation, gentlemen, the Rules Committee is ready to give it to you. We are the agents of the House, but in view of the facts we had before us and the information we received we would have been less than men, we would have been recreant to our duty if we did not act upon what we believed was our best judgment. Now, in response to what the gentleman said, I will say that the gentleman from Alabama, in response to questions iterated and reiterated, that when he used the word "suspicious" he was not intending to reflect upon the honesty of any man, and he did not do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. POU. All right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. During the course of the discussion on Monday there was the question whether Members of this House were under suspicion of frequenting a certain mysterious German gambling house and were there being corrupted by German money. Did the Committee on Rules ask the gentleman from Alabama whether he made that statement?

Mr. POU. The committee did, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] expressly denied he had made any such statement; that he had never suggested that any Member of Congress had ever frequented such a place; and that he knew nothing of the existence of any such place.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the committee take up with the gentleman from Alabama that other charge attributed to him—that this alleged $50,000 of German money reached the pockets of Members of Congress?

Mr. POU. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] expressly denied that he had ever conveyed that information to anyone or made such a charge anywhere.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask one more question in fairness to the gentleman from Alabama as well as to the gentleman from North Carolina? The newspapers yesterday reported that, in substance, the gentleman from Alabama had, before the Committee on Rules, reiterated the charges of which he was accused here on the floor of the House. Were the newspaper reports accurate, or did the gentleman from Alabama make sufficient denial to the Committee on Rules to satisfy the Committee on Rules that he had not reflected upon any Member of the House?

Mr. POU. He most certainly did, or else the committee would not be justified in making this report in this informal way, through the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and myself. I want to say to the gentleman—

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Were any newspaper reporters called to verify the statements they had made?

Mr. POU. I will answer that in a minute. All statements that were made before the Rules Committee yesterday are to be printed as soon as possible in the form of a hearing, and I venture the assertion now that if any gentleman will read the entire hearing that was had before the Rules Committee yesterday he will say that it would be absurd to order an investigation upon any such statement. We are not supposed to investigate Mr. HEFLIN's opinion of the loyalty of Members here based upon what they did, and that is what the thing resolves itself into.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Admitting that, does that remove the stigma that has been placed upon every Member of this House by the reports that have gone broadcast over the country, due to the statements of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]?

Mr. POU. I deny there has been any such stigma as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have newspaper reporters been called before the committee to deny these charges?

Mr. POU. The Committee on Rules did not consider it proper to raise an issue about an anonymous rumor, and that is all it was, between the gentleman from Alabama and the newspapers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The reporters who made these statements are in the Capitol, I am informed, and willing to be called.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Did the gentleman from Alabama object to any investigation?

Mr. POU. He most certainly did not.

Mr. GALLIVAN. He wanted one?

Mr. POU. He wanted the German "slush fund," as it is called, investigated.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from Alabama can answer for himself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is out of order.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman if I understood him rightly when he said that the Department of Justice did not object to an investigation?

Mr. POU. I said that.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Then I want to ask the gentleman if he said to the House that an investigation by the Committee on Rules would take away from the Department of Justice certain props which it had relied upon in the investigation that it was making?

Mr. POU. I said that if we made an effective investigation and uncovered anything that that might be the effect of it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Then I want to ask the gentleman if it were possible to take away from the Department of Justice these props, why would not the Department of Justice make an absolute statement opposing any investigation?

Mr. POU. The gentleman can understand that a coordinate branch of the Government is not going to express an opinion about another coordinate branch of the Government in respect to our action on resolutions of the nature and purpose of those before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has made certain statements concerning this House, according to the newspapers. Is the committee prepared to report to the House whether the gentleman from Alabama or the newspapers are responsible for the statement that appeared in their columns and accredited to him?

Mr. POU. Of course the committee is not going to undertake to settle a question of that kind.

Mr. LITTLE. Then, as far as the committee knows, the gentleman from Alabama did make the statement?

Mr. POU. All the committee knows is that the gentleman from Alabama told us that he did not make the statement attributed to him in the newspapers and that he knew nothing about any place of the kind suggested in the papers.

Mr. LITTLE. I will ask the gentleman from North Carolina, if he is not prepared to say to the House whether the gentleman from Alabama made the statement or not, does he not think we had better go on and take the evidence of the newspaper reporters as to whether the gentleman from Alabama made the statement or not?

Mr. POU. In other words, to try an issue between what the gentleman is supposed to have said in the House and what he is supposed to have said outside. I answer, no. I do not think that is the business of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. LITTLE. I think that is the committee's duty.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HULBERT. I want to ask a question, if the gentleman will yield for that purpose. As a result of the hearing you had and the talks you had with the Secretary of State and the representatives of the Department of Justice, are the members of your committee satisfied that an investigation such as that called for would be a greater hindrance to the objective of the Department of Justice than the good that would come out of it?

Mr. POU. Most emphatically. That opinion is also held by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who will make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I rise to ask unanimous consent to say something in reply.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] should be recognized to make that request first.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Kansas any request to make?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would like to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman ask for?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. About five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, two propositions were submitted in the resolution referred to the Committee on Rules: First, an investigation of statements that were made or alleged to have been made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] reflecting upon the membership of the House of Representatives; second, the charge that the former German ambassador, while accredited to this Government, asked his Government for the use of $50,000, to be used to influence Congress.

These are two separate propositions. The first raises a privileged question that does not need reference to the Committee on Rules or an investigation by that or any other committee. It raises a privileged question that is cognizable by this House at any time that any Member sees fit to present a proper resolution raising that privileged question.

The second question is now being investigated, as stated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], by the Department of Justice throughout the entire country. The Department of Justice is making a more thorough investigation than any committee of this House could make into that question. They have already gone much further than any committee of this House could get in the next three months if it were continually in session, calling witnesses.

It came to the knowledge of the members of the committee that there are certain witnesses now patiently awaiting an opportunity to appear before a committee of this House so that they may testify and secure immunity from prosecution. It was stated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] that the grand juries in some instances have hastened their proceedings in order to secure action before a committee of this House could take any action which might prejudice the activities of the Department of Justice.

It is asked if the Department of Justice objected to an investigation by the House. Why, no. The Department of Justice, with a proper sense of the proprieties of the separate departments of this Government, would not under any circumstances object to the House of Representatives taking any action that it saw fit to take. But the facts are admitted and are known to the Committee on Rules, and the membership of that committee feel a sense of responsibility to the Government—to the entire Government in all its activities at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do.

Mr. BUTLER. Might not this House investigate the first proposition, as stated very clearly by the gentleman from Kansas, without in any way jeopardizing the proceedings that are being conducted by the Department of Justice upon the second proposition?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On the first proposition, I have stated that an investigation was not necessary at all. Any Member of the House can draw a resolution that is privileged and of the highest privilege and offer it. It does not need an investigation. Any Member of the House can draw a resolution raising any question that could be reported by a committee appointed under the direction of the Committee on Rules or in any other way. The parliamentary situation is such that an investigation is not necessary on the first proposition, to wit, the statements of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman may have an additional five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Committee on Rules hereafter make a formal report upon these two propositions?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not authorized by the committee to say. The Committee on Rules this morning decided to take no further action upon these resolutions now.

Mr. BUTLER. Again, Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman to say that it is within the privilege of any Member of this House to secure an investigation.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not an investigation.

Mr. BUTLER. To ascertain the facts?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not to ascertain the facts. The facts were stated upon the floor of the House. They are in the RECORD. They need no investigation. Action can be taken on a privileged resolution offered upon the floor of the House at any moment.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, now the gentleman is better acquainted with procedure than I am. Will he suggest what sort of a resolution can be offered in order to bring that to a head? How are we to find the facts? And I ask the gentleman not for the purpose of teasing him but of having information from a man who is well acquainted with the proceedings of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There will be no trouble in finding a precedent for action, and in finding rules under which the House can act.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do.

Mr. BRITTEN. Would a resolution calling upon the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] to produce the proofs of his various assertions inside and outside of the House of Congress, or calling for his expulsion, be referred to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not necessarily.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is that the kind of a resolution that the gentleman has in mind that might be introduced as one of the highest personal privilege?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. A question relating to the membership in this House relates to the highest privilege.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. A resolution either of censure or of expulsion introduced by any Member of the House, because of the language used by a Member on the floor of the House, would be privileged at any time, and would be referred properly to the Committee on Rules, would it not?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all. It need not be referred to the Committee on Rules. Action could be taken on it on the floor of the House without reference to any committee.

Mr. TOWNER. Very true. I want to ask the gentleman a question on the other proposition. The information derived by your committee from the Department of Justice was that they had taken already recognition of the fact that the German ambassador had apprised the country of the fact that he desired that money for the purpose of influencing Congress, and for that reason, and with that knowledge, they intended to make an investigation as to the truth of that statement. Is that correct?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The information the committee has is this, that for more than a year and a half the Department of Justice have been inquiring into the activities of the German Government in the United States affecting public sentiment, and that activity upon the part of the Government is being accelerated from day to day, and is more active to-day than it ever has been before, and more effective. The Government is getting results, securing indictments, and is now proceeding, as I say, more effectively than it has at any time. And as a lawyer, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] well knows that if a man under suspicion should appear before an investigating committee of this Congress and give testimony, he might secure for himself immunity from prosecution.

Mr. TOWNER. I realize that, and I want to say to the gentleman that I think the House would like to know, though, whether or not the Department of Justice would institute an inquiry as to whether or not this fund was obtained and as to whether or not it was used for the purpose of influencing Congress and as to whether or not it was used in such a way as to corrupt Members of Congress. Those are pertinent inquiries, and the House would like to know.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The scope of the inquiry being made by the Department of Justice covers all those phases of the question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker—

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Come down in front.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I was much interested in the speech of the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POW], in referring to the statement of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], he said, in substance, "We all know, of course, that in the heat of debate remarks are made here that ordinarily we would not expect to be made on this floor." That statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POW] received applause.

"Heat of debate!" What was the subject then before the House? Let me direct the attention of the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina to the subject that so heated up the gentleman from Alabama. It was a Senate bill for which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] had asked consideration, a bill to authorize exploration for and disposition of potassium. [Laughter.] Now, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] during the five-minute debate on that bill—I was not here when he made the speech, but I will ask my distinguished friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who was here, if that did not occur during the five-minute debate on that bill?

Mr. MONDELL. It did; and, of course, was out of order during the five-minute debate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; and therefore not only was there nothing to heat up the explosive gentleman from Alabama [laughter], but his statement was out of order. He violated every rule of parliamentary law, long recognized on this floor [applause], and he did it deliberately, just as deliberately as Mr. Lansing published that news at that time to affect public sentiment and, by a terrorizing of expression on this floor, to prevent just criticism and honest statement of fact, and cause Members to fear that if they should make such criticism or statement of fact they will be called recipients of German money.

If there is a man I detest more than any other, it is one who, either on this floor or elsewhere, will slander another and then attempt, or have somebody else attempt, to prevent an honest investigation of his slander. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, while they were discussing potassium—that most exciting subject [laughter]—the usually suave gentleman from Alabama arose and suddenly becoming, as George Ade would say, "all het up," proceeded to speak in violation of the rules governing debate. Let me read what he said. I quote from the Record of September 21:

Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the bill reported by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. It will be the means of furnishing more potash to our farmers, and I am glad to see that there is no serious opposition to it.

He was strongly in favor of fertilizer for a few minutes. [Laughter.] But suddenly the gentleman, with a reputation not only for patriotism but for valor and courage which runs back several years in this town, said:

I rise to address the House briefly upon the contents of a telegram sent from Washington to Germany by Count von Bernstorff in January of this year and published in the Washington papers this afternoon.

I read from page 7306 of the Record—this, by the way, Mr. Speaker, differs slightly from the text inserted in the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORNEY] as being the accurate record of the stenographic report of the statement of the gentleman from Alabama; but I read from the Record:

Now, then—

Said the gentleman from Alabama—

Von Bernstorff said he wanted to use $50,000 more. For what purpose, Mr. Speaker? Why, to influence the Congress of the United States, he said. Now, then, what was done in that regard? Where was that money spent? I must admit that the conduct of some that I know has been suspicious, and an investigation ought to be had.

That is what the gentleman said on this floor.

The gentleman denies that he said what appeared in the Washington Post report of an interview with him. But the newspaper reporters declare that he did say it, and they are prepared to go on the stand and testify under oath that he said it. [Applause.]

The gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, said that we can not expect a coordinate department of the Government absolutely to oppose action by Congress. But can we not? Why, recently a proposition passed the Senate and came over here, which had many friends, and would have passed the House if the House had been let alone—a proposition that a joint committee should be appointed having a majority of its members Democrats, to keep track of the contracts through which hundreds of millions of money are now being expended under the direction of such gentlemen as Mr. Scott, chairman of one of these advisory committees, who advised the making of a contract which, among other things, gives the contractor 10 per cent on his investment, and who, when the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] asked him if he gave the advice, said yes; but when asked, "What is the amount of the contractor's investment?" replied "I do not know." "Is it one million or eighteen millions of dollars?" "I do not know, but I know what they ought to have invested to do that work." And the gentleman from Mississippi told the House that the contractors are going to make from 28 to 46 per cent on the contract about which this gentleman gave advice. And yet when the provision for a joint committee, which had passed the Senate by a very substantial majority, came before the House, a coordinate department of the Government did not hesitate to write a letter and say that it did not want the provision passed.

Other similar things have happened. Members, respectively, of the Parliaments of France, of England, and of Italy perfected an organization and invited the Congress to appoint delegates to come to Europe and consult with them over there near the scene of action. They sent a French official here to extend the invitation. He made a most effective address from the Speaker's rostrum.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object; this has no relation to the matter being discussed.

FIXING THE PRICE OF FOOD.

Mr. STEENERSON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. STEENERSON. I rise to move to discharge the Committee on Agriculture from the consideration of House resolution 144, making a request for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent—

Mr. STEENERSON. No; Mr. Speaker, it is a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. How does it become privileged?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is a resolution of inquiry referred to the Committee on Agriculture more than seven days ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let us have the resolution reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 144.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the House of Representatives the following information:

First. Whether, pursuant to section 11 of the act approved August 10, 1917, which reads in part as follows:

"SEC. 11. That the President is authorized, from time to time, to purchase, to store, to provide storage facilities for, and to sell for cash at reasonable prices, wheat, flour, meal, beans, and potatoes: Provided, That if any minimum price shall have been theretofore fixed, pursuant to section 14 of this act, then the price paid for any such articles so purchased shall not be less than such minimum price," and the order of the President, dated August 30, 1917, which reads in part as follows: "Section 11 of the food act provides, among other things, for the purchase and sale of wheat and flour by the Government, and appropriate money for the purpose. The purchase of wheat and flour for our allies, and to a considerable degree for neutral countries also, has been placed under the control of the food administration. I have appointed a committee to determine a fair price to be paid in Government purchases. The price now recommended by that committee—$2.20 per bushel at Chicago for the basic grade—will be rigidly adhered to by the food administration," the President and the United States Food Administration, appointed and authorized by him, have assumed, and now assume to and do fix the price of wheat at Minneapolis, Duluth, and Chicago, and other markets, to be paid by private purchasers, as well as the price to be paid by the Government on its purchases.

Second. Whether or not the operations of the United States Food Administration has fixed a maximum price for all wheat sales of the 1917 crop in the markets of Minneapolis and Duluth, and restrained private purchasers from paying a higher price than that fixed under said act and order for purchases by the Government.

Third. Whether or not the United States Food Administration and the United States Food Administration Grain Corporation (a private corporation), in attempting to control the price of wheat between private purchasers, and in establishing a fixed price, claims exemption from the antitrust laws of the United States, and the constitution and laws of the State of Minnesota against trusts and monopolized markets; and if so, upon what is that claim based.

Fourth. Whether or not the prices for wheat fixed in said order refer and relate to prices free on board cars in the respective markets in harmony with the universal custom and practice in the grain trade.

Fifth. Whether the United States Food Administration, after fixing a price for wheat at Minneapolis and Duluth of 3 cents per bushel below the Chicago price, has established a rule and practice of deducting therefrom a commission contrary to the terms of said order.

Sixth. What authority exists, or is claimed to exist, for deducting from the price paid to the seller of wheat a commission of 1 or 2 cents per bushel below the price fixed by said order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the resolution has progressed far enough to show that it is clearly not a privileged resolution.

Mr. STEENERSON. The Clerk has read all but the last three lines.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The last three clauses read, Mr. Speaker, calls for an opinion, and under the rules it can not be a privileged resolution, and I make the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The point of order is that the resolution calls for an expression of opinion. The latter part of section 3 especially, and also section 5. It would necessarily involve on the part of the Executive that he should respond to it an expression of opinion by him, and therefore is not privileged under the rule. A resolution which asks for a fact is privileged under the rule.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that principle.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A resolution which asks or even directly would involve in the complete answer to it an expression of opinion upon the part of the President or any of the executive heads is not privileged or one which would require an investigation.

The SPEAKER. There is no dispute about the principle involved, and the question is whether this does it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on page 2 of the resolution, at the bottom, it says:

Third. Whether or not the United States Food Administrator and the United States Food Administration Grain Corporation (a private corporation), in attempting to control the price of wheat between private purchasers, and in establishing a fixed price, claims exemption from the antitrust laws of the United States and the constitution and laws of the State of Minnesota against trusts and monopolized markets; and if so, upon what is that claim based?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me clear that the gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken in his contention. There is no dispute about the rule. The Speaker of the House in ruling on the resolution filed by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] on the facts in possession of the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to the depression in the price of certain bonds, the Speaker elaborately discussed this matter.

The third provision which has been called to the attention of the Chair by the gentleman from Tennessee simply asks what the food administration claims, and if they make that claim, upon what the claim is based. That is all there is in that third proposition. This calls for a fact. The question whether or not the food administration claims to be exempt from trust laws, and upon what the claim is based is a matter entirely within the possession of the food administration and does not call for an opinion at all. It may be that they are exempt. It may be that that is justified by the food-administration law. We are simply asking them if they make the claim, and if so, upon what the claim is based. That is as much asking for a fact from the department as the resolution to which I refer was. That resolution required of the Secretary of the Treasury "what facts in his possession on which he based the charge recently made by him, the recent decline in the price of United States 2 per cent bonds is due almost wholly to what appears to be a campaign waged with every indication of concerted action on the part of a number of New York City banks," and so forth. This decision of the Speaker is found on pages 380 and 381, Book of Rules:

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The practice in regard to a resolution of this kind is this, that it is in order if it calls for facts only or information only. It does not make any difference which one of the two words is used. But it is out of order if it calls for an opinion or an investigation. If part of the resolution is bad, it is all bad.

Now, let us see where we are. This resolution has two propositions in it. The first reads:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the facts in his possession on which he based the charge recently made by him that the recent decline in the price of United States 2 per cent bonds is due 'almost wholly to what appears to be a campaign waged with every indication of concerted action on the part of a number of influential New York City banks to cause apprehension and uneasiness about these bonds in order to help them in their efforts to defeat the currency bill.'"

That is proposition No. 1. Proposition No. 2 is as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is also hereby directed to inform the House as to the facts on which he based his statements, as follows: 'That nothing has occurred to impair the value of the 2 per cent bonds, but the amendment already adopted by the Banking and Currency Committee of the House enhances their intrinsic value,' together with a copy of the amendment thus referred to by him."

The Chair has absolutely nothing to do with the motives which prompt people in offering resolutions. It is purely a technical matter, simply that and nothing more. The question is, Does this resolution conform to the practice of the House as asking for facts and not asking for an opinion? It may be true that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was doing exactly what sundry gentlemen have charged him with doing, namely, fishing for an opinion under the guise of asking for facts. That may be true. It probably is. But the Chair has nothing to do with that. Whoever drew that resolution, if he had that idea in mind, was a very skillful artist.

The precedent which has been called to the attention of the Chair (Hinds' Precedents, vol. 3, sec. 1873) that on January 18, 1906, Mr. Oscar W. Gillespie, of Texas, claimed the floor for a privileged motion in order to move to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from further consideration of the following resolution, which had been referred to that committee more than a week previously.

That resolution divided itself into two parts, the first and longer part asking expressly for an opinion. The latter and shorter part of it was: "And the said Attorney General is also requested to report to this House all the facts upon which he bases his conclusion."

Now, Speaker CANNON held, practically, that the latter and shorter clause would have been in order if it had been presented by itself, but that the first and longer proposition was not in order, because it called for an opinion, and he was clearly right in so ruling; and because that part of the resolution was not in order it vitiated the whole thing.

It may be that the Secretary of the Treasury used the language quoted here. The Chair does not know, and it is none of his business to inquire. The Secretary may not have had any facts whatever as to the second proposition. The Chair does not pronounce an opinion whether he had or had not any facts on which to base the statement.

"That nothing has occurred to impair the value of the 2 per cent bonds, but the amendment already adopted by the Banking and Currency Committee of the House enhances their intrinsic value."

The Chair does not agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the Secretary of the Treasury always speaks as Secretary of the Treasury, or that the President can not speak in any other way except as President of the United States, or that none of us can express a private opinion. But if the Chair undertook to make up his own mind about the question whether the Secretary of the Treasury had facts on which to base an opinion, on every occasion, he would have to go on an exploring expedition to find out what the Secretary or anybody else was talking about.

On its face this resolution simply inquires for facts and nothing else, and the Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama.

All that the Chair is required to pass on is this: Is this resolution in proper form and language in the light of the rules, practices, and precedents of the House? The Chair thinks it is, because on its face it simply calls for facts—merely that and nothing more—therefore the Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

I submit that as long as that decision stands as the law of the House my resolution must be held to be privileged. I know that the Speaker is familiar with that decision; he rendered it himself. It is not necessary to comment at length upon it, but I would say that when I drew this resolution I examined that decision and all the decisions in Hinds' Precedents, and I drew this resolution with the express purpose of putting in there a request for facts in possession of the food administration. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] simply jumped at a conclusion without having seen or read the resolution and he makes the bald assertion that this calls for an opinion. I submit to the Speaker that all the facts this resolution asks for are within the possession of the food administration, and it does not ask for opinion. The third subdivision of the resolution inquires as to whether or not they make a claim to be exempt from the antitrust laws and upon what that claim is based. That is asking for a fact.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How about the sixth subdivision, which clearly calls for the expression of an opinion and not facts?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a matter of opinion whether any authority exists or is claimed to exist for deducting from the price paid to the seller of wheat a commission of 1 or 2 cents a bushel below the price fixed by said order.

Mr. STEENERSON. I shall proceed to discuss that. I was answering the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee as to subdivision third is overruled.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am making the point of order as to the whole proposition. Anything in the resolution that is nonprivileged would destroy the privileged character of the entire resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I discussed only section 3, because I had that before me at the time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman wants to discuss any other subdivision, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I make the point of order upon the whole proposition that it is not privileged.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the third proposition and submit that to inquire whether the food administration or the President claims certain things is the same as asking whether the President is of a certain opinion. The President can not state as a fact that a certain thing is exempt from the operation of the constitution and laws of the State of Minnesota. All the President could do would be to express an opinion as to whether in the administration of this law the administrators are exempt from the operation of the constitution and laws of that State or of any local or municipal laws. The gentleman asks that the President state as a fact what could never be determined as a fact but what must be determined as a question of law. In addition to that, the sixth paragraph unquestionably asks for the expression of an opinion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To permit me to also draw the attention of the Chair to the seventh paragraph, which reads as follows:

Seventh. What facts or data are in possession of the President or the food administration justifying making the wheat raisers bear all the loss by controlled markets when the producers of corn, rye, oats, barley, and other cereals have the benefits of competitive markets.

Would that call for anything on earth except an opinion?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Chair that the point of order is made against the resolution upon two grounds: First, that it calls for a conclusion or for an opinion, and, second, that it would call for an investigation. That would apply to the entire resolution, so the Speaker must go to the entire body of the resolution and not section 3 alone.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was passing upon what was presented to him.

Mr. GARNER. But the gentleman from Tennessee made the point of order against the resolution and discussed only the third subdivision. The Chair must go to the entire resolution itself.

The SPEAKER. There is no dispute about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, upon the third paragraph, which might be presented in a simple resolution, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to a very important matter. These resolutions must call for facts which apparently are in the possession of the official called upon to state the facts, and if it appears that they can not be in the possession of the official or would require inquiry or investigation, then the privilege of the resolution falls. In this third paragraph the President is called upon to state whether the United States food administration and the United States Food Administration Grain Corporation, designated in the resolution to be a private corporation, in attempting to control the price of wheat claims exemption from the antitrust laws of the United States and the constitution and laws of the State of Minnesota against trusts and monopolized markets. It is apparent that the President can not have in his possession, without inquiry, facts as to whether a private corporation is contending that it is exempt from the operation of certain Federal statutes or the constitution and laws of some State. I wish to direct the attention of the Speaker to that provision so that a hasty opinion will not embarrass in the future, if the gentleman should submit that as a separate resolution. Under the repeated determinations of the House the privilege applies only to resolutions which call upon an official, the head of a department, or the President for information which he must have in his possession, facts which he must have in his possession, and if it calls for the expression of an opinion or for facts which he can ascertain only by inquiry there is no privilege attaching to the resolution. To ask the President whether a private corporation in attempting to control the price of wheat, to fix the price of wheat, claims or contends that it is exempt from the operation of laws can not call on the President for anything except the expression of an opinion as to what he believes this private corporation is contending, or if it should happen to call for facts it must be facts which are inherently in his possession and not facts which can only be ascertained from inquiry from outside sources. I submit that paragraph 3 of the resolution clearly contravenes the rule and is not privileged.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that I understood the Speaker, in response to the point of order on paragraph 3 made by the gentleman from Tennessee, overruled the point, I will again discuss this matter in response to the gentleman from New York, who is such a high authority on parliamentary practice and procedure. This point which was made last about the United States Food Administration Grain Corporation not being part of the food administration is rather far-fetched. The food-administration law itself authorized the President and those appointed by him to organize this food-administration company, and I think that Congress, like courts, can take judicial notice of the fact that this corporation was organized pursuant to an act of Congress and was simply one of the instrumentalities provided for by Congress and therefore it is used by the food administration as one of its instruments. We are not absolutely blind, deaf, and dumb because we are a separate body from the executive branch. We authorized this food administration and they have employed their men; they have provided and have used them in an unexpected way. Now, the gentleman from New York evidently agrees that we could ask the President or the food administration what it is they claim. Certainly, no reasonable man ought to argue that we could not ask the executive branch of the Government whether it claimed a certain thing, and that such a question does not call for a fact. Whether a claim is made is a question of fact.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is asking the President whether a private corporation claims something; that is not calling for a fact within the possession of the President.

Mr. STEENERSON. Then the President had, as we all know, full information as to the food administration?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I doubt that.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Hoover, of the food administration, has organized this corporation pursuant to an act of Congress. We authorized that; that is an instrument we gave him, and he is operating through that. Everybody knows that except the gentleman from New York, who, for a parliamentary purpose, is blind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am glad that the information that I have is not like that which the gentleman from Minnesota seems to pride himself upon being possessed of.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is a very witty remark, but that is beside the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And more than that—

Mr. STEENERSON. I decline to yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). It is accurate and true and something I take some pride in.

Mr. STEENERSON. I decline to yield. I do not desire to have a personal controversy with the gentleman from New York, and I submit again that the ruling of the Chair a moment ago was based upon common sense and was not upon a finespun theory of the gentleman from New York. Here is the paragraph of the resolution that asks the President and the food administration and the food administration company if they claim a certain thing, if they claim to be exempt from the anti-trust law, and if so, upon what that claim rests. That is a proper question and is within the information of the department. It calls for facts, not for opinion. Some years ago I recall that a question arose as to whether or not the United States could import merchandise without paying duty for the Panama Canal, and it was explained here that although the general law forbade everybody from importing anything without paying duty, it did not, of course, apply to the Government itself. Now, it may be that the claim of the department is that this food administration corporation, organized by Mr. Hoover, by the food-administration act and expressly authorized, claims that they are not amenable to these laws, and if so we want to know whether that claim is made and upon what it rests. That is all there is in section 3. This is information the people of the United States are entitled to. If the Government itself, which is supposed to abide by the law, which makes the other people abide by it, claims exemption from those laws, they know it, and the people ought to know. We ought to know if everybody must obey the law except the Government, because they are exempt from obedience to the law. That is all we want to know, and it is a proper question to ask. Now, I want to say one word in regard to this whole resolution which those gentlemen who are so quick on the trigger when it comes to parliamentary practice have not noticed. The first part of it simply describes the act, section 11, saying that the House of Representatives wants to know whether, pursuant to section 11 of the act of a certain date, which reads in part as follows, and the order of the President of a certain date, which reads in part as follows, that is all descriptive matter, describing the act and the President's order. It is nothing except describing what we refer to, and then comes after the quotation as you will see on page 2 when the act of Congress is described and the order of the President is described we must refer back to the question whether the president of the United States food department, appointed or authorized by him, has assumed, and now assumes to, and does fix the price of wheat at Minneapolis, Duluth, and Chicago, and other markets, to be paid by private purchasers as well as the price to be paid by the Government on its purchases. That is the first question, and then comes 2, 3, and 4. Now, whether or not the Government is assuming to fix the price of wheat between private purchasers is a question of fact that they know and can answer. The second inquiry is, whether they are enforcing the maximum price for all wheat sales of the 1917 crop in the markets of Minneapolis and Duluth and restrained private purchasers from paying a higher price than that fixed under said act. They know whether they have been and can answer it. Then whether they claim that to be the maximum. They know that and can answer it. Then comes the fourth and fifth, sixth and seventh, and, as I said before, those gentlemen simply jumped at a conclusion, because this is a long resolution, that it must violate the well-known and well-established rule that you must not ask for an opinion.

I had before me when I drew this resolution the decision of the Speaker as contained in Book of Rules, and I expressly followed it, as I supposed; and I believe they can not point out that I have not written it so as to properly call for information and facts that the administrative branch of the Government has. I can see no reason why anybody should object to it. Why are not the American people entitled to the information sought by this resolution? [Applause.] It is not opinion. It is information as to whether or not they have done these things, and they claim in doing so that they are exempt from the laws of the country. We are entitled to know it, and I submit the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the Speaker's attention to subdivision 4 of this resolution, which reads:

Whether or not the prices for wheat fixed in said order refer and relate to prices free on board cars in the respective markets in harmony with the universal practice and custom in the grain trade.

Now, the President would be supposed to make an investigation to determine what the universal custom and practice in the grain trade is, and that in itself makes it a nonprivileged resolution.

Mr. STEENERSON. In reply to that, I will say that there is no dispute about this. Everybody knows, and nobody knows to the contrary, every commercial journal, every grain-trade journal, and everybody, including the food administration, knows that when you refer to the price of wheat at Chicago or Minneapolis you refer to the price of wheat free on board cars. And in spite of that the food administration says that they deduct 2 per cent, which is 2½ per cent commission below the price fixed by the President, giving the middleman more than twice as much commission and rakeoff as he had before. That is the result in Minneapolis, unless it has been corrected very recently. [Applause.] There is no opinion asked for. It is an undisputed fact that when you refer to the price in any wheat market you refer to the price free on board cars, without any deduction. And we are merely asking whether or not the President in his order did not refer to the price free on board cars in these markets. Therefore a reduction of the commission from the price to be paid by Government purchasers, of course, is contrary to the order. It seems to me, of course, that point also is entirely without merit.

I call attention to the order of the President and report of the price the committee referred to in the resolution. It is as follows:

[Food Administration, Public Information Division. For information and files of all papers. No. 177. Aug. 31, 1917.]

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 30, 1917.

Section 11 of the food act provides, among other things, for the purchase and sale of wheat and flour by the Government and appropriates money for the purpose. The purchase of wheat and flour for our allies, and to a considerable degree for neutral countries, also, has been placed under the control of the food administration. I have appointed a committee to determine a fair price to be paid in Government purchases. The price now recommended by that committee, $2.20 per bushel at Chicago for the basic grade, will be rigidly adhered to by the food administration.

It is the hope and expectation of the food administration, and my own also, that this step will at once stabilize and keep within moderate bounds the price of wheat for all transactions throughout the present crop year and in consequence the prices of flour and bread, also. The food act has given large powers for the control of storage and exchange operations, and these powers will be fully exercised. An inevitable consequence will be that financial dealings can not follow their usual course. Whatever the advantages and disadvantages of the ordinary machinery of trade, it can not function well under such disturbed and abnormal conditions as now exist. In its place the food administration now fixes for its purchases a fair price, as recommended unanimously by a committee, representative of all interests and all sections, and believes that thereby it will eliminate speculation, make possible the conduct of every operation in the full light of day, maintain the publicly stated price for all, and, through economies made possible by stabilization and control, better the position of consumers, also.

Mr. Hoover, at his express wish, has taken no part in the deliberations of the committee on whose recommendation I determine the Government's fair price, nor has he in any way intimated an opinion regarding that price.

WOODROW WILSON.

The report of the committee follows:

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, August 30, 1917.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

The undersigned committee has been asked by you to recommend the price which the Government should pay for the 1917 crop of wheat.

In its deliberations the committee has kept constantly in mind the three following factors:

First. The fact that the United States is at war.

Second. The need of encouraging the producer.

Third. The necessity of reducing the cost of living to the consumer.

The normal laws of supply and demand have been violently interfered with, and Congress has undertaken to offset this disturbance by conferring extraordinary powers upon the President to stabilize prices. Each of the foregoing factors grows out of conditions which have received the careful attention of the committee. Chief among them are that the wheat yield in a great and important section of the country has this year been below the normal; that over against this situation is the crying need among the whole body of the population, especially the wage earners, that the rising tide of costs shall be stayed and reduced as rapidly as possible consistent with the welfare of the producer; that the Government is at the present time engaged in the great task of reducing and stabilizing costs of other staple commodities; that the wheat of the world is abundant for its needs, even disregarding the stores in Russia, but because of lack of shipping and war conditions the burden of supplying wheat to the allies and to neutral nations rests for the time being upon the United States and Canada.

Your committee has also considered the fact that the Government price for the 1917 wheat crop is in effect a continuing guaranty until the minimum price guaranteed by Congress for the crop of 1918 goes into effect (July 1, 1918). It has considered the relation of the 1918 minimum-price guaranty to the price here recommended. It has also considered the effect which an early termination of the war would have upon the wheat markets of the world.

In reaching its conclusion the committee has been guided by the principles you have announced, that a fair price should be based upon the cost of production for the entire country plus a reasonable profit. We have relied upon the cost estimates for the crop of 1917 furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture, checked by the results of our independent investigations and the evidence submitted to the committee by producers and their representatives.

The committee has considered the regulations recently established by the United States Food Administration Grain Corporation for the different grades of the wheat through which all transactions in wheat are to be standardized and speculation to be entirely eliminated. Also that profits to the grain dealer, miller, and flour dealer have been regulated and reduced by the Grain Corporation, effecting a material reduction in the cost of flour.

In consideration of the foregoing facts and circumstances, this committee respectfully recommends that the price on No. 1 northern spring wheat, or its equivalent, at Chicago be $2.20 per bushel.

Respectfully submitted.

You will notice that the committee report, among other things, says:

Your committee has also considered the fact that the Government price for the 1917 wheat crop is in effect a continuing guaranty until the minimum price guaranteed by Congress for the crop of 1918 goes into effect, July 1, 1918.

Nothing in the whole report indicates that they proposed to fix a maximum price, not only for Government purchases but for private sales. The law does not contemplate that. The power to buy, store, and sell might be so used as to result in that, but that is not what has been done. What has been done is to enter into a combination and arrangement with dealers, millers, and grain men to depress the price of wheat in all markets to that fixed on Government purchases. It is, in fact, a combination between the Government agents and grain buyers and dealers, in consideration of which the latter are given double commission to refrain from competing in price. If this had been done before the food act was passed, no one would question that it would have been a combination in restraint of trade. If it is legal now, we ought to be advised of the reason why. During the debate on the food-control bill it was not claimed that it would confer this power. If it is contained in the law, it is not very clear on what provision it rests. Reports from Minneapolis are that wheat does not come to market in sufficient quantity to satisfy the demand. Even local mills have been compelled to stop grinding. On September 24 the papers report 436 cars arrived in Minneapolis, as against 1,033 cars on the corresponding day last year. Here is an extract from the Minneapolis Journal of September 24:

PRICE DIFFERENCES DISREGARDED.

Frank L. Carey, because of advices that Federal grading of grain was causing some farmers to hold back grain, to-day had an order posted on the floor of the chamber of commerce directing that existing price differences on lower grades, as established in the order of the price-fixing committee, headed by Harry A. Garfield, be disregarded.

Griffith Morris, Harry Stadden, and A. F. Owens, the committee that has been making relative placing of the lower grades not fixed as to price, to-day were including No. 4 and No. 5 wheat and mixed wheat in their gradings.

The change, which will operate from now on, will mean that if a sample of milling wheat that has been graded No. 4 or lower, because of the presence in it of foreign matter, is found to have intrinsic milling quality, the fixed difference of 10 cents under No. 1 Northern, as in the case of No. 4, will be disregarded and the wheat graded on merit.

END OF COMPLAINTS SOUGHT.

It is expected that this will eliminate largely complaints, loosen up wheat of the No. 4 grade, which farmers have been holding back.

The President in his order said that the prices recommended by the committee "will be rigidly adhered to by the food administration," but according to this newspaper report the local agents have found it necessary to change them. The result will be that the low grades of wheat will enjoy competition in price up to the price of the higher grades. The justification of this may be that the man who has a poor crop of wheat is burdened enough by this misfortune, but the skillful and efficient farmer, who produces the best wheat, must be penalized by the fixing of an arbitrary price lower than his product would command in a free market.

Will this tend to produce a large crop in the future? If it has any effect it would seem to be in the opposite direction.

Whatever the action to-day on this resolution may be, I hope that the majority in control of this House will eventually require the executive branch of the Government to furnish the information asked for in this resolution.

The SPEAKER. This resolution asks for three or four opinions and three or four investigations. So the point of order against it is sustained.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DRANE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the day, on account of important business.

BRIDGE LEGISLATION.

The SPEAKER. There are two or three little bridge bills that the Chair desires to dispose of before the House begins on other business.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. As soon as we get through with these little bridge bills I will submit the gentleman's request.

BRIDGE ACROSS FOX RIVER, ELGIN, ILL.

Mr. COPLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the bill (S. 2823) from the Speaker's table and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2823, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2823) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Elgin, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River at Elgin.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of Elgin, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Fox River from the westerly end of Kimball Street to the easterly end of Lawrence Avenue, in the city of Elgin, in the county of Kane, in the State of Illinois, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COPLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, AITKIN COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5839, a bridge bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5839) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, in Aitkin County, Logan Township, State of Minnesota.

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge, authorized by act of Congress approved September 5, 1916, to be built across the Mississippi River at its intersection with the division line between sections 26 and 27, township 49 north, range 25 west, fourth principal meridian, in the county of Aitkin, Logan Township, in the State of Minnesota, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date hereof.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "time" and insert in lieu thereof the word "times."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
